The Priſoner being arraigned, his Counſel objected, that the Time and Place were not aſcertained in every Overt-Act that was laid in the Indictment: The Time and Place, when and where they met and diſcourſed of the Ways and Means to kill the King, indeed, were mentioned; but when they came to the Aſſenſerunt, Conſenſerunt, and Agreaverunt, which were other Acts, they had neither aſcertained Time or Place; and they inſiſted that the Court ought not to permit them to give Evidence, therefore, of this Part of the Indictment, which was vicious —— The Chief Juſtice anſwered, The Indictment ſaid, They met ſuch a Day at St. Paul's Covent-Garden, and conſulted to kill the King, and conſented and agreed that it ſhould be done in this Manner, which muſt refer both to the Time and Place mentioned in the Beginning of the Indictment, and they might give Evidence of it; becauſe that this was but a ſetting forth the Manner agreed upon for the Execution of the Deſign which was before conſulted of: And if it had been omitted, there would have been a ſufficient Overt-Act alledged to prove the compaſſing the King's Death: For if People meet at ſuch a Time and Place, and propoſe Means to effect this, the Indictment would be good without laying the particular Means agreed on; and they might give this in Evidence, as a Proof of that Overt-Act.

anſwered by the Court.

The Evidence of Harris.

Then the Witneſſes were called, and firſt Mr. Harris was ſworn, who teſtified, That he was ſent from France by King James, and ordered to obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, who ſubſiſted him in London, giving him five Shillings a Day before he had a Horſe, and ſix Shillings a Day after he furniſhed him with a Horſe: That he ſaw the Priſoner, Major Lowick, at a Confectioner's over-againſt Gray's-Inn in Holbourn (where Sir George Barclay and Mr. Counter lodged), on the firſt Saturday the Aſſaſſination was intended: That before the following Saturday he met Mr. Lowick in Red-Lyon-Fields, and diſcourſed with him of the Aſſaſſination, obſerving, how barbarous a thing it was that they ſhould be ſent over to be Murderers of the Prince of Orange; and the Major anſwered, It was ſo; but, in Concluſion, ſaid, he would obey Orders, and was ſure Sir George Barclay would not do it without Orders: And, as they were talking, they met Sir George Barclay, and Mr. Holmes, on Horſeback, and ſpoke to them: That afterwards Mr. Lowick told this Witneſs, the Thing was diſcovered, and that his Name and other Gentlemen's were given in, as one Harriſon informed him, and adviſed him not to lie in his Lodgings; and believed it would not be ſafe for the reſt to lie in their Lodgings.

That Mr. Lowick ſeeing him in a Sweat on Saturday the 22d of February, and demanding the Reaſon of it, the Witneſs told him, He had been getting Capt. Rookwood's Party ready; and Lowick anſwered, You may very well do it, for you have ſix Shillings a Day, and I have nothing, and yet brought a couple of Men at my own Charge; and their Horſes cannot be diſcharged unleſs I go. It being asked, Why they were to be diſcharged that Day? Harris ſaid, Becauſe Capt. Rookwood had told Lowick, the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day.

1696. 8 W. 3.

Bertham's Evidence.

Then Mr. Bertham was ſworn, and teſtified, That about the Beginning of February laſt, Major Lowick asked him, if he would eſpouſe any thing that might be for his Advantage? and he anſwered, He thought he might eſpouſe any thing the Major thought fit to engage in; and the Major bid him ask no more Queſtions. That on the 14th of February, the Major deſired him to be at his Lodgings, and told him, when he came, he believed they ſhould ride out in a little Time: He believed the King was to be ſeized in his Coach; and then gave him a Guinea to buy Neceſſaries: That the Major deſired him not to be out of the Way, but to meet him the next Morning at the Purl-houſe in Hart-ſtreet; but he did not meet him; and the next Time he ſaw the Major, he asked him, why he did not meet him according to his Appointment? and ſaid he believed, if the King had been in the Field, he would have done the ſame.

It being demanded, if he was not told the Deſign? Bertham anſwered, The Major did not tell him of any other Deſign than he had mentioned, for he believed he knew of it; the Witneſs thought ſo at leaſt. Being asked, If this Money was given him in Charity, he anſwered, The Major had given him Money ſeveral Times; and the Reaſon he believed was, that they were both Natives of one Town, and nearly related.

One of the Jurymen asked Bertham, If he underſtood what the Major meant by riding out ſuddenly? he anſwered, He believed, it was about ſeizing and killing the King (which he underſtood was deſigned by Mr. Charnock); and he did not think it lawful, and therefore he did not meet the Major.

The Major demanding, if Bertham ever knew him guilty of any bloody thing? Bertham anſwered, He had known him theſe 20 Years, and he had always the Character of a good Man, and was ready to ſerve any one in Neceſſity: That he was bred a Soldier, had ſerved King James in Ireland, and ſaved the Lives of many a Priſoner the Enemy took there, as the Priſoners themſelves told this Witneſs.

Fiſher's Evidence.

Capt. Fiſher being ſworn as a Witneſs, teſtified nothing that could affect the Priſoner, only that he met him on the 8th of February, and he ſaid he ſhould be ready to ſerve his Maſter, King James, to the utmoſt of his Power; and that there was an Act of Parliament on Foot, that nothing ſhould affect a Man's Life, in Treaſon, that was not proved by two Witneſſes; and therefore nothing treaſonable ought to be diſcourſed before more than one at a Time.

Then Sir Bartholomew Shower ſummed up the Evidence, and made his Obſervations on it for the Priſoner.

Sir

1696. 8 W. III.

His Defence by Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Sir B. Shower. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the Prisoner at the Bar, and we do hope have it in our Power to convict him of High-Treason. The Question is not, whether there was a Plot or a Conspiracy to assassinate the King, or to prepare for an Invasion; but all that you are to consider Gentlemen, is, whether the Evidence against Mr. Lowick be sufficient to convince you, that he did design to seize and assassinate the King: There are three Witnesses produced, but we think this last Witness Fisher, his Testimony does not hurt him in the least. We know your Lordship will declare, and direct the Jury, that the Evidences in a Case of Treason ought to be plain, not only with Respect to the Fact that it was done; but also of such Facts as are the Evidence of a Man's Intentions, and these are not to be construed by Strains, and Intendments, or Implications; Unless they be such as evidently, naturally, and to common Understanding, express the Intention, it cannot be good Evidence in Treason. Now, we say, that Captain Fisher has said nothing at all that will affect the Prisoner; for all that he says, is, that on the eighth of February, he said he was ready to serve his Master to the utmost of his Power; and any Words, as well as these, may be construed to make a Man guilty of Treasonable Intentions; For it might be a Recollection of Favours received, or it might be a grateful Intent to serve him upon particular Occasions; but that is no Evidence upon this Indictment; Suppose it was to serve him upon the supposed intended Invasion; yet, with Submission, that is not Evidence of the Overt-Act laid here; here is no Overt-Act mentioned, of preparing Arms, or encouraging Men, or seducing the King's Subjects, in order to the better restoring of the late King James, or the expected Landing of the French, or the like. All that is laid to the Prisoner's Charge, is the compassing the King's Death, and a Design to assassinate him in his Coach, and in order to the Assassination he was to buy Arms and Horses: Now all that he says is quite of another Nature, of a quite different Strain, and has no Tendency to this Matter; and nothing he says, that Lowick should say, but is applicable the other Way, and tends more naturally to the Invasion, than to the Assassination. Your Lordship observes, there was some Notice taken of what Lowick should say concerning the Act of Parliament, That he would not talk with above one at a Time: How far, when Life is concerned, such loose Discourse ought to be inforced before a Jury, I must leave to your Lordship; though a Man may be innocent, yet he may be cautious, and the more innocent, perhaps the more cautious; but that is applicable to the Invasion too, and has no Relation to the Treason in this Indictment more than any other: It shews he was more wary than others were, but it is not applicable to the Fact that he now stands charged with. Then the Whole of the Evidence depends upon the Testimony of Mr. Harris and Mr. Bertram; and we think they are not two Witnesses to one Thing; and what they say must be strained, and intended, and presumed, to make Evidence of Treason. For what Mr. Harris says about the Discourses between him and the late King

1696. 8 W. III.

James, about receiving Orders from Sir George [illegible] and his Passage over from France, and the several Stages he, and Mr. Hare travelled, and the Discourses between Sir George Barclay and him; your Lordship will acquit the Jury. That is no Evidence to affect Mr. Lowick, nor what Berkenhead and Hare agreed upon, does any Way affect Mr. Lowick; for those may be all true, and yet Mr. Lowick innocent of what he stands charged with in this Indictment. He says, that upon the first Saturday he saw Mr. Lowick at the Confectioners; but he cannot say he staid there at all, there was not a Word spoken by Mr. Lowick that he remembers then: But what he says that seems to much, and the only Thing that touches Mr. Lowick in all this Evidence, is, That upon Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday, it is a pretty large Time between the fifteenth and the twenty-second, he was talking with Mr. Lowick about the Barbarity of this Business; and that Mr. Lowick after all said, he would obey Orders. Now, with Submission, my Lord, to make that to have Relation to the Assassination, must be by a forced strained Intendment; he does not declare what the Orders were, nay, he does not affirm there were any Orders for the Assassination, but only that he would obey Orders: Here is no Order by Writing, no Order by Parole, that Mr. Lowick declared he would obey: As to what Lowick declared about his Intention of riding out and seizing the King in his Coach; that cannot be intended the Order that he was to obey, to assassinate the King; that Order does not appear, there are no Footsteps of it in all the Evidence; so that there is nothing in that Testimony that will hurt Mr. Lowick. Then upon the twenty-second, when they dined together, Mr. Harris says, That there was a Discourse of two Men; but it does not appear, nor does the Witness give any Account, what those two Men were to be for: It is true, two Men he was to get discharged; but that is not Evidence that these Men were to make a Part of those forty; neither the Words before, nor the Words after, can have that Construction; nay, it does not appear it was for any Purpose at all. Now, in the Case of Life, where a Man stands at the Bar, we hope such an Evidence shall not be construed to make a Proof of a Treasonable Intention, that these were to assassinate the King, or to make Part of the Forty that were to do it, when it does not appear they were there, nor who they were, nor any Sort of Notice taken or given, upon what Account they were provided. And then, as to Mr. Bertram's Evidence, it is palpable, that his Evidence, and whatsoever he says, cannot amount to make one Witness to prove an Overt-Act within this Statute, and that there must be two Witnesses, the Law requires: What does Mr. Bertram say, to prove any Man guilty of Treason, but only by Intendment, Thought, or Suspicion? It is true, Mr. Bertram's Evidence would be good enough to commit a Man upon Suspicion of Treason; but to convict him it cannot be: He says, that in the Beginning of February he spoke to him, and told him, he would imploy him in a Business that would be for his Advantage; but he must ask no Questions: This is very dark, for the Meaning of it does not appear what was intended by it; it might be one

1696. 8 W. III.

Thing as well as another; it might be to imploy him in his Family, or it might be to send him of a Journey, or it might be the taking of a Farm; but to apply that as an Evidence of a Charge of High-Treason, that we think is very hard, and we hope your Lordship will think so too: But then he comes and tells you further of a Discourse upon the fourteenth, of his riding out suddenly, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach; but he does not say, that he was to seize him, nor that he would be concerned in it; nor that he knew of it, nor did declare at what Time it was to be done, nor any Thing certain, whether it was a Prophecy, or a Dream, or a Story, that he related again, or what it was; there is no Connection between the riding out suddenly, and the other Words, of seizing the King in his Coach: Then he says he gave him a Guinea to buy him Necessaries; the Man acknowledges Mr. Lowick several Times had given him in Charity, Money, Clothes, and other Things, and gave his Wife a Guinea, as you observe, in Charity; but he gave him this Guinea on Purpose to buy him Necessaries; and, it is hard, that a Man's Charity to a Countryman, to a Townsman, to an antient Acquaintance of twenty Years standing, to a Person that he had been familiar with formerly, and known to have lived well, should be misinterpreted and strained, to make it a giving him Money, as a Subsistence and a Reward for doing such a mischievous bloody Act: We say, his Charity to this Man formerly, is inconsistent with the Supposition that he could be privy to such a barbarous Design now; and we hope the Jury will consider the Character that very Man has given to my Client; for the same Witness gives you an Account of his Behaviour all along; that he was not given to rash and barbarous Actions, nor guilty of any malicious Thing; nay, that he prevented Mischief, and the killing of People in cold Blood. We must leave it to the Jury's Consideration, and your Lordship's Direction. All these Things that they say may be true, and Lowick be not guilty; and the acquitting Mr. Lowick will be no Reflection upon the Witnesses, nor any Discredit to the Testimony that has been given of this Conspiracy; but we hope it is doing Justice to this Man, the Witnesses not coming up to the Proof of what is laid in the Indictment. We must beg your Lordship's Patience a little longer, and call some Witnesses to give you an Account how long they have known Mr. Lowick, and what his real Character is: They will tell you, that he is a peaceable Man, and shew you that his Temper and Inclination was rather to a quiet sober Life, than to lead him to such an Action, and that they cannot think him likely to be tempted to be concerned in such a Design; and then we must leave it to the Jury.

The Prisoner's Witnesses.

Then the Prisoner called some Witnesses, who declared, That he was an honest, good-natured, virtuous Man, free from Passion and Malice: And the Prisoner made the most solemn Protestations of his Innocence: After which Mr. Attorney-General made his Observations on the Evidence for the King.

Mr. Attorney's Observations on the Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I must beg Leave to answer to the Objection that the Counsel for the Prisoner have made, That there are not two Witnesses to prove the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and so the Law is not satisfied. In Answer to that, I desire your Lordship's Favour, to observe how the Evidence is; and then we shall see, whether there are not plainly two positive Witnesses of the Overt-Act, by agreeing to assassinate the King. The first Witness is Mr. Harris: Your Lordship observes that Mr. Harris gives you an Account, that Mr. Lowick was at Sir George Barclay's Lodgings, the first Day it was to have been executed; and that afterwards, between the fifteenth and the twenty-second, those being the first and second Days that this was to be done, when he, and Rookwood, and the Prisoner Lowick, were walking together in Red-Lion-Fields; and there had some Discourse about the intended Assassination, and the Barbarity and Bloodiness of it, and Mr. Harris and Mr. Rookwood were averse to it. Mr. Lowick said, he would obey Orders; and he was sure Sir George Barclay would not do it, unless he had direct Orders for it; that was twice repeated by him, as Harris swears: And afterwards Mr. Harris tells you, that the two and twentieth he dined with Mr. Lowick; and Mr. Lowick observed, that Mr. Harris came in in a very great Sweat, and asked him, How it happened? He said, he had been about to get ready Rookwood's Party, that were to seize the King; for he was to have one Party: Says Mr. Lowick to him, You need not grudge to do it, you have six Shillings a Day; I have nothing, and yet I, at my own Charge, am to provide two. This is as positive Evidence, as well can be, of his being privy to the Design; and his ingaging People at his own Charge, shows a great deal of Forwardness and Zeal in the Prisoner in the Business. My Lord, I think this is positive and plain Evidence, and not only made out by Inferences and Constructions, as Sir Bartholomew Shower says, but plain positive Proof. The first Day he was with several of them, and when they discoursed of the Thing afterwards, he declared he would obey Orders; and what could those Orders be, but for what they were discoursing of? and nothing was discoursed of but this Design they were engaged in, and this was to justify the Thing, and take off the Apprehension of the Barbarity of it: This is Harris's Testimony. The next Witness is Bertram, and he tells you, That the 5th of February the Prisoner sent for him, and when he came to him, he asked, If he would ingage in a Business that might be for his Advantage, and ask no Questions? so at that Time he did not acquaint him what the Thing was; but that shews it was a Thing that was to be kept secret at that Time, in regard he did not think fit to acquaint him at the first Instance. But the 14th of February, when he met him again, the Day before the first Time that it was to be put in Execution; Bertram swears he told him, that they were to ride out the next Morning, that must be Lowick and Bertram, for there was no Body else there; and that the Prince of Orange was to be seized in his Coach: Was it possible the Prisoner could be ignorant of it? When he ingaged him to go upon a Design without asking Questions; sent for him the Day before, acquainted him they were to ride out the next Morning, and that the King was to be seized 1696. 8 W. III. ed in his Coach, and bid him be ready against next Morning, and gave him a Guinea at that Time; The Witness says it was for Necessaries; but he does not pretend it was for Charity, as formerly; and that must be for Necessaries for that Purpose that they were then discoursing of; when he desired him to be ready the next Day, and gives him Money to buy him Necessaries: What can that be, but Necessaries for what he was to be ready for? And then he did not come the next Day, and he tells you why, because he thought it a very wicked and unlawful Thing, and so he disappointed him; and the next Time Lowick chid him, and told him he would have served him so, if the King had been in the Field. This is plain, though I believe Bertram does speak as tenderly as he can, being his Friend and old Acquaintance, and is willing to say as little as he can of him; so that, I believe, no body thinks but what Bertram says against the Prisoner is true, and what he swears is plain and positive, to shew that Lowick did engage in the Design: He acquainted him with it the 14th, by telling him the King was to be seized, and they were to ride out, and he was to be ready the next Day.

The Chief Justice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Justice, in summing up the Evidence, observed, That two Witnesses were not necessary to every Overt-Act; but one Witness to one, and another to another Overt-Act was sufficient: That they ought not, indeed, to put any forced and violent Construction upon Words in Cases of Life: But if the Evidence was plain and clear, though the Prisoner did not say, in express Words, he designed to assassinate his Majesty; yet if upon the whole of the Discourse, that passed between Bertram and the Prisoner, it appeared plainly and satisfactorily to them, that he did consent and agree to this Design, or was engaged in it; then Bertram was another Witness to prove him guilty besides Harris, which was as much as the Law required.

The Prisoner convicted.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after half an Hour's Recess brought in the Prisoner GUILTY.

Lowick, Rookwood, and Cranburn condemned and executed.

After which Cranburn and Rookwood were set to the Bar with Lowick, and having nothing to offer in Arrest of Judgment, more than they had insisted on before, Sentence of High-Treason was passed upon them, and they were all three executed at Tyburn, on Wednesday the 29th of April, 1696. when Lowick and Rookwood left the following Papers with the Sheriffs.

Indicted by a wrong Name.

THIS is no more than an Arraignment and Confession. The Prisoner had been indicted before, as a Conspirator in the Assassination Plot, together with Rookwood, Cranburn, and Lowick, by the Name of Christopher; but his Name appearing to be Alexander, he was not tried upon that Indictment.

Indicted a second Time.

He was now arraigned on another Indictment, on the 30th of April, by his right Name of Alexander, and pleaded Not Guilty; but being brought to his Trial on the 20th of May, he retracted that Plea, and pleady Guilty: Whereupon the Attorney-General moved his Confession might be recorded, and that the Court would pass Judgment on him; but the Chief Justice answered, they could not give Judgment then, because there ought to be four Days from the Time of the Confession or Verdict, to move in Arrest of Judgment, if there be so many Days in the Term remaining; Indeed in Staley's Case, who was tried for the Popish Plot, Judgment was given the same Day; but that was a Precedent that ought not to be followed, for a Prisoner ought to have four Juridical Days to move in Arrest of Judgment, where he is tried in the Court of King's-Bench; and accordingly Knightley was sent back to Newgate, and being brought into Court again on Monday the 25th of May, being the last Day of the Term, Sentence was pronounced on him as a Traitor, and he was executed at Tyburn.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the Prisoner with compassing the Death of the King, and adhering to his Enemies; and the Overt-Acts laid as Evidence of the said Treasons were, his meeting and consulting with Robert Charnock, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, and other false Traitors, how to raise a Rebellion; and sending over the said Charnock to France, to the late King James, to perswade the French King to furnish him with a Body of his Forces to invade the Kingdom; and that the Prisoner did buy up Horses and Arms in order to promote the said Rebellion and Invasion.

So many of the Pannel challenged, that there was not a Jury left.

The Prisoner was brought to the Bar on Saturday the eighth of May, when he was arraigned, and pleaded Not guilty: And the Jurors being called to be sworn, there were so many challenged, that there did not remain enough to try him; whereupon the Court ordered another Pannel to be ready on the Wednesday following; and then adjourned to that Day.

Mr. Cook being brought into Court again, on Wednesday the thirteenth of May, his Counsel objected, That the Court could not direct a new Pannel; but that they should have ordered a Tales to supply the Deficiency of the first Pannel; and that the Prisoner ought to be tried by the first Pannel, according to the late Act: But the Court answered, A Tales did not lie in the Felony, upon a Commission of Oyer and Terminer; and that where there was a Defect of Jurors, there was an absolute Necessity for a new Pannel.

Exceptions of the Counsel to the new Pannel, answered by the Court.

But it was admitted, That upon Appeals and Indictments removed into the King's-Bench, where the Process for the Jury was by Writs of Venire, &c. there must be a Tales awarded, if a full Jury did not appear.

The Witnesses examined apart.

The Evidence of Porter.

The Jurors being called to the Book, in Order to be sworn, Mr. Cook desired the Opinion of the Court, If a Juryman had said he was guilty, or that he would find him guilty, or that the Prisoner would be hanged, or the like; whether such a one was fit to be upon the Jury? To which the Chief Justice answered, He thought it was a good Cause of Challenge.

Causes of Challenge.

Then

1696. 8 W. III.

Then Mr. Walker being called as a Juryman, Mr. Cook demanded, If he had not ſaid he believed him guilty?

Mr. Attorney hereupon obſerved, If he made any ſuch Objection, he muſt prove it by others, and not out of the Juryman's Mouth, becauſe it would make him guilty of a Miſdemeanor.

The Lord Chief Juſtice Treby ſaid, A Juryman need not anſwer any Queſtion, where the Anſwer would ſubject him to Reproach. And he thought it a ſcandalous Behaviour, if not criminal, to prejudge any one before he was tried; and this was to ask a Juryman, if he had not defamed or ſlandered him in the higheſt Degree.

Mr. Serjeant Darnel anſwered, Nothing was more common, when one heard a Fact reported of any one, than to ſay he thought him guilty, and he would be hanged; and there was no Crime in this: To which the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt replied, If upon a Report of clear Evidence, a Man ſhould ſay, Suppoſing this to be true, ſuch a Man is guilty, and I ſhould find him ſo, if I were of his Jury: This was not criminal, nor was it ſufficient to ſet aſide a Juror; for it imported, if the Evidence ſhould not be true and clear, he would acquit him: But for one to declare poſitively, a Priſoner was guilty, and he would find him ſo, let the Evidence be what it will; This he thought was a Miſdemeanor, and puniſhable. Another of the Judges admitted, that, in a Civil Caſe, it would be a good Cauſe of Challenge, if a Man gave his Opinion about a Right one Way or other; and ſo might be asked the Queſtion upon a Voir dire; but he could not be obliged to charge himſelf with what was criminal: And the Court ruling, that ſuch Queſtions ought not to be asked; the Priſoner challenged Mr. Walker peremptorily.

Then the Priſoner challenged ſeveral more, becauſe they had not ten Pounds per Annum Freehold; which the Court admitted to be a good Cauſe of Challenge: (An Act having lately paſſed, That Jurors ſhould have ten Pounds a Year Freehold). Whereupon Mr. Attorney moved, that the Jurors might anſwer upon Oath, whether they had reſpectively ten Pounds a Year Freehold, or not; and they were examined accordingly, and a great many of them ſet aſide for Want of Freeholds of that Value; and the Priſoner objecting, That thoſe who were upon the Grand Jury, and found the Bill, could not be upon the Petit Jury. The Court admitted this alſo to be a good Cauſe of Challenge; and that the Jurors ought to anſwer, whether they had ſerved on the Grand Jury, or not: The Priſoner having challenged his full Number of thirty-five peremptorily, beſides thoſe that were challenged for Cauſe, at length twelve unexceptionable Men were ſworn.

The Witneſſes examined apart.

Then Mr. Cook deſired that the Witneſſes might be examined apart, which the Court indulged him; but ſaid, He could not demand this of Right.

The Evidence of Porter.

Mr. Porter then was called, as a Witneſs for the King, and teſtified, That the Conſpirators had two Meetings laſt Year; the firſt in the Beginning of May, at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-Street; where were preſent Lord Ayleſbury, Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock, the Witneſs, and the Priſoner; and Goodman came in after Dinner. Here they conſulted on the beſt Way to reſtore King James; and it was at length agreed to ſend over Mr. Charnock to King James, to put him upon borrowing of the French King 10000 Men, to make a Deſcent in England; and to promiſe King James, that they would join the French Troops with 2000 Horſe upon their Landing: And that when Mr. Charnock demanded of them ſeverally, whether he might aſſure the King of this; he remembered Mr. Cook was kneeling upon a Chair, and anſwered, Yes, you may.

That Mr. Charnock deſiring another Meeting at Mrs. Mountjoy's eight or ten Days after, moſt of the ſame Company met there again, and particularly the Priſoner; and they aſſured Captain Charnock, that they perſiſted in their former Reſolution: That Mr. Charnock afterwards came to ſee this Witneſs in Newgate, and told him he had been in France: That King James thanked them for the kind Offer; but the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men that Year: Adding, That he had communicated this Anſwer to the Lord Ayleſbury, and the reſt of the Gentlemen that ſent him over.

Goodman's Evidence.

Then Mr. Goodman was ſworn, who depoſed, That he was at that Meeting of the Conſpirators, at the King's-Head, mentioned by Mr Porter; but did not come in till after Dinner: When they agreed to ſend over Mr. Charnock to King James, to deſire he would procure 10000 Men of the French King, to make a Deſcent in England; and to aſſure him they would join him at their Landing with 2000 Horſe at leaſt: And when Mr. Charnock demanded of them reſpectively, if they might aſſure King James this was their Reſolution: Mr. Cook kneeling upon a Chair, and laying his Elbows on the Table, anſwered, Yes, you may. That he ſaw Mr. Charnock after he came back; and he ſaid, He had been with the ſeveral Gentlemen that ſent him, with Compliments from King James; but the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men at that Time.

Mr. Cook demanding of Goodman, If he ever heard him ſpeak ten Words, or was ever in his Company: Goodman anſwered, Yes, he was in his Company, at the Cock in Bow-Street, where he came in accidentally; and that he expreſſed his Conſent at the aboveſaid Conſultation, in the Manner he had related.

Evidence to Goodman's Credit produced by the Priſoner.

Then the Priſoner's Counſel produced a Record; whereby it appeared, That Goodman was convicted of hiring one Alexander Amadei to poiſon the Dukes of Grafton and Northumberland; and was adjudged to pay a Fine of 1000 Pounds, and to be committed to the Marſhalſea till paid; to give Security for his good Behaviour during Life; and alſo Security for the Peace, and particularly towards the ſaid two noble Dukes.

Then Edwards was called as a Witneſs for the Priſoner, and teſtified, That he was confined in Newgate with Goodman; and that Goodman told him, He and Porter were to be Witneſſes againſt Cook: That Cook had ſworn againſt him (Goodman); but could not have his Pardon, becauſe he would diſcover no body elſe: Adding, He or I muſt ſuffer; but it is a fooliſh Thing to be hanged: All that is ſaid of a Man, is, That he hanged handſomely, or died bravely.

1696. 8 W. III.

Other Evidence in Behalf of the Prisoner.

Mr. Cock, the Landlord of the King's-Head, deposed, That about a Twelvemonth before, there dined at his House, the Lord Aylesbury, Lord Montgomery, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Captain Charnock, Captain Porter, and Mr. Cook: That my Lord Aylesbury and Lord Montgomery went away about four o'Clock, and the rest of the Company at eight or nine: That Goodman was not there, he believed, at all; for he never saw him till this Trial: But he could swear that Goodman was not there before the two Lords went away. And Mr. Attorney demanding, Why he was not as sure Goodman was not there at all, as that he was not there before the Lord Aylesbury went away? Cock answered, He was in the Room half a Dozen Times after Dinner, and there were no more in the Room than dined there when Lord Aylesbury went away.

It being demanded, If he knew the Persons that dined at his House? Or if they used to meet there? He answered, Sir John Freind commonly came once a Week; Mr. Charnock he knew, when he was a Drawer, and Sir William Perkins; and the rest he knew by hearing their Names only. Being asked again, How he could be positive who was in the Room, when the Lord Aylesbury came out? Cock answered, He went up into the Room, just after Lord Aylesbury went away, and he had been there just before; he believed he was in the Room half a Dozen Times after Dinner, and there were no more than what dined there.

Crawford, one of Cock's Drawers, deposed, That he remembered that Company's dining there about a Twelvemonth before the Trial: That he did not see Mr. Goodman there at all; but was sure he was not there till the two Lords went away, which was about four o'Clock; and the rest of the Company staid till it was dark.

Huntley, another Drawer, testified, That he attended only on that Company: And that neither Goodman, or any one else, came into that Company after Dinner; nor had he ever seen Goodman in his Life till now: And that there were no Orders given for their being in private, but the Drawers went backwards and forwards as usual.

Peachy testified, That Mr. Cook never absconded, but went Abroad, and received Company, after the Plot was discovered; and was taken in his own Room at his Father's House, on a Sunday Morning; which Evidence was confirmed by two more: And other Witnesses gave the Prisoner a great Character for his Piety and Virtue.

The King's Counsel endeavour to support the Credit of their Witnesses.

Then the King's Counsel called Mr. Porter and Mr. De la Rue, who testified, That Edwards, one of the Prisoner's Witnesses, was to have been an Actor in the intended Assassination. Goodman also was called again, to confront Mr. Cock, the Master of the King's-Head Tavern: And testified, That he was introduced into that Company by Mr. Porter: That it was true, the Lords Aylesbury and Montgomery went away first; but as to what Cock said, That he did not know him (Goodman), he had dined at his House four or five Times with Sir John Freind; and one of the Days, not being well, he went down to the Bar for a little Brandy, and Cock gave him some, telling him, it was the best he ever tasted; and the Witness would have bought a Quantity of it; but Cock told him, he had but little of it: And he was sure Cock had seen him five or six Times. Cock however persisted in that Part of his Evidence, That he never saw Goodman before, and remembered nothing of the Circumstances he mentioned. 1696. 8 W. III.

Then it was demanded of Porter, If Goodman came into the Company at the King's-Head before the Lord Aylesbury went away? To which Porter answered, He did; and he remembred Goodman bowed, and took his Leave of my Lord, as he went out of Doors.

It being demanded, If he remembred the Manner of Goodman's coming in? Porter answered, Goodman sent up his Name; and he (Porter) told the Company who he was, assured them he was an honest Man, and much ingaged in King James's Interest; and then with their Consent, he went down, and brought him up. The Court demanding, How long Goodman was there before the Lord Aylesbury went away, if it was half an Hour? Porter answered, It was near two Hours; for Goodman came in about four, and the Lords did not go away till near six; they discoursed the whole Business after Goodman came into the Room.

Then Sir Bartholomew Shower summed up the Evidence, and made his Observations on it for the Prisoner.

The Prisoner's Defence by Sir B. Shower.

Sir B. Shower. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counsel in this Case for the Prisoner at the Bar; and I must beg your Lordship's Patience, and your Favour, Gentlemen, to make a few Observations upon the Evidence that has been given: For we humbly insist upon it in Point of Law, that here is not sufficient Evidence before you to convict the Prisoner. You are, Gentlemen, to have Respect and Regard to your Consciences, and the Oaths which you have now taken to give a Verdict, and make true Deliverance between the King and the Prisoner: You are not to go according to your own private Opinions, nor according to publick Fame, nor according to common Report, nor according to the Verdicts in other Cases, nor according to the Confessions or dying Speeches of Criminals who have been executed, whether made by themselves or by others for them, but you are to go by the Testimony of credible Witnesses; and if you have not the Evidence of two credible Witnesses before you, my Lords the Judges will inform you how the Law stands. That by the Statute of Edward VI. and the new Statute for Trials of Treasons, there must be two Witnesses to prove the Prisoner guilty of the Overt-Act of the Treason that is laid in the Indictment: And whether there have been two credible Witnesses produced before you, is the Question that you are to consider, upon your Oath and Conscience; That is, whether you are satisfied here be two such as the Law requires. The Question is not merely, whether Mr. Cook be guilty; but whether in your Consciences he be legally proved guilty, whether there be Evidence to satisfy your Consciences, according to the Laws of the Land, that he is guilty, and we insist there is not; and therefore I beg Leave to recapitulate what has been sworn against him, that we may see how far it reaches, and wherein it is defective.

Gentlemen, Mr. Porter, he swears, That about the Beginning or Middle of May, he cannot not tell which, there was this Meeting, at the Old-King's-Head Tavern in Leaden-hall-Street; in which I would obſerve to you, that he confines himſelf to a certain Month; the Reaſon is very plain, and therefore I asked him, whether it was not in April; for if he had ſaid it had been then, there had been no Danger to the Priſoner, becauſe of the Act of Indemnity, therefore he was careful to fix it in May; and he would not lay it in June, for the tenth of June is a famous Day; and then, or ſoon after, Newgate had him; he was confined there for a Riot on that Day, and ſo they have reſtrained it to a Month, and the only Month that he is capable of ſwearing to, as to any Act done the laſt Year, till they came in January to the Aſſaſſination Plot, which the Priſoner is not accuſed to have had any Concern in: But it ſhould ſeem, he cannot tell what Day of the Week, or of the Month; but about the Beginning or Middle of May, eight Perſons dined at this Place; and then after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in, and they diſcourſed about this Matter.

Firſt, Gentlemen, we inſiſt upon it, That it is very improbable that Engliſh Proteſtants of pious Converſation, and good Morals, ſhould agree, as he ſays, to ſend ſuch a Meſſage to the late King, to invite over a French Popiſh Force: We may eaſily ſee the horrid and miſchievous Conſequences that would have followed ſuch a Practice, ſuch as muſt affect every Engliſhman with a Concern; ſo that it is improbable a Man of Virtue and Piety could ingage in ſuch an Enterprize: And if it be improbable, you will never believe it, unleſs the Conviction or Proof be irreſiſtible: And if you have any other Reaſons to diſtruſt this Man's Truth, we hope you will go upon the Side of Probability; and not let popular Prejudice, common Fame, or any thing elſe, but legal and undeniable Evidence have the Aſcendant over you. If you are not ſatisfied, that Mr. Cook did aſſent (as from the Character of the Man, it is not probable he ſhould) to ſend Charnock into France, to perſuade King Lewis and King James to ſend 10000 Men to invade our Country, then he is not guilty.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, he is not guilty we ſay in the Eye of the Law, if they have not two Witneſſes; and for that we ſay you have but one, or but one that is to be believed; and if you have but one that is to be believed, that in Law is but one; and conſequently my Client is not guilty: So the King's Counſel agree, that if there be but one Witneſs, he cannot be convicted; the Law is plain in the Caſe. Now to make it out that here is but one Witneſs at moſt, we have offered you ſeveral Objections, and made them out by Evidence, againſt the Teſtimony of Mr. Goodman; that he is not a Perſon fit to be believed; and if he be out of the Caſe, then does Mr. Porter's ſtand alone, and all will amount to one Witneſs, ſuppoſe it ſhould be granted that his Teſtimony were true.

Firſt, we have read a Record of Conviction againſt him, of a Crime one of the greateſt next unto Treaſon, that is known in our or any other Law. That he hired a Man to poiſon two Dukes, Branches of a noble Family, to which he had ſuch great Obligations, as all Mankind do know, and he himſelf cannot but acknowledge: And if there were not that Aggravation in it, of his Obligations to that Family; yet to lie in Wait to murder and poiſon, is ſuch an Offence that any Age can ſeldom ſhew the like. And the Objection is not ſo very eaſily anſwered as they would have it; nor can it be ſo ſoon paſſed over as they think, by ſaying he is a Witneſs of a Confederacy, with which the Priſoner is accuſed, a Crime greater than the Thing objected. It is true, none can bear Teſtimony in ſuch a Buſineſs, but he that is a Party: But we ſay, if theſe Perſons who come and ſet themſelves up for Witneſſes, were not probi Homines, and did not appear to be Perſons of indifferent Credit between Man and Man, and did not ſtand impartial in the Eye of the World in other Reſpects before; then they are not to be believed, as to what they charge themſelves and others to be guilty of. Now, if Mr. Goodman ſtands convicted of ſuch an Offence, as this that is alledged againſt him, though he is pardoned by the Act of Parliament, or Satisfaction acknowledged upon the Record, though it be even the very next Term, yet that does not purge him from the Infamy and Diſgrace, or from the Imputation of being concerned in ſo villainous a Deſign. It is impoſſible that he ſhould be good a Witneſs, that would be ingaged in ſuch a Matter, eſpecially when we have thoſe various Witneſſes, and ſuch a concurring Teſtimony, that what he has ſworn is abſolutely falſe.

Gentlemen, If there were nothing but his own Teſtimony in this Caſe, there could be no Queſtion at all in it. And as to Captain Porter's Teſtimony about his being there, we have produced three Witneſſes; who, if they be of Credit, then Mr. Goodman is not to be believed, but is falſified throughout: For it is not the Queſtion, Whether Mr. Cook went away before the Conſultation and the Reſolution? For if my Lord of Aylesbury or my Lord Montgomery went away, Mr. Goodman is falſified in that, and conſequently you ought not to believe him in the reſt: For he actually ſwears, That my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and theſe other Gentlemen, were all preſent, and at the Conſult; and did conſent and agree to the Reſolution, by uſing theſe Words, Yes, you may; Yes, you may. Now we ſay there are three Witneſſes that ſwear, That my Lord of Aylesbury was gone before he came there: I do not care whether he came there or not; that is not material: For if there were no body there, when my Lord of Aylesbury was there, but thoſe that were at Dinner, then Mr. Goodman was not there at any Conſultation, as they would inſinuate was at that Time, in that Place, in that Company.

My Lord, we have proved to you Mr. Cook's Abhorrence and Declaration, which we think ought to go a great Way in Satisfaction of his Innocence, at leaſt to induce you to the favourable Side: For, Gentlemen, you are not brought hither to convict a Man only, but to try and examine him; and it is your Duty to acquit as well well as convict, according as the Evidence ſtands; it is your Duty to go according to your Conſciences, and declare whether he be guilty or not guilty, upon the Evidence you have before you; you are to examine the Truth of the Fact in all its Circumſtances, and upon your own Conſciences to declare whether he be guilty or not guilty: Now we propoſe it to you, and ſubmit it to your Conſciences, That here are three Witneſſes that ſpeak upon their Oaths, againſt whom there is no Objection, that ever they were guilty of lying in wait to poiſon any body, nor in any Plot for an Aſſaſſination, nor any Conſpiracy for inviting an Invaſion from France, nor any other Objection againſt them; but they ſtand upright in the Face of the World, and they three ſwear that he was not there at that Time: The Anſwer that we expect is, That he might be there, and they not ſee him; and becauſe it was poſſible he might be there, and they not ſee him, therefore that is no Evidence; but, my Lord, becauſe it may be ſo is no Evidence that it is ſo; that is no Objection; for you will take it as the Nature of the Thing will afford, and the Matter itſelf allow: Now there can be no better Evidence than this, that they went in and out continually, the Drawers, and the Maſter of the Houſe five or ſix Times himſelf, were in the Room, and they ſay there was no ſuch Perſon there; why then it is very improbable, if not impoſſible, that any ſuch Man ſhould be there: The one ſwears he came down from my Lord of Aylesbury juſt before he went away; and another ſays, he followed him out of the Room; and the Maſter ſays, he met my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-Head; all which falſifies Mr. Goodman in that Particular, that he was with my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-Head, when he went away; theſe are incompatible; and if we falſify him in any one Thing, he is not to be believed in any other.

Then, Gentlemen, we offer to your Conſideration an Anſwer to another Objection: They ſay theſe Witneſſes ſeem to ſwear that he was not there at all; we are not concerned whether he was there afterwards or not; if you are ſatisfied that he was not there, as our Witneſſes ſwear, while my Lord of Aylesbury was there, that is enough.

But then they make an Objection, How comes the Maſter of the Houſe to remember my Lord of Aylesbury's going away, more than any body elſe? Gentlemen, you know the Nature of the Thing ſhews, not only that it was more probable the Maſter of the Houſe ſhould make his Obſervations near the Time of Dinner, rather than afterwards at Night, when there is more Hurry; but it is more probable he ſhould take Notice of it from the Quality of the Perſon, from the Diſcourſe he had with him about the White-Wine; which was a good Medium to refreſh a Vintner's Memory, it being a Matter in his own Trade, and that might make him call it to Mind.

Therefore, Gentlemen, we think theſe three Witneſſes ſtand free and clear in their Credit; and being ſo, are inconſiſtent with Mr. Goodman's Teſtimony; and we hope, in Favour of Life, the Credit inclines on their Side, eſpecially when the Queſtion is, Whether a Man ſhall be executed for Treaſon who never fled for it, who was never charged with any Treaſon or treaſonable Practices before; nay, not ſo much as with any particular Crime or Immorality? and Whether three Witneſſes ſhall be believed, againſt whom there is no Objection, rather than two, againſt one of which there are ſuch Objections?

1696. 8 W. III.

My Lord, we are not now debating or attacking the Evidence of the Plot, or arraigning the former Judgments againſt the Conſpirators that have ſuffered: But, Gentlemen, we are putting you now upon a ſerious Enquiry, (as God and your own Conſciences ſhall incline you), whether our Client be guilty, or not guilty upon this Evidence; that is, whether Mr. Goodman ſwears true or not: We hope that we have given you ſufficient Satisfaction, that upon Mr. Goodman's Part the Evidence is inſufficient, and we hope you will accordingly find our Client Not guilty.

Mr. Cook's Vindication of himſelf.

Mr. Cook being afterwards permitted to ſpeak for himſelf, made the moſt ſolemn Proteſtations, That he was ever averſe to the introducing foreign Forces; that he did not ſo much as hear of the intended Invaſion, till it was common Talk; poſitively denied he ſaw Goodman at the King's-Head; declared he deſigned to receive the bleſſed Sacrament ſoon, and wiſhed he might periſh when he did it, if he ſpoke an Untruth; and if ever he bought Arms towards promoting ſuch a Deſign, he wiſhed God might ſink or ſtrike him dead; and appealed to all that knew him, if he had not the Character of a pious and virtuous Man, whoſe ſolemn Aſſeverations deſerved ſome Credit in ſuch a Caſe as this: He acknowledged, indeed, that he had never taken the Oaths, but he ſaid, he had never refuſed them, for they had not been tendered to him; however, he was now ready to take them: And he called Mr. Hammond to teſtify, That he heard him declare his Deteſtation of a French Force, and wiſh Succeſs to the Engliſh Fleet againſt the French; that when the Plot broke out, he ſpoke with Abhorrence of it; and that he never heard him ſpeak diſreſpectfully of the King or Government.

Calls a Witneſs of his Loyalty.

After which Mr. Solicitor made his Obſervations on the Evidence for the King.

Mr. Solicitor's Reply to the Defence.

Mr. Solicitor-General. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the King, and I could have been very glad that this Gentleman's Defence, that he hath made, had been ſtronger than in Truth it has been; and I ſhould have been very glad too that his Counſel had been able to have made it better for him: But that he and they may be ſatisfied as much is done as the Caſe will bear; they have had all the Liberty in the World to make his Defence they could deſire, nay more than in Strictneſs could be allowed them.

Gentlemen, our Evidence is very poſitive againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, and for the higheſt Crime that the King's Subjects can be guilty of, by the Confeſſion of the Gentleman himſelf, and of his Counſel. We have, I ſay, two poſitive Witneſſes againſt him; they ſay, they are not legal ones: I muſt own, if we have not two Witneſſes, we have never a one; for whatſoever falſifies Mr. Goodman's Teſtimony, falſifies whatever Mr. Porter has ſworn. Now the Evidence that Mr. Porter has given againſt him is this: He ſays there was to be a Meeting at the King's-Head 1696. 8 W. III. Head Tavern in Leadenhall-Street, and there they conſulted of the Methods to bring back King James hither; and it was thought the beſt way to ſend to King James to invite the French King to ſend one thouſand Horſe, one thouſand Dragoons, and eight thouſand Foot to land here, in this Kingdom, where they would meet him with two thouſand Horſe: They pitched upon a very proper Meſſenger, Mr. Charnock, a Perſon that has been attainted, and has ſuffered for High-Treaſon; he was to be ſent into France upon this Errand; Mr. Cook, the Priſoner at the Bar, was one of the Perſons that were there at that Time, and he was conſenting to this Meſſage; and Mr. Porter gives you a particular Token relating to the Priſoner, for he remembers the Priſoner did kneel upon the Chair, and leaned his Elbows upon the Table, when he conſented.

Mr. Porter goes further, and tells you, That Mr. Charnock would have another Meeting, to know and ſee whether all the Company were of the ſame Mind they had been; and that afterwards they met at Mrs. Mountjoy's Houſe, and there the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent, and conſenting to the ſame Thing: Thereupon Mr. Charnock went into France, and came back again, and ſaid, The French King could not ſpare ſo much Force. Mr. Goodman gives the ſame Evidence that Mr. Porter had given: It is true, he was not at Mrs. Mountjoy's Tavern; but he tells you withal, he ſpoke with Mr. Charnock when he came back from France, and Charnock returned him the ſame Anſwer that he did to Mr. Porter, That the French King could not ſpare ſo many Forces. This is the Evidence, in ſhort, Gentlemen, that is given againſt the Priſoner; and if this Evidence be true, then is he guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

Againſt theſe Witneſſes, they have produced, firſt, a Record of Conviction againſt Mr. Goodman, and that was for hiring one Amadei to poiſon the Duke of Grafton, and the Duke of Northumberland: They have produced the Record, whereby it appears he was convicted, and fined 1000*l.* and was to find Security for his good Behaviour during Life; and he was to lie in Priſon till the Fine paid, and Security given: But it happens, in that very Record, it appears, there was Satisfaction acknowledged upon that, even the very next Term; and that gives a great deal of Suſpicion to believe, that the Evidence that was given was not much credited; for though the Counſel for the Priſoner has ſaid, that it was the Payment of the 1000*l.* that was the Satisfaction; no, it is not ſo; it is a Satisfaction of the whole Judgment, for finding Security as well as the Fine. They ſay he was not able to pay the Fine; and there is nothing appears of the other Parts of the Judgment being complied with, but the whole Judgment is ſet aſide.

But all this does not make a Man no legal Witneſs; if they thought this Conviction tended to ſet aſide his Evidence, they would have produced it at another Part of the Trial than where they did; that is, when Mr. Goodman was firſt called to be ſworn as a Witneſs; then they ſhould have produced this Record, and ſaid he had been no Witneſs: But they knew well enough that that was no Exception againſt the Legality of his Evidence, but tends only to his Credit, and nothing elſe. Now, though it be a black Crime to endeavour to poiſon another, yet that does not totally deſtroy any Man's Credit; if it did, then the other Gentleman, Mr. Porter, has confeſſed himſelf guilty of a greater Crime than that for which Mr. Goodman is convicted by this Record; for he owns himſelf one that was in that Deſign of Aſſaſſinating the King: And Mr. Goodman owns himſelf too, guilty of a greater Crime than what is objected to him, which is that of High-Treaſon; and I hope it may be believed, when he owns himſelf guilty of High-Treaſon, which is a greater Crime than poiſoning a private Subject; or guilty of ſuch a Deſign as the Aſſaſſination of the King, which Mr. Porter has charged himſelf with, and notwithſtanding which, they have not offered that as an Exception againſt Mr. Porter's Evidence, (for they very well know his Evidence has been received and credited); Mr. Goodman may be credited, though guilty of the Crime objected to him: And the conſtant Practice in all Trials of this Kind hath been, that it does not take away the Witneſs's Evidence, however it affects his Credit, which in this Caſe is ſupported by the concurrent Teſtimony of Mr. Porter: And ſo then, I ſay, we have two legal Witneſſes, (notwithſtanding all the Exceptions) to prove Mr. Cook guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

1696. 8 W. III.

Then they go on further, and produce other Witneſſes: Firſt, they produce one Edwards, a Perſon that is committed for High-Treaſon himſelf, and under Suſpicion of his being to be one of thoſe that was to have a Hand in the Aſſaſſination; but his Evidence goes no further, than that Mr. Goodman told him he was to be a Witneſs againſt Mr. Cook, and either he, the Witneſs, or Mr. Cook, muſt ſuffer; and that it was a fooliſh Thing to be hanged. My Lord, there is nothing at all in this Matter that takes away Mr. Goodman's Evidence: It is very plain Mr. Goodman had forfeited his Life, and muſt do ſomething to ſave it; and, I think, he could not do a better Service to intitle himſelf to the King's Mercy, than to diſcover thoſe that were equally guilty with himſelf. It was his Duty to have done it, if he had not been in Danger; and if he hath done no more than what was his Duty, I hope that is no Objection againſt his Teſtimony.

They have produced likewiſe a Drawer of the King's-Head Tavern, one Crawford; and he ſays, he attended in this Room, while this Company was there: But then he goes a little further than the Counſel or the Priſoner would have had him; for they called him to prove that Mr. Goodman was not there when my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cook were there. But when the Drawer comes, he knows nothing of Mr. Goodman's being there at all: He ſays, Mr. Cook was there, but not Mr. Goodman; and yet he does acknowledge, that Mr. Goodman might be there, and he not ſee him come up: He acknowledges he attended upon other Company as well as this; ſo that it is plain in the Nature of the Thing, and his own Confeſſion, that Goodman might be there. This cannot take off the positive Evidence of Mr. Goodman and Mr. Porter, who both swear, That Goodman was there.

But then they produce another Drawer, and that is one Huntley; and he gives the same Account; only indeed, he says, He was there all the Time they were at Dinner: But that is nothing, because it is acknowledged, both by Mr. Porter and Mr. Goodman, that he was not there at Dinner-time, but he might be there after Dinner, and yet Huntley could not see him at Dinner: He tells you likewise, he passed up and down in the Room afterwards, and did not see Mr. Goodman there; but yet he might be there, and he not see him.

Then they produce the Master of the House, and he gives much the same Evidence in Effect, which his Servants do, That he did not see Mr. Goodman there all the while; but he says something that is a little incredible: He can be positive that Mr. Goodman was not there while my Lord of Aylesbury was there, but he cannot be positive that he was not there afterwards. He tells you, he met my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery upon the middle of the Stairs, coming down, and he is sure Mr. Goodman was not there at that Time. Now, is that possible that he could be sure of that, when he owns, (and cannot but own) that Mr. Goodman might go into the Room and he not see him? So that he has made a Strain in his Evidence that is very little to be credited, which was not designed so much for the Advantage of Mr. Cook, as for the Advantage of somebody else: And in itself it is almost an impossible Thing that it should be true, by what he offers as the Reason of his Evidence.

But then, Gentlemen, you are to consider, that all these three Witnesses, if they swear true, do falsify not only Mr. Goodman, who swears that he was there, but they likewise falsify the Evidence of Mr. Porter; and, for that Reason I asked Mr. Porter the Question, Whether he did not give the same Evidence against Sir John Freind? And if what he swears now be not true, neither was it true when Sir John Freind was tried, for he was the only Witness at that Time against Sir John Freind for this Meeting; and therefore these Men's Testimony tends to overthrow both Witnesses as well as one: And I must tell you, that if Mr. Goodman be not a legal Witness, because he has sworn a Thing that is not true, then Mr. Porter is not a good Witness, who has sworn the same Thing, viz. That Mr. Goodman was there; and then you ought to acquit the Prisoner, because there is no Witness against him at Law; for there is the same Evidence against Mr. Porter that there is against Mr. Goodman, as to this Matter.

Then, Gentlemen, as to the Character of Mr. Cook, they say he is a good English Protestant: I hope he is so; but it is plain that Religion does not vary the Case: 'Tis within the Reach of every Man's Memory that is here, that the same Thing has fallen upon other Gentlemen that have had the same Character; particularly Sir John Freind and Sir William Perkins, who both said the same Things, in the same Place, That they were true Protestants of the Church of England: But that is no Manner of Evidence that will be of Weight against positive Oaths.

1696. 8 W. III.

Now, Gentlemen, it is fit likewise you should reflect upon another Thing; What is it that should engage Mr. Porter and Mr. Goodman, or invite either of those two Gentlemen to give a false Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar? It does not appear that there was any Injury done by him to them, to provoke them to it; so that it could be for nothing, but for the Sake of Truth.

It has been further said, in Behalf of Mr. Cook, That he abhorred the French, and any Invasion upon his Country, and the like: It is a Matter that is easily said; and it has been said by others that have been in the same Place where he now stands, That they hated all Plots, and they might punish them if ever they caught them: But these are only Sayings, and nothing else. If there can be any Constructions made of the Evidence given by these two Witnesses, that does not directly prove the Indictment, then the Prisoner ought to be acquitted: But if there can be no other Construction made, but only, That there was a plain Design to send Charnock into France to King James, to perswade him to prevail with the French King to come and invade us with a foreign Force; and if our Witnesses be legal Witnesses, (as I, doubt not, my Lords the Judges will tell you they are; if there be no Exception to the Credit of Mr. Goodman, but only that he was in such a Design of poisoning the two Dukes, which is really no Objection of Discredit to his Testimony), then, with Submission, I think there is no Room for you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to doubt but that the Prisoner is as guilty of this Crime laid to his Charge, as any others that have been tried and condemned for the same: And so, Gentlemen, I leave it to you.

The Lord Chief Justice's Directions to the Jury.

The Lord Chief Justice Treby afterwards summed up the Evidence, and made the following Observations upon it, in his Directions to the Jury.

Gentlemen, it ought to be considered, that here are several Circumstances, some of which seem very pregnant. It is agreed on all Hands, that the Prisoner dined there with those other seven Persons, concerning four of whom we must conclude nothing; but concerning three of them, we in this Court may take Notice, they are attainted of High-Treason; and so it is evident, that the Prisoner was for a long Time a Companion of three Traitors, and had a Conversation with them. I do not find that he had any Occasion to be there; nor any of the rest of the Company. Concerning my Lord of Aylesbury indeed it is said, he proposed to treat about a Hogshead of White-Wine: But that seems to be casual, and not the End of his coming, and dining with this Company there: But, be that how it will, that relates to his Lordship alone; but for the others, I do not find they do pretend any Occasion of meeting there, and therefore it leaves it the more suspicious; and it is the more so, because it was managed so privately and cautiously; They were not attended according to their Qualities: The Lords went away together in a Hackney Coach that was called, as they had come come thither in another: The reſt thought fit to ſtay there till it was dark; and, as ſoon as it was ſo, went away. There was ſome extraordinary Cauſe for all this: It did import the Priſoner to ſhew that it was for ſome good Cauſe and Purpoſe.

And further, it is obſervable, that this Houſe was a Place, which, as the Maſter ſays, none of this Company did uſe to reſort to, except Sir John Freind; which makes it probable, (this being a Houſe that Sir John Freind frequented, and none of the others) that He beſpoke this Place, and brought the reſt thither: And if it were ſo, that makes it more probable, that there was ſuch a Treaſon there to be hatched, as is evidenced by the King's Witneſſes: For you may remember, and it appears by the Record in this Court, that Sir John Freind was indicted and attainted (not for the Aſſaſſination, but) for the Treaſon for which the Priſoner is now a trying; an Invaſion that was to be ſupported with an Inſurrection. Now, if Sir John Freind was chiefly acquainted with this Houſe, and brought this Company together; it is very probable, it was about this Buſineſs which Sir John Freind was ſo concerned in: And that he is attainted for it, appears upon the Record before us; which ſhould be read, but that the Priſoner's Counſel admit it, and are ſo far ſatisfied in it, that they won't arraign the Verdict; nay, they did acknowledge that there was a Plot; and there was no Doubt of it, there was ſuch a Plot.

Now then, Gentlemen, here it is certainly proved, by theſe two Witneſſes (and not gain-ſayed by the Priſoner's own Witneſſes) that there was ſuch a Meeting, and that the Priſoner was there; and they both have poſitively ſworn that this Treaſon was committed there. You have heard what has been objected to their Credit; they have delivered their Teſtimony upon their Oaths; and ſo, Gentlemen, are you upon your Oaths: If you are ſatisfied, and can take it upon your Conſciences, that theſe two Witneſſes are, or any one of them, is, forſworn (if ſuch Diſtinction can poſſibly be made in this Caſe) then you are to acquit the Priſoner; but if you are ſatisfied, and think they have ſworn true, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Nay, if one be forſworn, both are; for the Evidence is intirely in all Parts the ſame; and if Mr. Goodman be perjured, Mr. Porter is ſo too.

Sir B. Shower. Forſworn and Perjured, are hard Words: We only ſay miſtaken.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Well, that Objection goes to one as well as the other.

L. C. J. Treby. It muſt be ſo, ſince they ſpeak of the ſame joint Matter, viz. their being together in Company: If Mr. Porter ſwears true, when he ſwears that Mr. Goodman was there with him and the reſt, Mr. Goodman muſt ſwear true, when he ſwears, that he was there with Mr Porter and the reſt. There was one Thing that I forgot: Sir Bartholomew Shower obſerved, That it might be an Invention of Captain Porter, becauſe he fixeth it in Point of Time to the Month of May, that he does not ſay it was in April; for that then it would be within the Pardon, which extends to April the twenty-ninth laſt Year: Nor would he ſay it in June, for then he was in Newgate; and others of them were diſperſed, by Reaſon of a Riot committed in Drury Lane; and this Sir Bartholomew Shower alledges was a Piece of Skill and Contrivance; but really this is a Piece of Ingenuity in himſelf: For, beſides that the King's Witneſſes affirm poſitively that it was in May, and remember it by a certain Token, viz. That it was within a very few Days after the King went beyond Sea, one or two of the Priſoner's Witneſſes (Crawford I am ſure) did ſay, that this Meeting was this Time Twelve-month; and you know we are now near Mid-May.

1696. 8 W. III.

Then the Jury withdrew; and after a Receſs of about three Quarters of an Hour, returned with their Verdict, That the Priſoner was GUILTY: And Sentence paſſed on him as a Traitor. After which he preſented a Paper to the Court, recommending himſelf to the King's Mercy; which the Judges promiſed to lay before his Majeſty, who was pleaſed to pardon him.

Mr. Cook convicted and condemned;

but pardoned.

In theſe Trials of the Conſpirators againſt King William, viz. Of Charnock, Perkins, Rookwood, Lowick, Cook, &c. moſt of the Points of Law are ſettled, in Relation to Trials, which were ſo much conteſted in the preceding Reigns: And it appears that the Friends of the Faction, who were condemned for Treaſon and Rebellion in thoſe Times, had not that Injuſtice done them, as ſome of their Advocates; and particularly as Sir Robert Atkyns and Sir John Hawles complain of, in their voluminous Remarks on the Trials of the Rye-Houſe Conſpirators. Sir John Hawles, who was Solicitor-General in King William's Reign, at the Trials of Charnock, &c. was obliged to purſue the very ſame Methods, in order to their Conviction, and inſiſt on the ſame Maxims that had prevailed in King Charles's Reign; and of which he complains ſo loudly, in his Remarks on the Trials of the Lord Ruſſel, &c. But to deſcend to Particulars.

Remarks on the Aſſaſſination Plot.

Charnock inſiſted on a Copy of his Indictment, and Counſel, as his Right; but was told, he had no Right to either; and yet the Conſpirators in King Charles's Reign were ſaid to have great Injuſtice done them, when theſe Things were denied them.

Charnock alſo objected, That an Accomplice in Treaſon could not be a Witneſs (as the Conſpirators in the Rye-Houſe Plot had done): But it was reſolved, an Accomplice was a good Witneſs, before he was indicted.

He objected alſo, as they had done, That Words were not Treaſon: But was told, That Words and Diſcourſe explained the Imagination of the Heart, which was the Treaſon; and that Words of Perſwaſion, in order to bring others into a Conſpiracy, were ſufficient Manifeſtations or Overt-Acts of the Treaſon of the Heart.

He objected alſo againſt Hear-ſay Evidence, as the Rye-Houſe Conſpirators had done; but this was however admitted on ſome Occaſions: Indeed the Jury were told, it ought not to weigh with them; but, if it was not given to influence the Jury, to what Purpoſe was it it ſuffered?

Another Thing that Mr. Charnock deſired, was, That he might have a Perſon to ſtand by him, and aſſiſt him at his Trial: But he was told this was an Innovation, and it was refuſed him; though this was a Favour allowed to the Lord Ruſſel in King Charles's Reign, and to ſome others.

Major

1696. 8 W. III.

Major Rookwood inſiſted at his Trial, That conſulting or conſpiring to levy War, was not Treaſon, unleſs a War was actually levied; as had been ſaid alſo in the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, and great Injuſtice ſaid to be done that Noble Lord, in being condemned for High-Treaſon, for conſpiring to attack the Guards, and levy War upon the King: But it was reſolved by the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt at Rookwood's Trial, That the conſulting or conſpiring to levy War, in order to depoſe or impriſon the King; or to put any Force or Reſtraint upon him, was High-Treaſon, though no War was actually levied: And he added, That the contrary Opinion might have been maintained in ſome Pamphlets; but the conſulting and agreeing to levy War againſt the King, was always deemed an Overt-Act of High-Treaſon.

Another Hardſhip complained of by the Rye-Houſe Conſpirators, was, That Evidence was ſuffered to be given of Facts done in another County: But the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt reſolved in the Trial of Sir William Perkins, That if Treaſon was committed in ſeveral Counties, the Party might be indicted in any one of them, and Evidence given of Facts done in all of them; provided Evidence was firſt given of ſome Fact done in the County where the Indictment was laid.

It was objected further by the Rye-Houſe Conſpirators, as it was by Sir William Perkins and others at theſe Trials, That the Law required two Witneſſes to prove every Overt-Act: But the Chief Juſtice informed them, That if there was one Witneſs to one Overt-Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt-Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon, that was all the Law required: And that a conſpiring to raiſe a Rebellion, or to promote an Invaſion, was the ſame Species of Treaſon as the conſpiring to aſſaſſinate the King; for that either of them had a Tendency to his Deſtruction.

The Act for Regulation of Trials in High-Treaſon.

There was an Act paſſed during theſe Trials, in the Year 1696, which did not only confirm many of theſe Reſolutions of the Judges, but made ſome Alteration in the Laws relating to Trials for High-Treaſon; of which it may be proper to take Notice in this Place: For Inſtance,

The Priſoner to have a Copy of the Indictment,

It was provided by this Act, That a Perſon proſecuted for High-Treaſon, or Miſpriſion of Treaſon, whereby his Blood might be corrupted, ſhould have a Copy of the whole Indictment (but not the Names of the Witneſſes) delivered to him, five Days at leaſt before his Trial; his Attorney or Agent requiring the ſame, and paying the Officer his Fees, not exceeding five Shillings for ſuch Copy.

and Counſel.

That the Priſoner ſhould be permitted to make his Defence by his Counſel, who ſhould be aſſigned him by the Court, not exceeding two; and they ſhould have Liberty to reſort to him: And that the Priſoner's Witneſſes ſhould give their Teſtimony upon Oath: That one Witneſs to one Overt-Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt-Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon, ſhould be ſufficient to convict him.

His Witneſſes ſworn.

Proſecution within three Years.

But the Proſecution is limited to be within three Years after the Treaſon committed.

1696. 8 W. III.

A Copy of the Pannel.

It is provided alſo by the ſaid Act, That the Priſoner ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors duly returned and delivered to him, two Days at leaſt before the Trial: And that he ſhould have the Proceſs of the Court to bring in his Witneſſes: And that no Evidence ſhould be given of any Overt-Act not laid in the Indictment.

The Overt-Act muſt be laid in the Indictment.

It was alſo enacted, That no Indictment for the Offences aforeſaid ſhould be quaſhed on Motion for miſwriting, mis-ſpelling, falſe or improper Latin; unleſs ſuch Exception be made in Court, before any Evidence given: And that no ſuch miſwriting, mis-ſpelling, falſe or improper Latin, after Conviction, ſhould be deemed a Cauſe to ſtay or arreſt Judgment: But Judgment may be reverſed upon a Writ of Error in the ſame Manner (and no other), as if this Act had not been made.

All the Peers ſummoned on the Trial of a Peer.

And, it was further enacted, That upon the Trial of any Peer or Peereſs, for Treaſon, or Miſpriſion of Treaſon, all the Peers ſhould be duly ſummoned, twenty Days at leaſt before the Trial; and every Peer, ſo ſummoned and appearing, ſhould have a Voice at ſuch Trial, firſt taking the Oaths, and repeating and ſubſcribing the Declaration againſt Tranſubſtantiation; provided that the ſaid Act ſhould not extend to Impeachments, or to the Treaſons for counterfeiting the Coin or Seals.

Jurors to have 10 l. per Annum.

And it was provided by an Act made in the 4th and 5th of W. & M. cap. 24. That Jurors ſhould have ten Pounds per Annum (for Life at leaſt) within the County, or it ſhould be a good Cauſe of Challenge; and the Juror might be examined, as to that Point, upon Oath.

The firſt Trial after that Act.

The firſt Trial after the Commencement of the ſaid Act, for regulating Trials in Caſes of High-Treaſon, was that of Ambroſe Rookwood, above-mentioned; at which Trial his Counſel obſerved, that by the Words of the ſaid Act, the Priſoner ought to have had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors duly returned two Days before the Trial; but the Court reſolved, That it anſwered the Intent of the Act, if the Priſoner had a Copy of the Pannel arrayed, though not returned, at the Time it was given the Priſoner.

Mr. Rookwood's Counſel alſo moved, that they might offer their Exceptions to the Indictment after Plea pleaded, and the Jury ſworn; for that Act ſaid, they might offer their Exceptions to the Indictment before Evidence given.

But the Court ruled, That they ought to have moved this upon the Arraignment, before Plea pleaded, notwithſtanding the Words of the Act; That the Act intended they ſhould move at ſuch Time before Evidence given, as the Law allowed, and did not eſtabliſh any new Method of Trial.

In what Caſe a Felon pardoned may be a Witneſs.

It was reſolved alſo at this Trial, that one convicted of Felony, and pardoned, might be a Witneſs; but one that had been attainted of Felony, and pardoned, could not.

The Effect of a Pardon.

That a Pardon from the King was as beneficial as a Parliament Pardon; and a Parliament Pardon would not reſtore an Offender to Blood, unleſs the Attainder was reverſed, or there were ſpecial Words in the Act to reſtore him; and, where-

1696. 8 W. III.

An Overt-Act not laid may be given in Evidence, to prove an Act that is laid.

whereas that Acts says, that no Evidence shall be given of any Overt-Act not laid in the Indictment; yet the Court held, That any Fact might be given in Evidence (though not laid in the Indictment) that tended to prove an Overt-Act that was laid in the Indictment.

A Prisoner not to be tried in Irons.

The Chief Justice, 'tis observed at the Trial of Cranborne, declared, That a Prisoner ought not to be in Irons at his Trial, and ordered them to be knocked off; giving this Reason for it, That he ought to stand at Ease, that he might be the better enabled to make his Defence: But if this Reason be a good one, it should hold equally where a Prisoner is brought to his Arraignment; because then he is to make his Exceptions to the Indictment, which is a considerable Part of his Defence, and often takes up a great deal of Time: And yet we find this Privilege was denied Mr. Layer at his Arraignment.

Causes of Challenge.

It was also ruled at this Trial, That it was no good Cause of Challenge to a Juror, that he had given a Verdict against another Prisoner on the same Indictment; but it was held to be a good Cause of Challenge if he had been upon the Grand Jury, or if he had declared the Prisoner was guilty before hand. It was also resolved, That a Juryman was not bound to answer whether he had given such an Opinion or not; but this must be proved by Witnesses, as must every Thing else, where the Juror's Answer would subject him to any Reproach or Damage.

Jurors.

One Overt-Act proved maintains the Indictment.

And it was resolved at Lowick's Trial, That if any one Overt-Act laid in the Indictment was proved, that was sufficient to maintain it; the Indictment could not be quashed for any Defect or Uncertainty in the other Overt-Acts that were laid: And in Knightley's Case, the Chief Justice declared, That where a Trial is in the King's-Bench, a Venire facias ought to issue for the Jury as in Civil Cases; and there must be fifteen Days between the Teste and the Return; and that there ought to be four Days after Conviction in that Court, if there be so many Days remaining in the Term, before Judgment be pronounced: And yet we find in Stayley's Case, who was condemned for the Popish Plot, Judgment was given the same Day: So furiously did the Faction drive on that Prosecution!

Trials in the King's-Bench.

Stayley not fairly dealt with.

A Jury cannot be discharged before Verdict.

It appears also, from Mr. Cook's Trial, That a Jury cannot by Law be discharged, after they are once charged with a Prisoner, till they have given a Verdict, and that the Prisoner ought to be convicted or discharged thereupon: And yet we find in the Trial of the two Jesuits, Whitebread and Fenwicke, after the Jury were charged with them, and the Evidence actually given, the Jury were discharged of them, and they were afterwards indicted, convicted, and condemned for the same Offence, and consequently they were illegally put to Death, if the Opinion of the Court at Mr. Cook's Trial be Law: But every thing was esteemed fair by the Faction in those Days, especially in the Prosecution of Priests and Jesuits.

The Injustice done the Jesuits in the Trials of the Popish Plot.

There being a Defect of Jurors at Mr. Cook's Arraignment, occasioned by the numerous Challenges, as well on the Part of the King as of the Prisoner, the Court ordered another Pannel to be ready on the Wednesday following; when the Prisoner being brought to the Bar again, his Counsel insisted, that there ought not to have been a new Pannel awarded, but a Tales; for, by the late Act, the Prisoner was to be tried by the first Pannel: But the Court was of Opinion, a Tales did not lie upon a Commission of Oyer and Terminer; but where there was a Defect of Jurors, there was an absolute Necessity for a new Pannel.

1696. 8 W. III.

No Tales on a Commission of Oyer and Terminer.

Having taken Notice of the principal Points of Law resolved in these Trials, and made some Observations on them, I proceed, in the next Place, to make some Historical Remarks on this Conspiracy.

Historical Remarks.

The French King had in a Manner ruined and depopulated his Country, by maintaining a long and expensive War against most of the Powers of Europe, in Behalf of his Ally King James; by whose Restoration he proposed the bringing over England to his Party, and to make this Kingdom subservient to his grand Design of Universal Monarchy: As a last Effort therefore, when he found but little Impression could be made on the Confederates in Flanders, he projected the making so sudden a Descent upon the English Coast, when most of our Troops were on the other Side the Water, as to bring about another Revolution, by the Assistance of the Malcontents here, before any Provision could be made to oppose him; and, accordingly, in the Winter of the Year 1695, he drew down an Army towards Dunkirk and Calais, with the utmost Secrecy, and King James came to Calais, attended by Marshal Boufflers, in order to embark for England; the Duke of Berwick, and Sir George Barclay being sent over before, with some reformed Officers, to prepare King James's Friends in England to join him when he should land: And, in order to facilitate the Enterprize, some desperate Men, without the Knowledge of King James, or indeed of many considerable Men of their Party, resolved to attack King William's Guards as he came from Hunting, to take him Prisoner, and hurry him into France, and had actually treated for a Ship for that Purpose; and there were others, it is said, that had determined to kill him, if they could not carry him off: From whence this Conspiracy obtained the Name of The Assassination Plot; though it appears from these Trials, that this Branch of it was not known to several of the Conspirators, nor were they so much as charged with it; and every one of the Prisoners, at their respective Executions, declared with their dying Breath, That King James had given them no Orders or Authority to kill King William; the Commission, which some of them said they had heard of, being only a general Commission to make War on the Prince of Orange; which they imagined, perhaps, would have excused them from the Guilt of Treason, if they had joined King James and the French Troops on their Landing.

Bishop Burnet, indeed, speaking of the Assassination Plot, in his posthumous History, Vol. II. Pag. 172, &c. says, That King James gave the Conspirators a Commission to attack the Prince of Orange's Person; but it does not appear certainly, from the Trials of the Conspirators, that they had any Commission at all; some of the Witnesses, and particularly De la Rue, testifying, that they once resolved to act without a

1696. 8 W. III.

Commiſſion; and Porter, who teſtifies he heard that there was a Commiſſion, only ſays, That it was to make War upon the Prince of Orange; which is very far from being a Commiſſion to attack King William's Perſon in particular, or, in other Terms, to aſſaſſinate him. Had King James and the French Forces landed, and joined the Engliſh Malcontents, who would have acted, it is preſumed, under Generals commiſſioned by King James, they would, no doubt, have looked upon themſelves to have been authorized to attack King William's Guards, or any other Part of his Forces; and King William's Generals probably were authorized to attack King James's Guards, or any other Part of his Forces, whether commanded by that King in Perſon or not: The Commiſſions on both Sides poſſibly were much of the ſame Tenor, and the like Inferences might be drawn from each.

'Tis true King William might have been killed in this War, and ſo might King James; there were no Orders given, that ever I heard of, on either Side, to avoid firing, where either King was perſonally preſent: And, if we may credit Biſhop Burnet, Queen Mary was in the utmoſt Conſternation, after the Battel of the Boyne, till ſhe heard her Father was ſafe; though it cannot be ſuppoſed any particular Orders were given to take him off.

Give me leave to take Notice of another groſs Miſtake of Biſhop Burnet's, in Relation to theſe Trials, Pag. 188, and 193 of his laſt Volume of pohumous Hiſtory; where he ſays, That the Priſoners did not, either at their Trials or Examinations, deny any Circumſtance in the Evidence againſt them; whereas every Man of them denied that their Meeting at the King's-Head was with an Intention of ſending Charnock to France, to procure a Body of French Troops, as had been ſworn; but averred that nothing of this kind was mentioned at that Meeting; and Sir John Fenwick's Words, at his Execution, are very particular, (viz.)

As for what I am now to die, I call God to witneſs, I went not to that Meeting in Leadenhall-Street with any ſuch Intention, as to invite King James to invade this Kingdom by Force; nor was I myſelf provided either with Horſe or Arms, or engaged for any Number of Men, or gave particular Conſent for ſuch Invaſion, as it is moſt falſly ſworn againſt me.

Nor was the diſpatching Charnock into France for a Body of Troops, at that Meeting, denied only, by every one of the Priſoners at their Execution, but there is a noble Lord ſtill living, who was one of that Company, who abſolutely denies, to this Day, that there was any ſuch Matter treated of, or mentioned, at the Meeting at the King's-Head; but ſays, that Charnock, deſiring to ſerve the late King James in France, prevailed on him, and the reſt of the Company, to meet there, in order to get a Recommendation to the Lord Montgomery's Father, who was then Chamberlain to King James: That there was no Diſcourſe at that Meeting, of inviting over French Forces, or encouraging the raiſing Forces to join them at their Landing, as Porter and Goodman had teſtified: That the Aſſaſſination was a Reſolution taken by Charnock, Porter, and ſome deſperate Men, who communicated it only to thoſe few who were to be Actors in it: And that neither at this Time, or any other, did King James give Encouragement to ſuch a barbarous Attempt on King William, or was ever privy to ſuch a Conſpiracy; and that Biſhop Burnet's Account of the Aſſaſſination Plot is not to be relied on. This the Author of theſe Sheets has ſeen, in a Letter under the Hand of that noble Lord to one of his Friends, and can aſſure the Reader that it was written at ſuch a Time and Place, that his Lordſhip could be under no Neceſſity or Temptation of diſguiſing the Truth. But to proceed: The Nation never appeared in a greater Ferment and Conſternation than on the Diſcovery of this Plot: The three Perſons who diſcovered it, and were made Witneſſes againſt the Conſpirators afterwards, namely, Pendergraſs, De la Rue, and Porter, had no ſooner given Advice of it to the Court, but King William went to the Houſe, (viz. on the 24th of February, 1695-6.) and acquainted his Parliament, that he had received ſeveral concurring Informations of a Deſign to aſſaſſinate him, and invade the Kingdom at the ſame Time; and that he had therefore given Orders for equipping a Fleet, and for bringing over ſuch a Body of Forces from Flanders as might ſecure them againſt any Attempts from abroad; that ſeveral of the Conſpirators were already in Cuſtody, and Care was taken to apprehend the reſt; and he did not doubt the Zeal of his Parliament to do every Thing that was proper for their common Safety.

1696. 8 W. III.

Both Houſes hereupon attended his Majeſty the ſame Day with an Addreſs, congratulating him on his Preſervation, and declaring their Abhorrence of the barbarous Deſign; aſſuring him they would ſupport his Perſon and Government againſt the late King James, and all his Enemies; and in Caſe his Majeſty came to a violent Death they would revenge it; deſiring he would proceed to ſeize and ſecure ſuch Perſons as he ſaw fit: And the next three Days the Members of both Houſes were employed in taking and ſigning a voluntary Aſſociation, which they entered into, wherein they declared King William their rightful and lawful King, and mutually engaged to ſtand by each other, in his Defence, againſt King James and his Adherents; and in Caſe his Majeſty ſhould come to a violent Death, they obliged themſelves to unite and aſſociate in revenging it upon his Enemies, and in ſupporting the Succeſſion of the Crown, according to the Act of Settlement: And a Proclamation iſſued for apprehending the Duke of Berwick, Sir George Barclay, Major Lowick, Captain Courtney, George Higgons, George Porter, Cardel Goodman, and ſeveral other ſuſpected Perſons, (the Earl of Aylesbury having been apprehended and committed to the Tower before).

A Fleet of fifty Men of War alſo was equipped in a few Days, and ſent, under the Command of Admiral Ruſſel, to lie before Dunkirk and Calais; and twenty Battallions were at the ſame Time brought over from Flanders, under the Command of the Duke of Wirtemburgh: So that the late King James, on his Arrival at Calais, found the deſigned Enterprize entirely defeated, and thereupon returned to St. Germains, leaving his Friends in England at the Mercy of his Rival; and they were thereupon condemned and executed, in the Manner above related.

1696. 8 W. III. Fenwick's Attainder.

Proceedings againſt Sir JOHN FENWICK, on a Bill to attaint him of High-Treaſon; which was debated in the Houſe of Lords and Commons, in the Months of November and December, 1696, and received the Royal Aſſent on the 11th of January following.

1696. 8 W. III.

SIR John Fenwick lay concealed in London, from the Time of the Diſcovery of the Aſſaſſination Plot, till the Beginning of June 1696; when endeavouring to make his Eſcape over to France, he was apprehended at Romney, on the Coaſt of Kent, before he could embark: And being in Cuſtody at Romney, wrote a Letter to his Lady; which was intercepted, and great Uſe made of it in the ſubſequent Proceedings againſt him; being of the following Tenor.

His Letter to his Lady, after he was taken.

" What I fear'd is at laſt happened. Had I " gone alone, I had done it: But the other was " betrayed from London. It is God's Will, ſo " we muſt ſubmit. I know nothing can ſave " my Life, but my Lord Carliſle's going over " to him, backed by the reſt of the Family of " the Howards, to beg it; and offering, that I " will be Abroad all his Time, where I cannot " hurt him; and that I will never draw Sword " againſt him. I muſt leave it to you what " elſe to ſay: All Friends muſt be made: My " Lord Devonſhire may perhaps, by my Lady: " My Lord Godolphin and Lord Pembroke, by " my Lady Montgomery; Mr. Nelſon, by the " Biſhop of Canterbury; My Lord Arran " might ingage his Brother Selkirk, to uſe his " Intereſt with Keppel. I believe, if my Lord " Carliſle would go, it were beſt before my " Trial; or elſe they will cut me ſhort, for " Want of Time: If he can prevail with him " for a Pardon, he will procure it as well before " my Trial as after; at leaſt, he may prevail for " a Reprieve, till ſome come over to him: My " Lord alſo will have an Opportunity to ingage " Bentinck; and get my Lord of Eſſex to join " with him. I cannot think what elſe to ſay; " but the great Care muſt be the Jury: If two " or three could be got that would ſtarve the " reſt, that or nothing can ſave me: Money " I know would do it; but alas! that is not to " be had; nor ſhall I get enough for Counſel. " I beg of you not to think of being ſhut up " with me, I know it will kill you; and be- " ſides, I have no ſuch Friend as you to take " care of my Buſineſs; though it would be the " Comfort of my Life, the little Time it laſts, " to have you with me; and I have this only " Comfort now left, that my Death will make " you eaſy. My deareſt Life, grieve not for " me, but reſign me to God's Will: You will " hear, as ſoon as they bring me to Town, " where they put me; and then I would have a " Servant, or ſome body, with me. I am in- " terrupted, ſo can ſay no more now: Engage " Sir John Lowther, the new Lord, who has " more Intereſt than any body: Let my Lord " Scarſdale engage Germaine, to engage Overkirk " for me: Speak to my Lady Arlington. If " my Trial could be put off till the King " comes back, there would be more Opportu- " nity to ſollicit him."

As Sir John Fenwick's principal Hopes ſeemed to lie in getting his Trial put off till the King came over; and great Promiſes of Favour were made him; if he would diſcover the Noblemen and Gentlemen which were ſuſpected to be concerned with him. Sir John amuſed the Miniſtry from Time to Time, with one plauſible Story or other; and, at length, delivered in a Paper; wherein he charged the Duke of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Marlborough, the Earl of Bath, Admiral Ruſſel, the Lord Godolphin, and Commiſſary Crawford, of holding a Correſpondence with King James: Which the Lords Juſtices giving little Credit to, they cauſed Sir John to be indicted on the Evidence of Porter and Goodman; and the Indictment was found by a Middleſex Jury: But Goodman being tampered with, as was ſuppoſed, by ſome great Men, who were ſuſpected to be in the Plot, made his Eſcape into France, before Sir John was brought to his Trial; and there being now but one Witneſs againſt him, they did not think fit to bring him upon his Trial afterwards; but deferred the Proſecution of him till his Majeſty ſhould come over from Flanders, when they propoſed to lay the Caſe before the Parliament.

King William returning to England on the ſixth of October, and the Parliament meeting on the 20th of the ſame Month; Admiral Ruſſel, who was one of the Perſons accuſed by Sir John Fenwick, prevailed on Mr. Secretary Trumbal to bring the ſeveral Papers, containing the Informations Sir John had given to the Lords Juſtices, into the Houſe of Commons, on the ſixth of November; and moved that they might be read, that he might have an Opportunity of juſtifying himſelf; Mr. Secretary declaring at the ſame Time, that he had his Majeſty's Leave to lay thoſe Papers before the Houſe. Then the Papers were read, and Sir John Fenwick was brought before them, by an Order of the Houſe, that Afternoon; when Mr. Speaker required him to make a full Diſcovery of what he knew of the Conſpiracy: To which Sir John anſwered, He was indicted of High-Treaſon, and a Diſcovery there might be prejudicial to him, unleſs he had ſome Security to indemnify him, and then he ſhould be ready to tell all he knew: But was anſwered, the beſt Way to obtain their Favour, was, to make a free and candid Confeſſion. Then he deſired only ſome Time to recollect himſelf; but this alſo was refuſed; and Sir John being withdrawn, it was reſolved, after ſome Debate, to attaint him of High-Treaſon; Yeas 179, Noes 61: And on Monday the ninth of November, a Bill was brought in for attaint-

Sir John brought before the Commons.

1696. 8 W. III.

A Bill of Attainder brought in againſt him, and read.

attainting Sir John Fenwick of High-Treaſon; and it was read a firſt Time, and the Queſtion put for a ſecond reading; upon which the Houſe divided; Yeas 196, Noes 102; and Friday was appointed for the ſecond reading: And that Sir John ſhould have a Copy of the Bill, and of the Order, and be allowed Pen, Ink, and Paper; and that Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor ſhould be ready to produce the Evidence againſt him that Day.

Fuller offers to be an Evidence againſt Sir John.

In the mean time Mr. Speaker read a Letter from Mr. Fuller, the Forger of the Warming-Pan Plot, offering to become an Evidence againſt Sir John; but the Houſe knowing him to be ſo notorious an Impoſtor, rejected his Teſtimony: Mr. Speaker alſo acquainted the Houſe, that he had read a Letter from Sir John Fenwick, deſiring, That Sir Francis Pemberton, Sir Thomas Powis, and Sir Bartholomew Shower, might be his Counſel, and Mr. Dighton his Solicitor: Whereupon it was ordered he ſhould be allowed two Counſel, and the Sollicitor he deſired; and that he ſhould be heard by his Counſel.

A Debate about the Form of Proceeding.

Accordingly Sir John being brought to the Houſe again, on Friday the 13th of November, before he was brought in, a Debate aroſe, Whether the Mace ought to lie upon the Table, or whether the Serjeant ought to ſtand by him with it at the Bar? For there was not a Member in the Houſe that had been preſent at the hearing a Priſoner againſt a Bill of Attainder.

Some Gentlemen held, That Sir John Fenwick being a Priſoner, the Mace ought to be at the Bar, and then no Member could ſpeak: Others ſaid it ought to lie upon the Table, and then every Member was at Liberty to ſpeak, and ask Queſtions: A third was of Opinion, the Sheriffs of London could not have him in Cuſtody here; but he muſt be delivered to their Serjeant: To which it was replied, He might be in the Cuſtody of the Serjeant without his Mace; and another ſaid, The Mace ought to lie upon the Table: For never any Bill was read, but when the Mace was on the Table.

Others obſerved, That when the Lord Torrington was brought Priſoner from the Tower; and the Houſe, upon Account of his Quality, did not order him to the Bar; the Mace was upon the Table, while he was in the Houſe; and he gave an Account of his Conduct, and every Member was at Libertyto ask him what Queſtion he pleaſed: And another Member ſaid, If the Mace was not upon the Table, their Mouths were muzzled: They were not in the Nature of Judges; and ſhould they paſs a Vote, That the Judges ſhould ask no Queſtions? Would they act in their higheſt Capacity without being a Houſe? Adding, That when the Duke of Leeds appeared there, the Mace was upon the Table.

To this it was anſwered, That though when the Mace was carried from the Table, no Member had the Liberty to ſpeak; yet any Member had the Liberty to deſire, that the Counſel and the Priſoner withdraw; and then the Mace might be brought to the Table.

At length, the Queſtion being put, it paſſed, That the Mace ſhould ſtand by Sir John Fenwick at the Bar.

It was reſolved alſo, That the Bill ſhould be read to Sir John in the Houſe, though the Mace was off the Table: But then that it ſhould be read again after Sir John was withdrawn, when the Mace was upon the Table before the Queſtion was put.

1696. 8 W. III.

Then Sir John Fenwick was brought in, and the Serjeant took him to the Bar; where he ſtood by him with his Mace: And Sir Thomas Powis and Sir Bartholomew Shower, were admitted as Counſel for Sir John; and Mr. Serjeant Gould, and Mr. Recorder Lovel, appeared as Counſel for the Bill.

The Counſel on both Sides.

Mr. Speaker then acquainted Sir John, That the Houſe had ordered a Bill to be brought in, to attaint him of High-Treaſon; which had been once read; and to which they permitted him to make his Defence by his Counſel, before it was read a ſecond Time: But they muſt not permit his Counſel to diſpute the Power of Parliaments to paſs Bills of Attainder, whenever they ſaw fit: After which the Bill was read, being of the following Tenor:

The Bill read to Sir John.

That whereas Sir John Fenwick, Bart. had been indicted for High-Treaſon, on the Oaths of George Porter and Cardel Goodman, for compaſſing the King's Death, and adhering to his Enemies: And whereas the ſaid Sir John had procured his Trial to be put off from Time to Time, on Pretence of making a full Diſcovery of the Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty; and, inſtead thereof, had contrived ſeveral falſe and ſcandalous Accuſations; reflecting on ſome Peers and Members of the Commons, with an Intent to undermine the Government, and create Jealouſies between the King and his Subjects: And whereas the ſaid Cardel Goodman, one of the Witneſſes againſt the ſaid Sir John, was in the mean Time withdrawn, ſo that his Evidence could not now be had: It was therefore enacted, That the ſaid Sir John Fenwick ſhould be convicted and attainted of High-Treaſon.

Mr. Serjeant Gould opens the Charge and the Evidence.

After the reading the Bill, Mr. Serjeant Gould opened the Charge and the Evidence; and ſaid,

Mr. Speaker, We are here, in Obedience to your Commands, to give an Account of the Charge, and likewiſe the Evidence of the Fact, that is againſt this Gentleman, Sir John Fenwick. The Charge againſt Sir John Fenwick is for High-Treaſon, and High-Treaſon of the higheſt Degree; it is no leſs than a Deſign of depoſing the King, and ſubverting the Government, and ſubjecting it to a French arbitrary and ſlaviſh Power: It further charges, That in Proſecution of this Conſpiracy, he hath met together with ſeveral others, that have conſulted, conſented, and agreed together, to bring in a French Army upon us; and, in order to that, as a particular Overt-Act, it is charged, That they contrived to ſend one to the late King James, to bring in a French Power upon us: It is charged likewiſe, That he conſpired to levy War upon us; and, for that Purpoſe, did provide Piſtols, and other warlike Arms. This I take to be the Subſtance of the Charge, as laid in the Indictment.

Now, may it pleaſe you, Mr. Speaker, as for the Evidence of the Fact, charged and alledged in the Indictment, it is no Secret certainly to any at this Time of Day (after ſo many Trials, ſo many Convictions, ſo many Attainders), that for ſome Years laſt paſt, there hath been a wicked Conſpiracy to bring in a French Power upon us, to ſubject this good Govern-

1696. 8 W. III.

Government, and to depoſe the King; but God Almighty, by ſpecial Providence, hath always prevented and diſappointed them. We know, ever ſince the Buſineſs of la Hogue (in which, even by a Miracle, God diſappointed them), they have been ſtill reſtleſs, and have been induſtrious to ſet up again this Deſign; and for this have plotted to bring in a French Power, and have not had any Regard to the King's Mercy ſhewed to them, and that in paſſing ſeveral Acts of Parliament but have ſtill perſiſted in the ſame Deſigns.

As to the Charge upon this Gentleman at the Bar, we ſhall ſhew that in Time. In the Year 1694, for ſeveral Months there was a Conſpiracy carried on, but did not take Effect: Afterwards in Time, I think the Beginning of June, or the latter End of May, there were ſeveral Conſults, or Meetings, at the King's-Head Tavern, at the upper End of Leaden-hall-Street; where this Gentleman, that now ſtands charged at the Bar, was preſent: There were ſeveral Gentlemen, and, among the reſt, (as it hath and will appear upon the Evidence), there was Sir John Fenwick, my Lord Montgomery, and ſeveral others; whereof Captain Porter and Goodman were there likewiſe preſent: It was then propoſed, that one Charnock (ſince executed, and agreed upon by all to be preſent), ſhould go over into France to the late King James, to communicate to him their Reſolution and Sincerity in being ſerviceable to him in levying War here, to depoſe the King, and ſubvert the Government; who was to intercede with the French King, ſo that there might be Forces ſent from France. But after this, Charnock (preſent ſtill this Gentleman) comes and propoſes this Thing again, and tried whether they were ſincere and real in their former Reſolutions: To which they all replied, and did agree and aſſent, That it ſhould be done; and they were very zealous in the Matter, and the Forces were at that Time propoſed. And what was that? Why truly, no leſs than 8000 Foot, and 2000 Dragoons of French, with an Aſſurance of 2000 Horſe from this Country. Charnock did go into France, and did communicate this Matter; and, after he had communicated this Matter, he came back, and brought Anſwer, That King James had endeavoured to anſwer their Expectations, but at that Time the French King could not ſpare his Forces; but however, returned his Thanks to them.

This paſſed on till towards Chriſtmas laſt: Then comes over Sir George Barclay upon this Expedition, and there was a Commiſſion prepared for that Purpoſe: And as to one Part, he brought along with him a Detachment of ſome of King James's Guards, who was to aſſaſſinate the King: The next Part was for raiſing a Rebellion; now that fell to Sir John Fenwick's Part: As to the aſſaſſinating Part, you have had ſeveral Examples made already: This we have Evidence to prove; and if we prove this Matter as we have opened it, then I think there is no Perſon whatſoever, but will agree that this is High-Treaſon in the higheſt Degree. Now, Sir, here ſtands our Matter: Here was an Indictment found, according to the Law you made laſt Seſſions of Parliament, by two Witneſſes to one Species of Treaſon againſt Sir John Fenwick: We have one of the Witneſſes here, viva voce; but Sir John Fenwick hath protracted his Trial, by frequent Aſſurances of making a Diſcovery, which hath terminated in what you have already mentioned in your Bill; by Means of which Sir John Fenwick hath not been tried; whereas he had been tried in Courſe, without theſe Applications, and found guilty: But now he hath had all this Time, that Goodman is withdrawn is plain, and, we think, (but that we muſt leave to the Judgment of this Honourable Houſe) may be reaſonably ſuppoſed, by Contrivance, to take off this Proſecution of Sir John Fenwick: For why? The Inference is from a Fact that we ſhall prove to this Honourable Houſe. There hath been the like Attempt upon Captain Porter; but Captain Porter hath been more ſtedfaſt: He hath been ſo reſolved, that he ſtood his Ground; and, to ſpeak the Truth, notwithſtanding he hath been highly attempted: For we ſhall prove to you, that one Clancy comes to Captain Porter, and attempts him to withdraw into France, with Aſſurance of a Pardon; and he hath 300 l. paid him in Hand, and 300 l. more he was to be paid when he ſhould come into France, to be remitted by Bills of Exchange: Beſides, he was to have 300 l. a Year; 100 l. from my Lord Aylesbury, 100 l. from my Lord Montgomery, and the other 100 l. a Year from Sir John Fenwick; and this to be an Annuity during his Life: And thus far we ſuſpect Sir John Fenwick may be concerned; for his Lady came (he did not come perſonally, but his Lady did), and gave her Honour and Aſſurance that it ſhould be all performed, and much more, if he would withdraw himſelf. Captain Porter preſently makes a Diſcovery of this, and takes the 300 l. which was paid down: Upon this it hath been ſo far proceeded, that Clancy hath been indicted for it, and convicted, and hath received Judgment; and, I ſuppoſe, there hath been Execution: We have the Record of all theſe Proceedings.

We have this Circumſtance further in the Caſe, (which it is my Duty to open to this Houſe) to ſhew what Labour there hath been to ſtifle the Truth of the Fact, upon taking of Sir John Fenwick: There was one Webber taken with him, and he ſlid a Letter into one Fowl's Hand, and this was to be ſent to my Lady Fenwick; and what is the Import of this Letter? The Import of it is they could not prevail with Porter, (as I opened it juſt now); therefore You muſt influence the Jury, get two or three ſtout Jury-men to ſtarve the reſt, for we have nothing elſe to depend upon. Theſe Things we ſhall humbly offer to prove, according to our Duty, and according to the Order of this Houſe; and then leave Sir John Fenwick to make his Defence.

1696. 8 W. III.

Then the King's Counſel being about to produce their Evidence, Sir Thomas Powis, in Behalf of the Priſoner, ſaid, Mr. Speaker, ſince I am here aſſigned Counſel for the Priſoner, by the Allowance of this Honourable Houſe, upon his Application, without my Privity, I crave Leave humbly to acquaint you, in Behalf of my Client; I take it for granted that he is, I am ſure, we that are Counſel for him are, a little little ſurpriſed in what the King's Counſel are going about; for, in Truth, we were not aware, nor do we find that any Notice was given to the Gentleman at the Bar, that there would be any Proceeding againſt him by examining of Witneſſes, or giving of Evidence: He had, (it ſeems), the Vote of the Houſe ſent to him, and likewiſe a Copy of the Bill; but I could not underſtand, that the Houſe had given Notice, that he ſhould be prepared by Witneſſes, if he had any, or be at Liberty to produce them: Nor was there the leaſt Notice to him, that there would be a Proceeding againſt him by Way of giving Evidence. He did, as I find, humbly apply himſelf, by Petition, That he might be heard by Counſel, againſt the paſſing of the Bill; and I ſhall very carefully obſerve thoſe Directions you gave us; which I hope we ſhould not have ſtood in Need of, but have behaved ourſelves as becomes us, and not have drawn in Queſtion the Power of Parliament: I never had a Thought to do ſuch a Thing; but this I humbly lay before you for your Conſideration, Whether, without any Sort of Notice, that I perceive he had from this Houſe, to make his Defence to any Evidence, and conſequently there could be no Need of Witneſſes on his Behalf; whether you will ſo proceed, unleſs he had had Fore-warning to provide himſelf otherwiſe than by the printed Votes, which (I ſuppoſe) he had no Opportunity of ſeeing? And Whether, within the Words, you are pleaſed to acquaint us with, we may be heard, as to the Reaſonableneſs of this Proceeding, that by and by we muſt crave Leave to ſpeak unto?

1696. 8 W. III.

Sir Bar. Shower moves for further Time.

Sir Bartholomew Shower, alſo of Counſel for the Priſoner, added, That they were ready to offer ſome Conſiderations againſt the Suggeſtions in the Bill; but were not ready to make his Defence againſt the Matter of Fact: That the firſt Time they had Notice that Sir John was to be brought to their Bar, was at nine or ten o'Clock the laſt Night: And the Order ſaid indeed, That the King's Counſel ſhould produce Evidence for the King as this Day; but it was not ordered, that the Evidence ſhould be produced on the Behalf of Sir John Fenwick at this Time, or indeed, that he ſhould be perſonally preſent; nor had they any Way to compel their Witneſſes to appear here.

Mr. Serjeant Gould anſwered, If the King's Counſel are to produce their Evidence by the Order, for what Reaſon could this be ordered, but that Sir John ſhould apply himſelf to anſwer it?

Then Sir John, and the Counſel on both Sides, being withdrawn, a Debate aroſe, Whether Sir John ſhould be allowed further Time to produce his Witneſſes? the Debate being opened by Sir Thomas Littleton, who ſaid,

A Debate thereupon.

Mr. Speaker, The Counſel could not think that the Bill ſhould ſet forth, That Sir John Fenwick was indicted, but that the Houſe would know by what Means. And that Goodman was gone away, and we ſhould not enquire by what Means. What are the Objections made by the Counſel to the Bill? Say they, We are ready to give Reaſons againſt the Bill: They do not ſay downright againſt your Juriſdiction; but that they are ready to ſhew you, it is not reaſonable in this Caſe, as Circumſtances ſtand, to paſs this Bill: Sir John's Petition was to be heard downright againſt the Bill. If that was your Intention, to hear him to that only, I conceive you would not have worded your Anſwer as you did: You ordered him Counſel to make his Defence; and, at the ſame Time, ordered the King's Counſel to produce the Evidence: How could they underſtand it, but to make a Defence to the Evidence? It may be they have a Mind to another Fee: Whether you will think fit in the Circumſtances you ſtand, to give them further Time, I do not know; but the Circumſtances of the Kingdom, and the King's Life, muſt be conſidered as well as Sir John Fenwick: What is the Meaning that they are not prepared? I ſuppoſe it is to have a Pretence for further Time: But I think your Order is ſo plainly worded, that they could not miſtake it.

1696. 8 W. III.

Mr. Cowper, of the ſame Side, ſaid, The Counſel for Sir John Fenwick ſay, we come prepared to make a Defence to every Thing charged in the Preamble of the Bill; but what is not charged, we do not come prepared to make a Defence to. Now they conceive the Fact of High-Treaſon is not charged upon him by the Bill; and, if that be true, it is of great Weight; but as it is, 'tis none: For firſt, it is plain, the Preamble recites, That he was indicted for High-Treaſon by the Grand Jury, That is a Charge of High-Treaſon within the Bill: For it ſays, he was charged by the Oaths of his Country, upon the Oaths of two Witneſſes; and there is the very Overt-Act recited in the Preamble of the Bill. Now, allowing this its due Weight, can any one think, that ſits here as a private Judge, That the High-Treaſon thus recited, as found by the Grand Jury, is no Part of the Charge? The very Nature of the Bill ſpeaks: For could any one think, you would ground a Bill of Attainder upon a Suggeſtion, That he, being indicted of High-Treaſon, had ſpirited away one of the Witneſſes, or given a falſe Information? So that this is trifling with the Houſe, with Submiſſion.

Sir Richard Temple, on the other Side, ſaid, Can any body ſay any Thing of the Intention of the Houſe, when it is reduced into a Bill? Is it not the Bill he is to make his Defence to? And the Gentleman who ſpoke laſt, ſays, That no body could think otherwiſe: Why Sir, no body is to think otherwiſe than as the Bill ſtates it.

Now the Thing before you is, Whether, upon the Suggeſtions in this Bill, it is fit for you to paſs it? The Caſe of Mortimer was, That he had made his Eſcape, being under an Indictment of High-Treaſon, and it came before the Houſe, Whether upon the Statute of 25 Edw. III. it was High-Treaſon? but they did not debate the Fact. Now you have brought a Bill here; and all the Ground is, That he was indicted for High-Treaſon; had thus and thus prevaricated and delayed his Trial upon Promiſes of Confeſſion; and in Concluſion, one of the Witneſſes is withdrawn. Sir, no Man is to make his Defence but to what is in the Bill; nor can you examine to any thing but what is ſuggeſted in the Bill. If you had put the Iſſue upon the Guilt of Sir John Fenwick, he muſt have had a fair Trial in ſome Place, and that he cannot have here upon Oath; for upon all Bills of Attainder hitherto, they have had a fair Trial above (in the Houſe of Peers).

Mr.

1696. 8 W. III.

Mr. Hooper, on the ſame Side, ſaid, The Queſtion is, Whether or no there be a ſufficient Guilt laid to this Man's Charge? For in all Courts of Judicature, this is a certain Rule, you muſt proceed ſecundum allegata & probata; and you ſhall not go about to prove a thing unleſs it be alledged. Now the Queſtion is, Whether this Thing be alledged in the whole Bill, That Sir John Fenwick is guilty of High-Treaſon? And if not, you will not go about to prove what is not alledged. 'Tis true, it is alledged that a Bill hath been found; but ſeveral have been indicted who have been acquitted. It is poſſible the Priſoner at the Bar may be guilty; but I think we muſt obſerve that Method here, that is obſerved every where elſe; and that is, not to go about to prove any thing that is not alledged.

Mr. Sloane, on the other Side, ſaid, I will allow the Bill might have been drawn better, and that a bare Indictment is not a ſufficient Ground of itſelf for a final Deciſion of this Matter: But when, at the Time of finding the Indictment, there were two Witneſſes, and one of them is withdrawn, and, as is ſuppoſed, by his Means; if the Bill ſeems imperfect for any thing before you now, you will not ſtay all Proceedings upon it; but if you ſee it imperfect, and it may be amended, you will amend it at the Committee. I think, the Favour you have given is abuſed, and that it is perfect trifling from the Bar: In one Breath they ſay, They could not get ready, for they had no Notice till laſt Night; and in the next they ſay, They will go on to every thing, but his being guilty; and I believe they never will be prepared for that. Whereupon Mr. Attorney-General ſaid,

Sir, I am very unwilling to ſpeak any thing in this Matter; becauſe, Sir, by the Place I have the Honour to ſerve his Majeſty in, as one of his Counſel, if it was in the Courts below, I muſt proſecute on the Behalf of the King: But, I am very ſenſible, while I am in this Houſe, I am in another Capacity; I am to vote here as a Judge, and not as a Party.

That which I do now trouble you about, is in Relation to the Matter that hath been objected, That the Bill does not expreſly affirm, that Sir John Fenwick was guilty of High-Treaſon, but only that he was indicted for it: Truly, I thought, and do ſtill, with humble Submiſſion to the Houſe, That that Matter of affirming him to be guilty of High-Treaſon, was not to be inſerted in the Bill; for that will be the Conſequence of your Judgment and Opinion upon hearing of the Evidence. That worthy Member that ſpake laſt, ſaid, the Bill might be better drawn: I am ſorry we had not his Aſſiſtance in it; but, with Submiſſion to his Underſtanding, I think that had been too much Preſumption, till you are ſatisfied whether he was guilty or no: We could only go ſo far as to ſet forth the Faults that we knew; as, that he was indicted, that we can verify, and cannot take this to be like the Caſe of an Indictment; for there you muſt affirm ſuch and ſuch Things that cannot be altered afterwards; but a Bill in Parliament hath many Steps, you read it ſeveral Times, and commit it; ſo that you alter the Suggeſtions of the Bill as the Caſe appears to you to be verified; and if you be of Opinion that he is Not guilty, you will not condemn him becauſe he is indicted: However, that is not immaterial, but proper to be ſet forth for a Ground of your Proceedings, That there was a Probability of his being guilty from that Accuſation: Therefore, Sir, I confeſs, I cannot think that thoſe Gentlemen, that are of Counſel for Sir John Fenwick, could think that you did intend to proceed otherwiſe than to hear Counſel as to the Fact; they could not think that, upon Proof of his being indicted, that would be Ground enough for you to proceed to paſs the Bill; for how could any body think, but you would come to examine the Fact? I cannot ſee how they ſhould come to miſtake, unleſs it was wilfully.

Colonel Granvill, on the other Side, ſaid, Sir, the Counſel (by what I obſerved from them) have ſtarted two Difficulties, and really (to me) both ſeem very material: The Firſt is, whether the King's Counſel ſhall be at Liberty to prove any thing that is not ſuggeſted in the Bill; the Other is, whether Sir John Fenwick had due Notice to make his Defence.

The Firſt is a Matter of very great Moment: You are proceeding upon a Bill, where not only the Life of Sir John Fenwick, but the Life of every Man in England, is in ſome Meaſure concerned: When a Precedent is made in this Caſe, no body knows who may be affected or hurt by it; and therefore I deſire you will ſettle that Matter, and have the Judgment of the Houſe, whether they will admit the Counſel to prove any thing that is not ſuggeſted in the Bill: If you will, I do not ſee how any Man that ſtands at the Bar of your Houſe can be prepared to make his Defence; for there ſhall be one Crime alledged in the Bill, and when he comes to the Bar, the Counſel that are to proſecute, ſhall go quite off from that which is laid in the Bill, and produce you Evidence to a new Crime; and he ſtares and looks round him, and you had as good allow him no Counſel or Copy of the Bill. This you thought ſo neceſſary for every Man, that was to come upon his Trial for his Life, for Treaſon, that you altered that Trial, and declared, No Man ſhould have any Treaſon proved againſt him, that is not alledged againſt him in the Indictment.

We have had great Complaints of Weſtminſter-Hall, and, if the Parliament ſhould proceed in this Manner, may have the ſame again: If they are too raſh in their Proceedings, they will be countenanced mightily in them, if you ſhould proceed againſt a Man, and condemn him for one Thing when he is accuſed of another. I deſire to know how we can proceed in a Bill, upon which Sir John Fenwick is to be proved guilty, and he hath no Opportunity to anſwer it? I take it, as this Bill is drawn, Sir John Fenwick's Guilt is no way concerned in it: For, whereas the worthy Gentlemen tell you, the Treaſon is ſpecified, there is no Treaſon ſpecified, otherwiſe than he is indicted for it.

Mr. Whitaker, on the other Side, ſaid, As to the Exceptions made to the Inſufficiency of the Bill, by which they pretend Sir John Fenwick was led into an Error, ſo that he had no due Notice; I muſt needs ſay, if they had been in Weſtminſter-Hall, they would have been in the Right: But this Houſe is not bound to thoſe Forms; for, I believe, the enacting Clauſe would do the Buſineſs of Sir John Fenwick well enough, enough, if all the reſt were laid aſide; and I will conſider it, with as much Tenderneſs and Conſcience for the Priſoner at the Bar, as any that bring Arguments from Weſtminſter-Hall: I would conſider, whether ſuch a Defence as they have made, that from the Bill (as to what is laid in it) he had not Notice enough to prepare to make his Anſwer. They ſay, a Recital is no direct Affirmation: In Civil Matters, it is an Affirmation; for to ſay, Whereas ſuch a one is bound, is good in a Declaration upon a Bond; now, I would know, Whether it be not enough to ſay, That he is indicted, without an Allegation that he is guilty? Had the Bill no Recital at all, it might have been neceſſary for them to have deſired the Opinion of the Houſe, to what they ſhould have anſwered; but here the Treaſon is ſpecified in the Preamble of the Bill; and I agree, that the King's Counſel ought not to give Evidence of any Treaſon that is not ſo ſpecified.

Sir Edward Seymour, addreſſing himſelf to ſpeak on the other Side, and obſerving a great many Lords in the Gallery, ſaid, My Lords, and you Mr. Speaker, what hath been ſaid by that worthy Perſon that ſpoke laſt, no doubt, is true; That if there had been no more than the enacting Clauſe, it would have done Sir John Fenwick's Buſineſs, with a Witneſs, or, rather, without a Witneſs. But that is not the Queſtion we are diſputing here; the Queſtion is, Whether you will give Sir John Fenwick longer Time to make his Defence to that Part he inſiſts on, which is not contained in the Bill? You are well ſatisfied, you cannot go through with the Suggeſtions to Night, and the Debates, and what relates to them; and I find no Perſon againſt putting it off, but becauſe it would be a Delay; and, if it be no Delay, that Reaſon is out of Doors. They tell you, the Counſel could not but take Notice of the Matters ſuggeſted in the Indictment; I cannot think that is reaſonably argued, becauſe they do know the Practice and Method is ſuch, that they can take Notice of nothing but what is ſpecified and contained in the Bill; and therefore, there being no Guilt charged on Sir John Fenwick in the Bill, is it reaſonable they ſhould come and accuſe themſelves here, or make a Defence to what is not charged? No: But, ſay they, it is implied. This is an untrodden Path, and you ought to walk as ſecurely in it as you can. 'Tis extraordinary that you bring Sir John Fenwick here to anſwer for Treaſon, when it is allowed, in the Suggeſtions of the Bill, you have but one Witneſs to that Treaſon; and, when you take theſe extraordinary Steps, you ſhould comply with him as much as you can in Forms: For if Treaſon be not Treaſon, unleſs it be proved by two Witneſſes, and you will give him Liberty to make his Defence, I think it no Loſs of Time (for you cannot go through the Bill to Night) to ſee whether Sir John Fenwick be guilty of what is contained in the Indictment: And I will give you one Reaſon, why he could not be prepared to make his Defence in ſo ſhort a Time, namely, becauſe he could not produce his Evidence, if he had any; and, if you give him longer Time, I ſuppoſe you will think fit that Sir John Fenwick ſhould give an Account of what Witneſſes he ſhall make uſe of for his Defence, and give him an Order for thoſe Witneſſes to attend.

1696 8 W. III.

Mr. Harley, of the ſame Side, ſaid, I find all Gentlemen that ſpeak of this Subject, do ſay, that this Matter is of an extraordinary Nature, and you have entered into it by very extraordinary Methods: But I muſt obſerve, that this being the firſt Bill of this kind, that hath been brought into the Houſe before any Proof, Gentlemen muſt be excuſed if they are cautious what Steps they take; and when the Wiſdom of the Houſe hath thought fit to take quite different Methods as to the Preliminaries, it is not to be wondered at if they meet with Difficulties in their Proceedings.

Some Gentlemen preſs for more Time to be given Sir John Fenwick, to be prepared; and others urge, that you ſhould declare, whether the Counſel ſhould be heard to any thing, but what is ſuggeſted in the Bill: And, I think, you muſt give a Determination to the laſt Queſtion, though the Houſe agree to give him longer Time: For if you give him longer Time, it will afterwards come to the ſame Debate, Whether they ſhall be heard to any thing but what is ſuggeſted in the Bill? If you ſhould think fit to add any thing, then it will be reaſonable that he ſhould be alſo heard to that; for in the Caſe of the Death of a Man, let him deſerve never ſo much, yet he does not deſerve to die unjuſtly by our Hands. It ſeems a very plain Propoſition, that when a Man is accuſed, he ſhould not anſwer to what he is not charged with; and to charge it with Innuendo's and Implications is ſo uncertain, that I have always ſeen it denied in this Houſe; ſo I hope, I ſhall not ſee ſo great an Aſſembly give Countenance to it. They did tell you, they were prepared to ſpeak to the Reaſonableneſs of the Bill; but this Matter not being ſuggeſted, they are not prepared to ſpeak to it.

This Debate continued till it was very late, and at length two Queſtions were, by the Direction of the Houſe, put by Mr. Speaker. Reſolved to give Sir John further Time; but that Evidence might be given of the Treaſon in the Indictment.

1. That Sir John Fenwick be allowed further Time to produce Witneſſes in his Defence, againſt the Charge of High-Treaſon; and that he name his Witneſſes.

2. That the Counſel, that manage the Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick, be allowed to produce Witneſſes, touching the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treaſons whereof he ſtands indicted.

Both which being reſolved in the Affirmative, Sir John Fenwick was called in again; and Mr. Speaker acquainted him, that the Houſe was willing to give him till Monday next to make his Defence; and that if he gave in a Liſt of his Witneſſes, he might have his Warrant for their appearing at that Time.

Sir John brought to the Bar again.

Sir John being brought to the Bar again, on Monday Morning about Eleven o'Clock, Mr. Serjeant Gould opened the Charge and the Evidence again, in the ſame Manner he had done the firſt Day, and therefore it is unneceſſary to repeat it here: After which Captain Porter was called as a Witneſs for the King, and gave the ſame Evidence he had done at the Trials of the other Conſpirators, of their meeting at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-Street, and at Mrs. Mountjoy's, at St. James's; at both which Places he affirmed Sir John was preſent, and agreed to ſend over Charnock to France, to invite over French Troops; and that Sir John and all the Company agreed, to raiſe two thouſand Horſe here, and join them on their Landing.

Porter's Evidence.

Then

1696. 8 W. III.

Evidence offered of Lady Fenwick's tampering with the Witneſſes. Oppoſed by Sir John's Counſel.

Then Mr. Serjeant Gould was proceeding to aſk Porter concerning the Lady Fenwick's and Clancy's tampering with him, which Sir John's Counſel oppoſed: They ſaid, Where a Law was to be made ſubſequent to the Fact, to condemn a Man to Death, they hoped they would expect legal Evidence at leaſt. It has been ſaid, indeed, in the Lord Strafford's Caſe, that where the Houſe proceeded in a legiſlative Way, there needed no Evidence at all; but they hoped the Houſe would be of another Opinion: That here they were about to ſhew that my Lady Fenwick, the Wife of the Priſoner, had uſed Means to take off Goodman's Evidence; but what was ſaid by a Man's Wife, could not be made uſe of againſt him, or for him, in any Court whatever; nor was ever offered, except in the Caſe of the Lord Audley, and that was held to be contrary to Law ever ſince; and though the Houſe had declared the King's Counſel might produce Evidence of the Allegation in the Bill, and the Treaſons in the Indictment, they had not ordered they ſhould produce Evidence concerning the carrying away of a Witneſs; nor was it alledged in the Bill, that Goodman was withdrawn by Sir John Fenwick's Privity: And as to Porter's being tampered with, there was no ſuch Suggeſtion in the Bill.

The Counſel for the Bill inſiſt on this Evidence.

To this the Counſel for the Bill anſwered, They only made uſe of it, as preparatory to let them in to tell what Goodman had ſworn, and they would afterwards produce an Indictment, where, upon Goodman's Oath, and the ſame Evidence they offered here, another of the Conſpirators had been convicted: That this was Part of the ſame Contrivance they charged the Priſoner with, to prevent his being brought to condign Puniſhment; and therefore, let the Proceedings of other Courts be what they would, they hoped the Houſe would hear the whole Matter, whether the Evidence was poſitive or circumſtantial.

The Priſoner's Counſel replied, What my Lady Fenwick had ſaid or done was not ſo much as circumſtantial Evidence; for it was no Evidence at all againſt her Husband.

A Debate in the Houſe thereupon.

The Priſoner and the Counſel being withdrawn, the Houſe entered upon the Debate, Whether Evidence ſhould be admitted of the Lady Fenwick's tampering with the Witneſſes? And thoſe who were for hearing this Evidence, obſerved, That if they were tied up by the Forms and Methods of inferior Courts, it was to no Purpoſe to bring the Priſoner before the Houſe; if he could have been convicted in the Courts below, there was no Occaſion for this Bill: That in the Courts of Common Law all Facts were tried by Juries, but here the whole Houſe ſat as Judges: A common Jury might be influenced by illegal or incompetent Evidence, which might not be fit, therefore, for them to hear; but in the Court of Chancery ſuch Evidence was admitted every Day; and the Reaſon was, that a Cauſe was diſpatched ſooner by hearing it than not: That here they ought to inform themſelves by the beſt Lights they could get; and if it ſhould appear Sir John employed his Lady to tamper with the Witneſſes, it would have ſome Weight with them.

Arguments for admitting this Evidence.

Arguments againſt it.

On the other Hand it was obſerved, That if the Houſe was not governed by the Rules of inferior Courts, they ought to be guided, however, by that which was the Ground of their Practice, namely, Reaſon and good Senſe, and the common Rules of Equity: The Houſe would not puniſh one Perſon for the Act of another. The Counſel for the Bill had not ſo much as opened, that Sir John was inſtrumental in the withdrawing of Goodman; and if the Lady Fenwick was concerned in it, this could only affect Sir John by way of Inference. But the Queſtion being put, That Porter be examined to the Attempt of taking off his Teſtimony, it was reſolved in the Affirmative.

1696. 8 W. III.

The Houſe reſolve to admit it.

Then Sir John, with the Counſel and Witneſſes, being called in, and Porter required to give an Account what Attempts had been made to take off his Teſtimony, he anſwered, That Clancy offered him three hundred Guineas to go into France, and to bear his Charges thither; that he promiſed him three hundred more on his Arrival there, and that three hundred Pounds a Year ſhould be ſettled upon him: That Clancy met him ſeven or eight Times upon this Affair, and told him, the Ladies Fenwick and Montgomery would confirm every Thing he had ſaid; and accordingly, the Day before he was to go, the Lady Fenwick met him, (this Witneſs) and promiſed, that what Clancy had propoſed ſhe would certainly make good. That Clancy actually paid him the firſt three hundred Guineas, and promiſed him a Bill for three hundred more, which he ſaid was depoſited in his Hands by one Fenwick, to be ſent after him into France. That Clancy alſo brought a Letter, which he ſaid was written by Sir John Fenwick to King James, on his Behalf, and he (the Witneſs) read it, and then it was delivered to one Captain Donelagh, who was to go with him; and the Writer deſired his Majeſty, in that Letter, he would pleaſe to pardon what he (Porter) had done, ſince his going away was to ſave the Lords Aylesbury and Montgomery, and other Friends: The Letter was not ſubſcribed by Sir John, but he was told, King James would know who it came from; and they acquainted him, a Boat was provided, in which he was to have gone the next Day, but they were taken up ſoon after.

Porter's Evidence of their tampering with him.

Then Mr. Roe was called as a Witneſs, who teſtified, That having ſome Buſineſs with Dighton, Sir John's Solicitor, Dighton took an Opportunity to acquaint him, that it lay in his (Roe's) Power to do Sir John a Piece of Service, as he was acquainted with Goodman; and that, if he could diſcredit Goodman's Teſtimony, he ſhould have an hundred a Year ſettled on him for Life: That Dighton particularly aſked him, if he ever heard of Goodman's attempting to poiſon the Duke of Norfolk, of his robbing on the Highway, or of his being concerned with Clippers: And that he (Roe) immediately went and told Goodman of the Propoſal that had been made him; whereupon Goodman adviſed him to get ſomething under Dighton's Hand; and that Dighton afterwards made ſolemn Proteſtations, that what he had promiſed ſhould be punctually performed: And that Goodman alſo told him (Roe), that Sir John Fenwick's Siſter had been with him, and made ſome Overtures. Clancy's Conviction alſo was read, as Evidence againſt the Priſoner.

Roe's Evidence.

1696. 8 W. III.

Goodman's Examination offered as Evidence. Opposed by Sir John's Counsel.

Then the Counsel for the Bill were about to read the Examination of Goodman, taken by Mr. Secretary Vernon, which the Prisoner's Counsel opposed, representing, that an Examination ought not to be read against Sir John Fenwick, to which he was neither Party or privy, and had no Opportunity of cross-examining the Witness: That in a Suit for the Value of five Shillings, an Examination could not be read as Evidence; and if it was not admitted where Property was concerned in the lowest Degree, much less ought it to be admitted in a Case of Life.—That the Deposition of a Person beyond Sea could not be read in Civil Cases, unless the Party, against whom it was read, had been privy to the Examination, and had an Opportunity of cross-examining him, or objecting to his Credit: But in Criminal Cases it was never admitted; and even in an Appeal of Murder, the Depositions taken before the Coroner could not be read, because it was another Suit, as this was no more than an Information before a Justice of Peace: If Goodman had been dead it could not have been given in Evidence; or if he had been sick, or withdrawn without the Prisoner's Privity, it would not have been Evidence in any other Place.

The Counsel for the Bill answer them.

The Counsel for the Bill, on the other Hand, insisted, That though an Examination could not be read where the Witness might be produced, yet it was every Day's Practice to read Depositions where the Witnesses were dead, and here the Witness was withdrawn: And it appeared there had been tampering with another, from whence it may be presumed Goodman was tampered with too; and one Reason for bringing this Matter before the Parliament was, to provide a Remedy against such Practices; nor did there want Instances of reading an Information, even in a Capital Case, where it appeared the Witness was withdrawn by the Practice of the Prisoner, as this Case was: However, they observed this House was not tied up by ordinary Rules. The Counsel for the Bill added, That they did not offer this Evidence as conclusive alone, but to corroborate Porter's Testimony, who had given his Evidence viva voce: But the Counsel for the Prisoner still affirming, That no such Examinations were ever read in Capital Cases, both the Prisoner and the Counsel were withdrawn, and the House debated that Matter among themselves.

A Debate as to the reading Goodman's Examination.

One Gentleman said, he never till now heard any of the Long Robe endeavour to maintain, that an Examination before a Justice of Peace ought to be read as Evidence against a Man for his Life. To which another answered, that the Lord Chief Justice Hales, in his Pleas of the Crown, under the Head of Evidence, held, That such Examinations might be given in Evidence, where the Party was dead or absent. Another Member replied, That such Depositions were never given in Evidence in the worst of Times; even at the Trial of the Lord Mordant, when Juries were disused, it would not be admitted; and they were tried by the Rules of Law, or they were tried by nothing.

Arguments for it.

Another said, He should not look upon himself to be so tied up by the Rules of Law, but that he might hear all the Evidence that could be offered: If they could not have the two Witnesses, on whose Testimony the Bill was found, they would take such Evidence as they could get: And one said, he had seen a Justice of Peace examined concerning the Depositions he had taken, and he took it to be ordinarily done.

1696. 8 W. III.

Arguments against it.

On the other Side, a learned Member observed, That if they were to collect all the Absurdities out of the Trials of the late Reigns, they would not find more than had been advanced by the Counsel for the Bill; and if those Depositions were Evidence, where the Witness was absent, there had been no need of this extraordinary Way of proceeding in Parliament. This Gentleman was seconded by another, who observed, That Bills of Attainder, and Judgments of Attainder, had been reversed, for no other Reason, but because the Parliament had not proceeded by the Rules of Law; and if they were not bound by the Rules of Inferior Courts, yet they must by the Laws and Practice of Parliaments; and it was never known that this House ever admitted Affidavits as Evidence; for if they did, they must make this, which was a Superior Court, lame and defective, and to want the Assistance of an Inferior Court.

For it.

It was replied, by a Gentleman for the Bill, That though this might be Evidence in Felony, in a Court of Law, yet it could not be deemed Evidence there in Treason, because the Law required two living Witnesses in Treason; there was a Necessity therefore of resorting to the Parliament: But in Cases of Felony, where two Witnesses were not required, such Evidence was admitted frequently; The Lord Chief Justice Hales's Opinion, also, was so, and that was grounded on an Act of Parliament.

Another Member's Reasons against it.

A Gentleman, who was against the Bill, thereupon observed, That if an Act of Parliament could be produced for it, the Debate was at an End; but if there was an Act positively against such Evidence, then he hoped they would reject it: That the Case in the Lord Chief Justice Hales related only to Felony; He says, that Informations may be taken of the Person himself, (though not by the Common Law) by particular Acts of Parliament; and the Depositions of Witnesses might be admitted, but then the Party ought to be present; and if they would produce a Statute for an Authority, they must offer a Statute that was in Point: He thought it was of the last Consequence to admit Affidavits in that House.

Answered by the other Side.

To this a Member for the Bill answered, There had been a Statute lately made, indeed, which required two living Witnesses in Treason; but in that very Statute it was provided, that Proceedings in Parliament should not be affected by it; and he was not for refusing any Evidence in this Case, though never so small. And a Gentleman observing, on the other Side, that an Affidavit was never read in Case of an Impeachment, which very much resembled this:

A Member for the Bill took notice, That all the Cases that had been cited, were brought from Inferior Courts, except the last, which related to the Usage in less considerable Cases; But a Bill of Attainder was an extraordinary Thing, and never used but upon extraordinary Occasions: The Question here was only as to the Forms of their Proceedings; and the Law had entrusted the Parliament with a greater Power than they were now about to execute: They might declare that to be a Crime, which was deemed no Crime before it was committed; and ſurely they might determine what they would admit as Evidence of a Crime: Another added, There was lodged in the Legiſlature, a Power to judge thoſe Crimes that were ſheltered from the Law; and he thought never any Attainder was brought in upon a juſter Occaſion than this: The Priſoner was not only in a Plot to bring in a Foreign Power; but had given in a falſe and ſcandalous Information, to create a Diſtruſt and Jealouſy between the King and his People; and had trifled with the Government, and gained ſo much Time, that he had found an Opportunity to corrupt one of the Witneſſes; and it would be hard, if the Legiſlative Power could not reach him.

1696. 8 W. III.

A Reply by the Members againſt it.

It was replied by the other Side, That though this Houſe was not bound by the Rules of inferior Courts, they ought to give ſuch Rules and make ſuch Precedents as were fit for other Courts to imitate: That this might be a dangerous Precedent for future Parliaments to act by: For ſuppoſe the Information Sir John Fenwick had given in, ſhould hereafter be produced as Evidence againſt any of thoſe Honourable Perſons he had accuſed; and ſome Raſcal in a future Reign ſhould come in alſo againſt them, would it not be thought a great Hardſhip, and a Piece of Injuſtice, to make ſuch a Paper to ſupply the Place of a ſecond Witneſs; and paſs a Bill to attaint them of High-Treaſon on ſuch Evidence? Of what Conſequence would this be?

Reſolved that Goodman's Examination ſhould be read.

But the Queſtion being put, That the Information of Cordell Goodman, taken upon Oath, the twenty-fourth of April, 1696, ſhould be read: It was carried in the Affirmative; Yeas, 218, Noes, 145.

The Tenor of it.

Then the Priſoner and the Counſel were called in again; and the Information of Goodman, made before Mr. Secretary Vernon, was read; wherein he depoſed, That there had been a Conſpiracy to ſeize the Perſon of King William, and raiſe a Rebellion, for two Years then laſt paſt: That the Conſpirators had applied themſelves to King James for a Commiſſion to countenance the Attempt; but that Prince was angry that his Name had been uſed in it: Then he gave the ſame Account of the Meeting of the Conſpirators at the King's-Head; and their ſending over Charnock to France, to procure a Body of French Troops, as Porter had done: And further depoſed, That Sir John Fenwick uſed to ſend over Liſts to France of the Number of our Forces here, and where they were quartered from Time to Time: And that after Colonel Parker eſcaped out of the Tower, he (the Informant) asking Sir John Fenwick how much Money it coſt to procure the Colonel's Eſcape, Sir John anſwered, 300 l. And that it was agreed, If Colonel Parker did not bring timely Orders, He (Goodman) and Porter ſhould receive their Orders from Sir John Fenwick, when the Forces were to be raiſed; and that Sir John looking upon it as dangerous to keep their Horſes together, leſt they ſhould be ſeized, thought it the beſt Way to have them diſperſed in the Stables about Town, and a Liſt made of their Numbers, and the Places where they ſtood.

1696. 8 W. III.

The Grand Jury-men examined.

Then the Counſel for the Bill called ſome of the Grand Jury-men, who found the Indictment againſt Sir John, to give an Account what Evidence Goodman gave to induce them to find the Bill: And though it was objected by the Priſoner's Counſel, That an Indictment it ſelf was but an Accuſation, and could not be given in Evidence againſt any Man; and that nothing which was ſworn before the Grand Jury was ever made uſe of at the Trial of the Priſoner; yet a Majority of the Houſe being of Opinion that this was good Evidence in this Caſe, Gracedieu and Mead, two of the Jury, were examined, and teſtified, That Goodman gave the ſame Evidence before them, he had given at his Examination before Mr. Secretary Vernon (already recited).

The Record of Cook's Conviction offered as Evidence.

The Counſel for the Bill afterwards produced the Record of Cook's Conviction; alledging, That the Evidence Goodman gave at that Trial affected Sir John Fenwick as much as it did Mr. Cook; To which the Priſoner's Counſel objected, That this was ſuch Evidence as was never given in a Court of Law: For at this Rate, the Trial of one Conſpirator would be the Trial of all the reſt; and they hoped it would not be admitted here.

Oppoſed.

Whereupon the Counſel for the Bill anſwered, Thoſe Gentlemen made their Objections as if they were in the inferior Courts: But the Houſe here were Judges of the Methods of coming at the Truth: And that, a Witneſs being withdrawn by Artifice, they came there to get that Defect ſupplied.

The Priſoner and the Counſel being withdrawn again, the Houſe entered upon the Debate of this Matter: And a Gentleman, who was againſt the Bill, obſerved, That ſuch Evidence had never been admitted in a Court of Law, or in that Houſe; namely, the Evidence that was given at the Trial of another, made Evidence againſt a Perſon who was not preſent, and had no Opportunity of defending himſelf againſt it: Another Member demanded, If they were to read all the Trials for the Plot? Whereupon it was demanded, by a Gentleman who was for the Bill, Why they admitted the Evidence Goodman had given to the Grand Jury to be repeated? This was but the Evidence of what he had ſaid to the Petit Jury: If nothing but ſtrict Proof was to be offered, this Bill had never been brought in; but they were to accept of ſuch Proof as the Nature of the Thing would bear.

To which the other Side anſwered, If they had determined at firſt, that they would not expect legal Proof, they might have ſhortned their Debates pretty much: Another ſaid, They were put upon paſſing a Bill of Attainder againſt a Man, and were not allowed to talk of Proof: If they had no Evidence for it, he was ſure there was Evidence againſt it: For at Cook's Trial, two or three Witneſſes had ſworn, that Goodman was not at the Meeting at the King's-Head, where he ſwore he was. Another Gentleman put them in Mind, that a great many Judgments in the late Reign had been reverſed, becauſe they received ſuch Evidence at thoſe Trials, as was not legal Evidence; and that this this Grievance was taken Notice of in their Bill of Rights.

To which it was replied, by a Gentleman for the Bill, That had Goodman ſworn at that Trial, that Sir John Fenwick was not at the King's-Head, Sir John might have produced a Witneſs, to prove what he had ſworn; and why might not the Evidence which made againſt him be proved? Whereupon a Member, who was againſt the Bill, replied, It was one Thing to produce a Record to convict or attaint a Perſon, and another, when it was produced, to prove a Man perjured, or to invalidate his Teſtimony: For when Evidence was brought againſt a Priſoner, he had no Way to leſſen it, but by what was collateral: And where the Witneſs had given contrary Evidence at another Trial, or the Priſoner had been acquitted, Then the Record might be made uſe of againſt that Witneſs; but could never be made uſe of to convict or attaint any Perſon.

The other Side ſaid, They did agree, that neither the Conviction of Cook, nor any Evidence upon his Conviction, could be Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick: But it was one of the Allegations in the Bill, That ſeveral Gentlemen were preſent at the Meeting at the King's-Head, where Sir John Fenwick was charged to be; and they produced it to make good that Allegation: And the Queſtion being put, That the Record of the Conviction of Peter Cook be read, it paſſed in the Affirmative; Ayes 181, Noes 110; and accordingly that Record was read.

Reſolved to read the Record of Cook's Conviction.

The next Thing the Counſel for the Bill propoſed, was, to examine ſome of the Jurymen who ſerved at Cook's Trial, and ſome other Witneſſes, to prove what Goodman had ſworn at that Trial; which the Connſel for the Priſoner oppoſing, they were all ordered to withdraw again.

The Evidence of what Goodman ſwore at Cook's Trial offered.

Then a Member, who was againſt the Bill, ſaid, He thought it had been admitted by the other Side, in the former Debate, That no ſuch Evidence ought to be admitted: But, if they were not to be guided by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, he was ſure they ought not to ſeek a Way to the King's Favour, by attainting a Man of High-Treaſon, upon incompetent Evidence.

A Debate thereupon.

It was ſaid on the other Side, That it was every Day's Practice in Civil Caſes, to hear what a Witneſs had ſaid at another Trial between the ſame Parties, where a Witneſs was dead: To which it was anſwered, That in thoſe Courts a Witneſs muſt ſwear true at his Peril; for if he did not, he might be puniſhed for it: But here, if he takes away a Man's Life by what he ſays, What Remedy was there againſt him?

Others ſaid, If there was not another Place where the Witneſſes would be ſworn, they could not give their Conſent to the paſſing this Bill, for the Witneſſes for the Priſoner were not ſworn: So that they could only give an Opinion upon the Probability of the Matter.

Another Member againſt the Bill, ſaid, He could not but take notice of what had been ſaid by the other Side, That they had done as much as this comes to already: This made him ſtill more apprehenſive, and to take care what he did now; ſince what the Houſe did, had ſo quick an Operation, and they were already citing Precedents of that very Day, and ſtill making one Thing a Handle to draw on another.

Reſolved to examine the Witneſſes of what Goodman ſwore at Cook's Trial.

However, it was reſolved upon the Queſtion, That the Counſel for the Bill ſhould be allowed to examine Witneſſes of what Goodman ſwore at the Trial of Cook; Ayes 180, Noes 102: And thereupon the Priſoner and the Counſel being called in again, two or three of the Jury-men at Cook's Trial were examined, as to what Goodman ſaid at that Trial; and anſwered, That Goodman depoſed, he was introduced into the Company of the Conſpirators at the King's-Head, by Mr. Porter; and there Sir John Fenwick and the reſt agreed to ſend Charnock to France, to procure Forces from thence; and another Perſon, who was preſent at Cook's Trial, teſtified the ſame: And it being demanded of the Witneſs, If any Exception was taken then to Goodman's Credit? He anſwered, It was objected that Goodman had been guilty of ſeveral Crimes; to which it was ſaid, he had his Pardon, and was then a good Witneſs. Then the Counſel for the Bill deſired to read the Letter above-mentioned, to be written from Sir John Fenwick to his Lady from Romney, after he was apprehended: But Sir John's Counſel inſiſted, that this Caſe came ſhort even of Colonel Sidney's; for there, as the Act of Reverſal recited, The Writing was found in the Colonel's Cloſet, and proved to be his Writing by a Compariſon of Hands; and yet that was held to be illegal Evidence: But here was no Proof even by Compariſon of Hands, or that the Letter was ever in Sir John Fenwick's Poſſeſſion: And at length, the Counſel for the Bill, thought fit to waive this Piece of Evidence: And it being now very late, Sir John's Counſel were ordered to make their Obſervations on the Evidence for the Priſoner the next Morning: But were told, If they had any Witneſſes to examine, they muſt produce them that Evening; for they could not hear Witneſſes afterwards: To which Sir John's Counſel anſwering, They ſhould call no Witneſſes; but when they came to ſpeak, they ſhould give the Houſe Satisfaction why they did not think it neceſſary to produce any; the Priſoner and his Counſel withdrew, and the Houſe ſoon after broke up.

Sir John's Letter to his Lady offered as Evidence; but rejected, the Hand not being proved.

On Tueſday, the 17th of November, Sir John Fenwick and the Counſel on both Sides were called in again; and the Speaker directing the Counſel for Sir John to make their Obſervations on the Evidence that had been given, Sir Thomas Powis ſaid, Mr. Speaker, I am of Counſel for Sir John Fenwick, who now ſtands before you, upon the greateſt Concern he can have in the World; and as you have been pleaſed to aſſign us to be of Counſel for him, and, I muſt own, have very favourably heard us hitherto; ſo I ſhall think my ſelf very unfortunate, if I ſhould let fall any Expreſſion in his Defence, that would ſeem indecent and give Offence to this Houſe, for I am ſure I have no Intention to do it; but, on the contrary, to behave myſelf with all the Deference that is poſſible, in a Caſe of this Nature. I ſhall inſiſt upon three Heads: 1. The Manner of Proceeding, and Method that hath been taken in this Proſecution: 2. I ſhall take notice of thoſe Things that are alledged againſt him in the Bill: And, 3. I ſhall beg your Favour, to obſerve what Sort of Proofs Obſervations on the Evidence by Sir Thomas Powis.

1696. 8 W. III.

Proofs they have offered on the other Side; and which they call Evidence.

As to the First Matter, I must intreat the Favour of you to be thus understood; That when I say any thing in Relation to the Manner of Proceeding, I do not speak in Opposition to the Power of Parliaments; for I know very well, that our Lives and Estates, and all that we have, are subject to Acts of Parliament: But I hope you will permit me to offer some Reasons, which (I hope) may be of Weight, in Opposition to the exercising of that Power, in the Way you are now going. No body can say, but when an Act of Parliament is passed, though the Party concerned may think it was upon hard Terms; yet, when it is become a Law, it is not to be opposed. I cannot say, but those Persons, who in the last Sessions were imprisoned by an Act ex post facto, and subsequent to the Fact complained of, might think it a Hardship; yet when it was passed into a Law, they were legally detained: But, I hope, I may so far take notice of their Case, as some Kind of Reason against this, to the End that those Laws may not grow familiar, that they may not easily be obtained; because Precedents generally grow; and as that Law ex post facto extended to Liberty, so this extends to Life: One Precedent is apt to beget another; and therefore surely you will be careful how you give Precedents, especially in Cases of Life.

The first Thing I observe is obvious; that is, The Person who is to be sentenced by this Bill is forth-coming, in order to be tried in the ordinary Method of Justice. He is not only indicted, and actually under Process, but hath pleaded; and is ready when his Majesty, in the Course of Justice, shall call upon him, to undergo his Trial: And either there is sufficient Evidence, legal Evidence against him, as the King's Serjeant insisted there was; and if there be so, then, under Favour, there is no Reason but he should have the Benefit of an Ordinary Trial, which is the Birthright of all the King's Subjects: Or there is not such Evidence against him; and if there be not, it will be a good Reason against the making a particular Law for taking away his Life: For, we think, nothing can be said for this Law, but Want of Evidence; and that, to my Understanding, is a very odd Reason.—Sir, I would not spend Time in taking Notice, That the meanest Subject in the Kingdom is entitled, by being born in this Kingdom, to be tried by a Jury, where there are those just Advantages that cannot be had in another Case: There is a Liberty of challenging thirty-five, without shewing any Reason, and as many more as he can any Way object to with Reason. The Witnesses are upon Oath, and all the Proceedings are by certain known Rules and Methods; and not only by the Statute of Magna Charta, but by the Common Law of England, much more antient than that Statute: And though the Proceedings therein, are such as a Criminal may sometimes escape; yet the just Advantages are so much beyond any thing of that Nature, that I hope we shall never complain of that antient Course of Proceeding by Jury: I am sure it is the Honour of our Government, the Mark of our Freedom, and the Envy of our Neighbours; and I hope that Method of Trial shall never be laid aside, though it sometimes may not have the Effect that is desired by it.

1696. 8 W. III.

I would take notice to you, That in a Case of the greatest Crime, and most Notoriety of Fact; yet the Persons concerned in it were brought to their Trial. The Regicides, who did not fly, but were found upon the Restoration of King Charles II. though their Treason had the worst Effect, even the Murder of the King; yet notwithstanding, though the Fact was so notorious, those that were found upon the Place, were admitted to their Trials, in the ordinary Course of Justice; although at the same Time, there was a Bill of Attainder against some that fled, and some that were dead, and so could not be tried ——— I would, with your Favour, likewise observe, That the Parliaments of England have been so far from depriving Persons of their ordinary Trials, that whereas the common Law of England says, That Persons out-lawed for Treason and Felony, if taken, shall be put to Death without Trial; yet the Parliament, in the Reign of Edward VI. made a Law, providing, That Criminals, who returned within a Year according to that Law, should be admitted to their ordinary Trials.

Sir, all along the Statutes run in Favour of Trials: There are no less than two Acts of Parliament in the Reign of Edward VI. in the first and fifth Years of his Reign; which say, There shall not be less than two Witnesses against any Person for Treason: And I hope I shall never see a Law made so much in Opposition to those Acts, as that a Person shall be sentenced to Death, without so much as one Witness.

Perhaps it may be thought extraordinary, That in the same Parliament that passed a Bill for regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason, requiring two Witnesses with great Strictness, and giving further Advantages to the Prisoner than ever were allowed before; an Act should pass to put a Person to Death, without any Trial at all. Let any one compare the Preamble of that Act with this Bill.

Sir, I take it, with humble Submission, that the present Case is not at all to be likened to most of those Bills of Attainder that may be cited: Those, when they come to be looked into, will be found either to have passed against such Persons as fled from Justice; and therein they only pursued the Rules of the common Law, which allowed them to be out-lawed, and consequently attainted. And the Parliament therefore, in attainting them, did but the same Thing; and therein there was nothing done extraordinary. True it is, that where Persons have been forth-coming, there have been some few Bills of Attainder; but I will presume to say, they are never mentioned without heavy Censures, and a great Complaint against them.

This Case is not like the late Instance of the Bill of Attainder against the Duke of Monmouth, who was present in the Kingdom indeed; but in direct Opposition to any Method of Trial, he stood in Defiance of all Courts of Justice: But here is a Person that submits himself, and hath pleaded, and stands ready to be tried: And I hope I may take notice, to take off all Prejudice that may be raised, That this Gentleman, though he was of the Parliament that passed that Bill (against the 8 W. III. 1696. Duke of Monmouth), yet he was not in Town till a Month, at leaſt, after the Bill was paſſed.

I do agree, there are ſome Caſes where Perſons have been attainted, without being admitted to be tried. In the Beginning of the Reign of Edward III. Roger Mortimer was attainted and executed, without being tried; but in the 28th of Edward III. it was reverſed, becauſe he was not brought to Judgment, according to the Law of the Land. The like happened in the Caſe of Edmund Earl of Arundel, 1 Edw. III. But in 4 Edw. III. Richard his Son petitioned the Parliament, ſetting forth the Proceedings to be againſt the Great Charter; and inſiſting, that there ought to have been due Proceſs of Law; and he was then reſtored in Part: And in the 28th of Edw. III. there was an Act of Reverſal, declaring, That it clearly appeared, that the ſaid Edmund was unduly put to Death; and that the Statute by which he was attainted, was void, erroneous, and null: There is an Inſtance in 32 Hen. VIII. Co. 4. Inſt. fol. 37. of Thomas Cromwell Earl of Eſſex, who, though he was in Cuſtody in the Tower, yet was attainted without being tried: But the Words of my Lord Coke thereupon, are as follows: Auferat oblivio, ſi poteſt; ſi non, utcunque ſilentium tegat: For the more high and abſolute the Juriſdiction of the Court is, the more juſt and honourable ought it to be in its Proceedings; and to give Examples of Juſtice to Inferior Courts. And he adds further, to the End, as I apprehend, that the Reverſal of this Attainder may be of no ill Uſe: I am confidently perſuaded, ſuch worthy and honourable Members, ſhall from Time to Time, be of both Houſes of Parliament, as never any Attainder, when the Perſon is forthcoming, ſhall be had hereafter, without hearing him; which I underſtand to be without trying of him: And it is memorable what my Lord Coke recites, That he, who thus died, attempted the like againſt another.

There is another Caſe of Thomas Seymour, Admiral of England, who was likewiſe attainted by Act of Parliament, and executed, 3 Edw. VI. 1549.——You have an Account thereof in the ſecond Part of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, fol. 98, &c. whither I will refer you, only to read the Sentence of the learned Author, there pronounced againſt him. There is a later Caſe of my Lord Strafford, which every Body knows. I ſhall, as the beſt Account of that Matter, crave Leave to read the Words of the Parliament in the Act of Reverſal: I will not trouble you with reciting the Whole, but only read the Beginning, and ſome other Paſſages.

Whereas Thomas, late Earl of Strafford, was impeached of High-Treaſon, upon Pretence of endeavouring to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws; and called to a publick and ſolemn Arraignment and Trial before the Peers in Parliament, where he made a particular Defence to every Article objected againſt him; inſomuch that the turbulent Party, then ſeeing no Hopes to effect their unjuſt Deſigns, by an ordinary Way and Method of Proceedings, did at laſt reſolve to attempt the Deſtruction and Attainder of the Earl, by an Act of Parliament; to be therefore purpoſely made to condemn him upon Accumulative Treaſon.—It goes on to ſhew it was carried by the Tumult of the People, and then follows ——And to the End that Right be done to the Memory of the deceaſed Earl: Be it further enacted, That all Records and Proceedings of Parliament, relating to the ſaid Attainder, be wholly cancelled, and taken off the File, or otherwiſe defaced and obliterated, to the Intent the ſame may not be viſible in After-Ages, or brought into Example, to the Prejudice of any Perſon whatſoever. So that the Parliament that enacted that Reverſal, did conſider thoſe Proceedings as very evil and unjuſt; and was not willing there ſhould be any Remains of ſuch an Example to future Ages. 1696. 8 W. III.

Sir, having made theſe Obſervations as to the Manner of Proceeding, I come now to that which is the Subject Matter of the Bill at preſent before you, and which we take to be the Charge againſt Sir John Fenwick. I muſt crave Leave to obſerve, that in all Courts of Juſtice, where any Perſon is accuſed, he is to make his Defence ſecundum allegata & probata: 'Tis not enough that a Matter is proved, if it be not alledged; nor that it is alledged, if it be not proved: But if it be both alledged and proved, then it is a full Charge, and requires an Anſwer. It is not only the Law of England, but, I believe, of all Nations; and wherever any Perſon is to make his Defence, eſpecially in Capital Crimes, that to which he is to anſwer, muſt be alledged againſt him; from whence I ſhall obſerve, what is alledged againſt Sir John Fenwick: For I hope we are not concerned to defend him further, than as to what at this Time he is charged with. This Bill of Attainder, as it is drawn, and now ſtands before you, doth not ſo much as alledge, or ſay, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty of the Treaſon whereof he was indicted; and that hath prevented us from producing Witneſſes, to that and ſeveral Matters which the King's Counſel have entered upon: For though you have permitted them to examine Witneſſes to ſeveral Things quite out of the Bill; yet I hope you are not come to any Reſolution, that theſe Matters ſhall be thought fatal to Sir John Fenwick, which are not ſo much as alledged againſt him. We do not therefore think we are bound, or ought to follow them in thoſe Things that are totally out of the Bill; and therefore his being guilty, is not now the Queſtion, becauſe it is not a Charge upon him.

The firſt Thing that is alledged in the Bill, is, That Sir John Fenwick was indicted at the Seſſions, for that which is laid in the Indictment to be Treaſon, (which by and by I ſhall crave Leave to be heard to); and I think no body will ſay, this alone does require any Anſwer, further than to own the Fact, or to deny it: And we do admit, that he was ſo indicted. I need not labour much to clear him of the Conſequence of that alone; for very often innocent Perſons have been indicted and accuſed (for an Indictment is no more than an Accuſation); and this Bill, as I have obſerved, doth not ſay he is guilty. When the Bill hath recited that Matter, it proceeds to take notice, That he, by ſome unfair Prevarications, (for ſo I do agree they were, if the Facts alledged in the Bill are true; which, by the Way, have not been yet proved, by producing one Witneſs) did obtain the King's Clemency to put off his Trial, in Expectation of an ingenuous Confeſſion; which the Bill takes for granted he hath prevaricated in, by charging ſeveral Perſons of Honour

1696. 8 W. III.

Honour and Fidelity with Matters of a high Nature, only by Hear-ſay; and by uſing other unfair Artifices to put off his Trial. How far it is made out, that I muſt ſubmit to you: We think at preſent, there is no Proof of it, and by Conſequence we are not concerned to anſwer it: But had they proved it as fully as it is laid, (though far be it from me to excuſe ſuch a Behaviour); yet, when a Criminal is to be tried for that which will be of fatal Conſequence to him, if he be convicted, no body can ſay it comes near Treaſon, by unfair Means to contrive to put off his Trial.

The next Thing the Bill recites, is, That one of the Witneſſes, who might have been produced againſt him upon his Trial, if it had proceeded as was intended, is ſince withdrawn. I cannot ſay but Goodman is withdrawn; but as the Bill does not ſo much as alledge, that it was by the Means, or Procurement, or Privity of Sir John Fenwick, ſo from thence that Part of the Bill charges no Offence home to Sir John Fenwick: For in Caſe the ſame Witneſs had happened to have died by the Act of God, that would not have been a good Reaſon for this Bill of Attainder againſt Sir John Fenwick, unleſs he had contributed to it.—— From theſe Premiſes follows the enacting Part, That Sir John Fenwick be attainted of High-Treaſon; and in future Times the Act muſt be ſuppoſed to be grounded upon the Inducement to it: And I humbly ſubmit it to you, whether this Bill, condemning him for High-Treaſon, upon ſuch Recitals, will be thought Reaſonable. Theſe being the Allegations of the Bill, I will now, with your Favour, come to that which they, on the other Side, do call Proofs; and I muſt humbly obſerve to you, and ſubmit it to your Judgments, Whether, in a Caſe where a Man's Life is to be taken away, by a ſubſequent Law made on Purpoſe for him, the Proofs in that Caſe ought not to be much more evident, than if he were to be tried by a Law already in being? In my poor Apprehenſion (I ſpeak it with all Submiſſion to you, Sir,) it would be too much, at once to make a ſubſequent Law to condemn a Man to Death, and to do it upon doubtful and uncertain Evidence, or rather upon no Proof at all: Nothing could excuſe ſuch a Law, but an undeniable Proof of the Fact. And, therefore, ſurely the Poſition we find of Mr. St. John's, in Lord Strafford's Caſe, is of moſt dangerous Conſequence. I am afraid none are ſafe if that be admitted, That a ſubſequent Law may take away a Man's Life without any Evidence, other than the private Opinion or Conſcience of every particular Law-maker. He is pleaſed ſo to aſſert, That it may be done, as in Ruſhworth's Hiſtory of that Trial, Fol. 677. I am ſure if this be ſo, no Man knows how long his Life is his own: I hope this Doctrine ſhall never be followed or approved. Sir, we have the Happineſs to live under an Eſtabliſhment, that every Man does, or may, know the Law he is to go by: Every one is bound, at his Peril, to take Notice of the Laws, and to act accordingly, becauſe they may be known: But at this Rate none but Prophets can live amongſt us. In the next Place, I would obſerve, what Courſe they have taken in their Evidence who are the King's Counſel. Firſt, they have betaken themſelves to that which is not alledged in the Bill; and we think that this is not agreeable to a Courſe of Juſtice.

1696. 8 W. III.

In the next Place, to make out that they inſiſt on, they have produced but one Perſon, that comes hither viva voce to ſpeak to it; and I muſt take Notice to you, that he is not upon Oath. I know very well, it is not your Courſe in this Houſe, to adminiſter an Oath; yet, I hope, that is ſo far from being a Reaſon why this Bill ſhould paſs here without an Oath, that it is a good Reaſon why ſuch a Bill ſhould not begin here. There is no Place in the World where a Perſon is ſentenced to Death without an Oath: In the Caſe of my Lord Strafford, the Proceeding firſt was by way of Impeachment, and the Witneſſes had been firſt examined upon Oath in the Houſe of Peers; and the Bill of Attainder takes Notice of it, reciting that it had been fully proved; and, by Conſeqence, we may ſuppoſe, that they would not otherwiſe have paſſed it; that being the Ground of their proceeding upon the Bill of Attainder: But for the Bill to begin originally in this Place, to form ſuch a Judgment, the heavieſt that can be pronounced againſt a Man; a Judgment of Death, corrupting his Blood, and forfeiting all he has in the World; and this upon bare Allegations, without ſo much as the Sanction of an Oath, is extremely hard. Mr. Porter is ſuch a Perſon, I know not how he hath gained ſo much Credit, that this Act ſhould paſs upon his Parole, to take away the Life of a Man: He was lately of that horrid Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate the King; and ſhall that Man, who was ſo lately of that villainous Diſpoſition, to be engaged in a Crime of that black Nature, and not convicted by his own Conſcience, but by the Danger he had run himſelf into, not ſo much as pardoned his Crime, but at this Time, if I may without Offence uſe that Expreſſion, drudging for his Pardon; I ſay, ſhall this Perſon's Life be taken away by his Parole?

Sir, the next Thing I would go to, is, that (which likewiſe they call Evidence) which is an Examination, as they term it, of Goodman, taken before a Juſtice of Peace: But he was not examined; and I muſt inſiſt upon it, that though you permitted it to be read, you did not declare it to be Evidence; but you were, I preſume, willing to hear all Things, and then judge what would be the Evidence; and I think the King's Counſel did not preſs it further. Sir, as this is not Evidence that would be allowed in an inferior Court, ſo, I hope, you will not allow it to be Evidence here; for then it is likely to be followed by other Courts, who obſerve the Proceedings here as their great Rule. 'Tis only what Mr. Goodman thought fit to write down, without being examined.—— Sir, the next Thing they reſort to, is, what Goodman ſwore upon his Examination in another Cauſe, where Sir John Fenwick was neither Party, nor preſent: Sir, there are, I ſuppoſe, ſuch Reaſons againſt that Sort of Evidence, from natural Juſtice, that it is not admitted in any Court; becauſe there may be a weak Defence; or the Perſon that ſwears it againſt one, perhaps may not, when Face to Face, have the Confidence to perſiſt in it, in caſe it be falſe againſt another; or, at leaſt, that Perſon, who was not a Party before, when he comes upon his Trial, may think of ſuch Queſtions as may go a great Way to diſcover the the Truth, may produce ſuch Evidence againſt his Credit as may overthrow it.

But if what is ſworn at one Time againſt one Man, muſt be always taken for Truth againſt all others, then the Trial of one of the Company is the Trial of all the reſt: And how contrary is this to a fundamental Rule in our Law, that no Evidence ſhall be given againſt a Man, when he is upon Trial for his Life, but in the Preſence of the Priſoner? becauſe he may croſs-examine him who gives ſuch Evidence, and that is due to every Man in Juſtice.

But I would, with Submiſſion, enquire, how they are ſure that Goodman would have ſworn this Matter again, if he was now forth-coming? Becauſe he did ſwear ſo in Cook's Caſe, is it neceſſary that he ſhould ſwear ſo again now, if Face to Face with Sir John Fenwick? No body can ſay ſo, poſitively and abſolutely; they only can imagine it, becauſe he once ſwore it, that it is poſſible he would do ſo again: Whereas we may as well ſay, he did then ſwear to ſave his own Life; and having done that, and found an Opportunity to get out of the Way, his own Conſcience might put him upon Flight, to prevent his doing of it again; and that might be the Reaſon for the withdrawing himſelf. However, I inſiſt upon it, That there is no Proof that it was by the Procurement of Sir John Fenwick: The Bill does not alledge it, and the Proofs do not come up to it; nay, there is nothing offered to ſuch Purpoſe, ſave only that Mr. Porter was pleaſed to ſay, That another Man told him, that the three hundred Guineas he was offered, and three hundred more he was to have received, were to have come from Sir John Fenwick: But hearſay Evidence is to be rejected, eſpecially againſt a Man for his Life, becauſe every Man is at Liberty to talk at large: But God forbid that That ſhould be allowed for Evidence.

The next Thing they went upon was, what Mr. Roe ſaid; That Mr. Dighton, who, by your Permiſſion, is Solicitor for Sir John Fenwick, was enquiring of him, what he could ſay to take off Goodman's Evidence; the Words, I think he uſed, were, what he could ſay to diſcredit Goodman's Evidence; and, I hope, that does no way affect Sir John Fenwick: For it does not appear that he had any Authority from him; but 'tis only ſuſpected, becauſe he is now Solicitor for him, which he was admitted to after the Time ſpoken of. But I take the Words to be nothing relating to Goodman's withdrawing himſelf; but to enquire what he could ſay to diſcredit his Teſtimony, which ſuppoſes he would appear, and imports the quite contrary to withdrawing himſelf: And if he had gone no further, I think there had been no Fault in that; for any Solicitor may enquire up and down for the Advantage of his Client; and the Word Solicitor imports his Employment. As to the Offer Mr. Roe ſays he made him, of a very great Recompence, how far he is guilty of that, I ſuppoſe he can give ſome Account, if you ſhould pleaſe to enter into the Examination of it; and, as I find, he does not doubt to clear himſelf: So that Sir John Fenwick is in no Sort proved to be privy to Mr. Goodman's withdrawing himſelf, much leſs to be proved to have had a Hand in it.

There is one Thing more I would offer, and that is grounded upon the Bill of Indictment, preferred at the Old-Baily againſt Sir John Fenwick; That the Matter in the very Indictment that they have read on the other Side, as it is there laid, and as far as it hath been offered to be heard, does not amount to Treaſon; or, at leaſt, it hath been made a very great Doubt, and by ſome within theſe Walls; but this I offer with all Submiſſion: I have the Author in my Hand, who is a Perſon of Note of the King's Counſel; he hath furniſhed me with ſuch Arguguments, as, I hope, I may be permitted to put you in Mind of without Offence.

1696. 8 W. III.

The Indictment lays, That there was a Conſpiracy and Agreement to call in a foreign Power, and to that Purpoſe to ſend Charnock to France; but the Indictment does not ſay, That Charnock was ſent, only that there was a Meeting, and an Agreement, and a Conſpiracy to ſend him: So the Indictment does not lay it as a Thing done, nor does the Bill charge it ſo; but only takes Notice, that Sir John Fenwick was indicted for conſpiring, and agreeing to call in a foreign Force: So that this Bill does not ſay that Charnock was ſent; and I appeal to you, whether it be proved that he was ſent: For Mr. Porter ſays no more, but there was a Meeting at the King's-Head, and he named Sir John Fenwick to be one that was preſent; and there it was, he ſays, agreed, That Charnock ſhould be ſent to France. Now, if there was nothing more than an Agreement and Conſpiracy to do it, and no further Act, but ſuch a Meeting to do it, and the Perſon was not actually ſent, or at leaſt not proved to be ſent; then, from this learned Author's Opinion, I inſiſt upon it, that this is not a ſufficient Overt-Act of Treaſon. In the late Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, whoſe Innocence is vindicated by this Author, he takes Notice, That a Conſpiracy or Agreement to levy War is not Treaſon, without actual levying War; and of that Opinion was my Lord Coke, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Hales. A Conſpiracy or Agreement to call in foreign Forces, unleſs actually done, or a Perſon at leaſt actually ſent, or ſomething more than a bare Agreement for that Purpoſe, is the ſame as a Conſpiracy to levy War: And in the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, the Proof being only, That he and others met together, and agreed to ſeize upon the Guards, and levy War, which he never actually did; it is inſiſted upon by this Author, That that was not Treaſon; for that Indictment went no further: And therefore my Author ſays, Shew me where ſuch an Accuſation was ever agreed to be more than a Conſpiracy to levy War, and that ſuch a Conſpiracy was ever agreed to be Treaſon within the Statute of Edw. III. till within theſe few Years.

Sir Barth. Shower's Argument for the Priſoner.

Sir, now I muſt humbly ſubmit it to you, Whether this be any thing more? And for the Purpoſe you will pleaſe to conſider, What this preſent Bill, and what that Bill of Indictment is: For it is not, for that Charnock was ſent to France to ſolicit foreign Forces, but only that Sir John Fenwick was at a Meeting where they did agree ſo to do. Calling in foreign Forces is levying War; but a Conſpiracy to levy War is not Treaſon, unleſs it be actually done: A Conſpiracy to call in foreign Forces is nothing more. And therefore, I humbly inſiſt upon it, That neither by this Bill, or by the Indictment recited in it, or the Proofs offered before you, any thing is charged, charged, but only an Agreement at that Meeting, (mentioned by Captain Porter, a ſingle Perſon, and he not upon Oath), to call in foreign Forces; for he only ſays, That Charnock told him he had been in France. I ſhall not trouble you any further. We have not thought fit to produce Witneſſes, for the Reaſons I have offered; for that we do not find that Sir John Fenwick, throughout the Bill, is charged with being guilty of Treaſon; and we are not willing to enter upon the Defence of a Matter not charged upon him. I hope, Sir, you will not make a Precedent, That where a Perſon is indicted, and ready to abide his Trial in the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, as Sir John Fenwick now is, that he might be taken out of the Hands of the ordinary Judges, and be brought to this Bar, to receive his Trial here.

A Matter of this Nature may be of very great Conſequence: We know at preſent upon what Ground we ſtand; for by the Statute of Edw. III. we know what is Treaſon; by the two Statutes of Edw. VI. and the late Act of Treaſon, we know what is Proof; by the Statute of Magna Charta, we know how we are to be tried, per legem terræ, & per judicium parium; that is, a Peer by his Peers, and a Commoner by a Jury: But if Bills of Attainder come into Faſhion, we ſhall neither know what is Treaſon, what is Evidence; nor how, or where we are to be tried. Sir, I ſubmit it to you, and hope this Bill ſhall not paſs.

Sir Barth. Shower's Argument for the Priſoner.

Sir Bartholomew Shower, who was Counſel alſo for Sir John Fenwick, ſaid, He ſhould not enter into any Debate or Argument concerning the Power of Parliaments: No doubt there was a Supreme Power in all Governments, and by our Conſtitution it was lodged in the King, Lords, and Commons: He admitted alſo, that there had been many Attainders; but not one, he obſerved, for a ſingle Act that was Treaſon at Common Law: That they might obſerve the Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. reſerved a Power to the Parliament, to proceed upon Treaſons not expreſſed there; but as to the Compaſſing the King's Death, Levying War, and Adhering to his Enemies; it ſeemed to be the Senſe of the Parliament, to leave theſe to the Rules of the Common Law: He did admit, indeed, ſalus populi, the Safety of the State, to be the Supreme Law; but this Proſecution being for an Act done laſt May was twelve Months, the Danger paſſed, and the Conſpirators executed, and no Fears now remaining from that Conſpiracy; he hoped they would not reſort to their extraordinary Legiſlative Power to puniſh ſuch a Fact, which might be puniſhed by the ordinary Rules of Law: The moſt they could do, in Juſtice, was, to ſupply the Want of the abſent Witneſs, and enact, that Goodman's Depoſition ſhould be read at the Trial; but he hoped they would not think fit to condemn Sir John Fenwick without Trial, and put him in worſe Circumſtances than he would have been if Goodman had not been withdrawn; eſpecially ſince it was neither charged nor proved, that Goodman was withdrawn by Sir John's Procurement: Nay, it was not proved that Goodman was withdrawn at all; he might be ſtill in his old Lodgings, and ſhould he appear again, and contradict the Teſtimony he had given, it might then be too late to do Juſtice to Sir John Fenwick. —— That as to the Overt-Acts, of buying Horſes and Arms, laid in the Indictment, none of theſe had been proved, nothing but his being at a Conſult; and in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, there was not only a Conſult to ſeize the Guards, laid as an Overt-Act of Treaſon, but it was proved Sir John Armſtrong was ſent to view the Guards, in order to ſurprize them; and yet the Act for reverſing the Lord Ruſſel's Attainder, declared he was unlawfully convicted, upon ſtrained Conſtructions of Treaſon; and he obſerved, that the conſulting to attack the King's Guards, and the inviting over foreign Forces, were either of them Conſults to levy War; and if the one was not Treaſon, neither was the other: And as to the Treaſon of adhering to the King's Enemies, with which Sir John Fenwick was charged, he muſt either have been preſent, aiding and abetting them, or ſent them Arms, Ammunition, Money, or other Supplies, to have brought him within that Branch of the Statute: That here was not ſo much as the ſending to France proved, only an Agreement to ſend one. He deſired the Houſe would take it into their Conſideration, alſo, That Sir John might undergo another Trial, if he ſhould be acquitted here: The King's Counſel might proſecute him at Common Law, if this Bill ſhould be thrown out; and it was contrary to all Laws, that a Man ſhould be brought in Danger of his Life twice for the ſame Fact; and for theſe Reaſons, and thoſe already offered by Sir Thomas Powis, he hoped they would not proceed againſt the Priſoner in their Legiſlative Capacity.

1696. 8 W. III.

Mr. Serjeant Gould's Argument for the Bill.

Mr. Serjeant Gould, in his Reply to the Priſoner's Counſel, obſerved, That they had admitted it was proper to apply to the Parliament in extraordinary Caſes; and this was ſuch a one; for they had been deprived of the Evidence that was neceſſary in the ordinary Courſe of Proceedings: And in Anſwer to that Objection, That the Evidence they had produced was not legal Evidence, they were now before the Parliament, which would make uſe of ſuch Informations as might give them any Light into the Matter: They were Judges of their own Methods, and how far Sir John Fenwick was concerned, upon the Circumſtances before them: And as to the Objection, That this was a Power which had been ſeldom exerted, but when the Party was withdrawn from Juſtice, and could not be come at otherwiſe; this, he inſiſted, was a parallel Caſe: They could not come at Juſtice in the ordinary Courſe, their Witneſs having been tampered with; and therefore, by their own Arguments, it was proper to come before the Parliament.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel's Argument.

Mr. Serjeant Lovel, being alſo Counſel for the Bill, ſaid, Mr. Speaker, I ſhall not trouble you nor the Houſe very long; but I humbly hope, with a little Pains, to ſatisfy the Houſe, that moſt that hath been ſaid on the other Side, is not much to the Purpoſe: Sir, I will conſider, with the Leave of this Houſe, what the Common Law was before the 25th of Edw. III. and how the Law does now ſtand; and draw ſome Conſequences from thence, and the Neceſſity of this Caſe.

The Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. I muſt obſerve it, is not an enacting Law, it is only a Law declaratory; for all thoſe particular In-ſtances of Treaſon that are mentioned there, were Treaſons before that Law was made, and ſo, by the Preamble of it, plainly appears: But the Judges had a greater Liberty upon conſtructive Treaſons, and upon accumulative Treaſons; and that was left too much at the Diſcretion and Liberty of the Judges below, and the executive Power of the Law. Then that Statute comes and reſtrains the Judges in that Point; and ſays, That they ſhall not give Judgment in any Caſes of Treaſon, but only in theſe Caſes particularly mentioned there: And that Statute ſays, That if any other Matter, which ſhall be thought Treaſon, ſhould come before them, they ſhall not proceed to Judgment, but acquaint the King in Parliament with it. I only make uſe of it to prove how Treaſon ſtood before that Act, and how it comes to be altered from the Common Law; and I am ſure it cannot be denied, but that one Witneſs was ſufficient at the Common Law: But then comes 1 Edw. VI. Cap 12. and that, for the Security of the Subject, does ordain, That in Caſes of High-Treaſon, there ſhall be two Witneſſes of the Fact: But that Statute does not alter the Law, but was made for the more Security of the Subject in Point of Proof. In that Statute of 1 Edw. VI. Cap. 12. it is provided, There ſhall be two Witneſſes in Caſes of High-Treaſon; but there is an Exception of Treaſon, for counterfeiting and forging of the Coin; and that is the Reaſon that the Law is taken now, That though there muſt be two Witneſſes in the Caſes of other Treaſons, yet in the Caſe of Coining there needs but one. The Offence or Crime is never the greater, becauſe there are to be two Witneſſes to prove it. In this Caſe that is here before you, we come to deſire your Help, becauſe one of the Witneſſes is, by Art and fraudulent Means, withdrawn: Does that purge the Crime at all, or leſſen it? No Man will ſay the Crime is leſs; but it does prevent a regular Trial before the Courts below, and that is the Reaſon why we did come here; and we hope this Defect ſhall be ſupplied by a ſpecial Law: But, ſay they, 'tis very hard a Law ſhould be made ex poſt facto, to take away a Man's Life. It would be very hard, if the Caſe was as they have ſtated it, to make a Crime, ex poſt facto, that was not ſo before: But I do not take it to be hard for a Law to be made to repeal another, to make a Matter triable that was not triable before.

Suppoſe a Law ſhould be made, That all Treaſons, from and after ſuch a Time, ſuppoſe from a Time before the Fact is here ſuppoſed to be committed, as laſt May was twelve Months, ſhould be triable as at the Common Law, no doubt the Parliament may repeal a Law in Part, or in All: No Man can ſay, but Sir John Fenwick might be tried at the Common Law by one Witneſs before the Statute of 1 Edw. VI. So that I do obſerve, and humbly ſubmit it to you, That this Law, by the Act, is not changed as to the Crime: The Crime is as it was before; it is only changed as to the Number of Witneſſes. The Inſtances that have been obſerved on the other Side, with humble Submiſſion, I think, do not reach our Caſe: We do not inſiſt that there are two legal Witneſſes; we do confeſs, the Information that hath been read is not a legal Proof; but this Houſe, in their Legiſlative Capacity, is not to be confined to the Evidence that a Jury muſt have below: This Houſe may take what Ways and Methods they pleaſe, to ſatisfy themſelves. Say they, here is the Life of a Gentleman that is concerned; I know all good Men will be tender of the Life of a Man: But here is the Life of the King, and the Safety of the Kingdom, the Peace and Safety of us all, that is concerned in the ſame Caſe; and let them put theſe Things into the Ballance, and conſider which ought to weigh moſt.

1696. 8 W. III.

You have a Record before you of the Conviction of Peter Cook, who was indicted by the ſame Witneſs.

A learned Gentleman, that is of Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar, did make the ſame Objections as are made now, at the Old-Baily, (it may be there are ſome other Particulars now); and after all the Debates and Arguments that could be uſed at that Time, it was unanimouſly reſolved, That the Crime was High-Treaſon: And if it was High-Treaſon in Peter Cook, 'tis no leſs in Sir John Fenwick, who was preſent at the ſame Time, and engaged in the ſame Buſineſs: For what was a Crime in one, was the ſame in both.

I think it is too determinative an Expreſſion to ſay, This was nothing but a little Twittle Twattle. They did there meet upon a ſolemn Conſultation; and not only once, but they did meet a ſecond Time: And what was it to do? It was to invite a foreign Power to invade this Land, and to make War with the King and Kingdom; and they did promiſe and ſolemnly engage to aſſiſt them with armed Forces; and it was proved, that they did agree with Charnock to go into France; and Charnock was not willing to go the firſt Time he was deſired, till he found they were ſtanch and ſteady in their Reſolutions; and upon a ſecond Meeting they were all found ſo, and then he would go: I think that is an Overt-Act of Treaſon, if there be any. And when he came back, he ſaid, he had been in France, and brought an Anſwer to the Meſſage he went about: This is all now laid before you. But, ſay they, this is an extraordinary Caſe: I do agree to it; but becauſe it is an extraordinary Caſe, and for the Safety of the King and Kingdom, it is fit there ſhould be an extraordinary Remedy.

They aſk, What Miſchief it would be, if this Gentleman ſhould be left to the ordinary Courſe of Law? It hath been the Wiſdom of all Ages to make Laws to puniſh ſuch as by their Artifice would evade the Law. Here is this Gentleman, as we ſay, guilty of High-Treaſon; but that we ſubmit to you.

This Gentleman was in the Proſecution of the Law, and might have been tried in the regular Way, had we the Witneſſes upon their Oaths (the Grand Jury have found Billa Vera upon their Oaths); but we muſt appeal to a worthy Member of the Houſe, (who becauſe he was a Member we did not call upon him), to give you an Account how he did delay and protract his Trial; and now they know he can't be tried at all, they pretend he is willing to be tried; and becauſe he cannot be tried, they would have it as an Argument that he ſhould not be puniſhed by any other Means.

Sir, If ſo notorious a Crime as this is, ſhould be committed againſt the Body of a Nation, and and go unpuniſhed, either in the common Courſe, or by ſome extraordinary Methods, the Nation would be in a doubtful and dangerous Caſe.

When this Houſe hath paſſed their Judgment in this Matter, it will go to another Place, where it will have another Examination; and it will have that regular Conſideration that all other Acts have. We are in an extraordinary Caſe; and do think, that this extraordinary Caſe does deſerve an extraordinary Puniſhment. After which, the Counſel were ordered to withdraw.

The Gentlemen, charged by Sir John, move, he might prove the Charge.

Sir John Fenwick and the Counſel being withdrawn, Admiral Ruſſel moved, that Sir John might be called in again, and asked, What Proof he had, that he (the Admiral) ſent Captain Lloyd to France, and was guilty of the other Facts mentioned in the Paper he ſent to the King?

Then Colonel Crawford for himſelf, Colonel Godfrey for the Lord Marlborough, Mr. Bridges for the Duke of Shrewſbury, Mr. Boſcawen for the Lord Godolphin, and Colonel Granvill for the Lord Bath; deſired Sir John might be asked, What Proof he could make of the Facts, he had charged them with reſpectively in the ſaid Paper?

Another Member moved, That he ſhould be asked in general, what Proof he had of the Particulars in that Paper? But at length it was agreed, that the Paper ſhould not be produced; and that they ſhould only ask him upon every Name in that Paper, in the Order they were mentioned there, What he knew of that Gentleman? And accordingly, Sir John and his Counſel were called in again, and Mr. Speaker demanded of him, What he knew of the Lord Godolphin (being the firſt Perſon mentioned in the Paper)? To which Sir John anſwering, He hoped they would not put him upon anſwering any thing that might hurt himſelf, he was ordered to withdraw.

Sir John refuſes to anſwer on that Head.

Then it was moved, That Mr. Vernon might give an Account of Sir John's Practices, to get his Trial put off from Time to Time, on Pretence of making a Confeſſion; This being one of the Allegations in the Bill, of which no Proof had been made: And it being agreed, that this ought to be done in the Preſence of Sir John and the Counſel, they were called in again:

Mr. Vernon relates the Endeavours uſed by Sir John to put off his Trial.

And Mr. Vernon related, that the Lady Mary Fenwick had applied to him to get Sir John's Trial put off, on Pretence of his making Diſcoveries; and that ſeveral of the Miniſtry had attended Sir John, on his Promiſes of making a full Confeſſion; but that he had only amuſed them from Time to Time, till Goodman was gone.

After which Mr. Speaker demanded of Sir John's Counſel, If they had any thing to obſerve upon that Head?

The Obſervations of his Counſel upon it.

Sir Thomas Powis anſwered, He did not find there was any Degree of Treaſon in this Part of the Charge; and what Crime they would conſtrue it, he could not tell: That it was uſual for Perſons, under an Accuſation, to endeavour to put off their Trial, on Account of the Abſence of their Witneſſes, or for other Reaſons: But this was no Crime; at leaſt, not of the Nature the Bill charged.

Sir Bartholomew Shower added, If Sir John had prevaricated, as they called it, he hoped that was far from making him guilty of High-Treaſon; and that if this was an Offence, it was ſo at Common Law, and he might be puniſhed for it by common Methods: And if it was no Offence, he hoped they would not make it an Offence by a new Law, ſo as to inflict the greateſt Puniſhment for ſuch an Artifice.

1696. 8 W. III.

The Priſoner and Counſel being withdrawn, the Bill was read a ſecond Time, after which there was a profound Silence: Whereupon Mr. Speaker demanding, If he ſhould put the Queſtion of Committment? a Debate aroſe, which was begun by Sir Thomas Dyke, who ſaid, He hoped he would not put the Queſtion of Committment, till ſome Exception was made to the Bill; for he was ſure it was as liable to Exceptions, as any Bill that had been brought in a great while.

A Debate on the ſecond reading of the Bill.

But, as it is not conſiſtent with a Work of this Nature, to give every Speech that was made during this Debate, I ſhall firſt ſum up the Arguments impartially on both Sides; and then ſelect ſome few of thoſe Speeches, I apprehend may give moſt Satisfaction to the inquiſitive World.

Arguments for the Bill.

The Gentlemen who were for the Bill, ſaid, That the Parliament would never take a Cauſe from the ordinary Courts of Juſtice, or attaint a Perſon of High-Treaſon, unleſs in extraordinary Caſes: But here, it appeared, they had been deprived of the Evidence that was neceſſary in Inferior Courts; and, in ſuch a Caſe, it was uſual for the Parliament to interpoſe: For the Parliament were not bound down by what was called legal Evidence; but might make uſe of any Information that could give them any Light into the Matter: They were Judges of their own Methods, and could paſs a Judgment on Sir John Fenwick's Guilt, from the Circumſtances before them; and were not tied down by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall: That this Power indeed had been ſeldom exerted; but where the Party was withdrawn from Juſtice, and could not be come at in the ordinary Courſe: But this was a parallel Caſe; they could not come at Juſtice in the ordinary Courſe, their Witneſs having been tampered with and withdrawn; and therefore, from what was admitted on the other Side, the Parliament ought to exert their Power, when the Offender could not be come at otherwiſe. This Caſe was proper to be brought before the Parliament, which was veſted with a diſcretionary Power, to do whatever they apprehended for the Good of the Kingdom; and this they looked upon as a fit Occaſion to exert that Authority: That, indeed, this Power was like Thunder in the Hands of Providence, not to be uſed but upon extraordinary Occaſions; and then it never ought to fail of doing Execution: For Men would trifle and contemn that Power which was not able effectually to exert itſelf. Some Gentlemen were afraid of making an ill Precedent; but it was for that very Reaſon others were for paſſing the Bill: For as the Law ſtood, he was but a bungling Politician, that could not ruin the Government, and yet not come within the Bill of Treaſon to be hanged for it: And therefore, for the keeping Miniſters of State in Awe, and that the Parliament might have it in their Power to puniſh ſuch Offenders as they saw fit, as well as the Prisoner, they were for the Bill.

It had been objected indeed, That Sir John Fenwick's Life was not of that Consequence as some pretended: He was not so considerable, that his Escape could bring any Danger to the Publick. But it was a very just Observation, That if a Plot was discovered, and not throughly prosecuted, it would strengthen and grow upon the Administration; and it was ten to one, but the Government was subverted by the Conspirators in the End. That no one could imagine, that Sir William Perkins, Sir John Freind, and the rest that had been discovered, were the only Persons concerned in this Conspiracy; there must be much greater Men concerned in it: And when they saw such a Struggle to get People out of Jayl, and send them out of the Way, they must suppose there was something extraordinary still to be done: And they would not have Men think to secure themselves by bribing and tampering with the Witnesses. It was notorious that Parties were forming for King James; Persons were plotting in every Part of the Kingdom, and an open Invasion threatened: And, if this was not a Time to exert their extraordinary Power, when would it be a proper Time?——Others observed, That if the Laws of God and Nature required, that no Man should be put to Death without two Witnesses, it was strange that all Christian Nations were not governed by such Laws: But in Fact, no two Nations agreed in their Manner of Proof; and we differed from all other Nations, in bringing the Witnesses and the Prisoner Face to Face; and requiring two Witnesses in Cases of Treason: Nor did we ourselves, require the same Proof in some Cases as we did in others; for one Witness was sufficient in Felony: And before the Statute of Edward VI. any Evidence was sufficient, even in Treason, which was sufficient to incline the Jury to give a Verdict: And for the Treason of coining such Evidence was still sufficient. That if this Precedent had been made in the Case of an innocent Person, or even where the Fact was doubtful, by a prevailing Party, it had been an ill Precedent: But it being made for a Man that was notoriously guilty, and one who deserved this extraordinary Resentment of the Nation; and who would have been brought to Justice in the ordinary Manner, if he had not eluded it, and made it impracticable; they thought, if it should appear, that the Nation would not be put off so, but made an Example of him, Posterity would applaud and thank them for it. They did not however condemn him, because he had protracted his Trial; but because he had been guilty of High-Treason, the worst of Treasons; which would have been proved against him in the ordinary Way of Proceedings, if he had not pretended to make Discoveries, and by that Means put off his Trial till a Witness was gone; and when he found himself out of the ordinary Reach of Justice, set the Justice of his Country in Defiance: And if these were not sufficient Reasons to put him to Death, yet they were sufficient to justify their Proceeding against him in this Manner. And notwithstanding Sir John was represented as too inconsiderable to indanger the Government; it appeared he was to have been a General, and was acquainted with a great many Officers: That he had not made an Amendment to his injured Country, as he ought to have done, by an ingenuous Confession; and unless they proceeded steadily against him, they should have none of the Discoveries they expected. Not that they would hang a Man because he would not confess; but, because he had been guilty of that deepest Treason, and aggravated his Offence in that Manner, he deserved to die, unless he would merit his Life by a Discovery of what he knew.

Arguments against the Bill.

On the other Hand, the Gentlemen who argued against the Bill, insisted, That the Person they intended to condemn by this Bill was forthcoming: He had been indicted, had pleaded, and was ready to undergo his Trial in the ordinary Courts of Justice: That the meanest Subject was intitled to a Trial by Jury: Even the Regicides who actually murdered the King, and did not fly, were admitted to a Trial in the ordinary Courts of Justice, though a Bill of Attainder passed against the rest: And it must be thought strange, that the same Parliament, which passed an Act requiring two Witnesses in Treason, should pass an Act to put a Man to Death without one legal Witness, and without allowing him any Trial at all. If Mr St. John's Position in Lord Strafford's Case was admitted, (viz.) That a subsequent Law might be made, to take away a Man's Life, without any Evidence, other than the private Opinion or Conscience of every particular Law-maker; then no Man was safe. In the Lord Strafford's Case, the Proceedings were first by Impeachment: The Witnesses had been examined upon Oath in the House of Peers; and the Bill of Attainder recited, that the Facts had been fully proved: But for a Bill to begin originally in the House of Commons; and Judgment to be given there to deprive a Man of his Life, and all that was valuable, without the Sanction of an Oath, was extremely hard.——That Bishop Burnet, in his History of the Reformation, had observed, That such Bills could not be enough condemned; for that they were a Breach of the most sacred and unalterable Rules of Justice. Had the Government been in Danger from the Prisoner, indeed ordinary Rules might have been dispensed with: But this being for an Offence committed a Year before the Persons executed, who were concerned in it, and all the Danger over, there could be no Manner of Reason for resorting to their Legislative Power to punish this Man: The most that could be thought reasonable in this Case, would be, to enact, That Goodman's Evidence, the Witness who was fled, should be read at his Trial: They could not condemn the Prisoner, and thereby put him in a worse Condition than if Goodman was here; for then he would have had a Trial by a Jury, the Benefit of his Challenges, the Witnesses sworn, and might have made his Exceptions to their Testimony; all which he was deprived of here: That the Parliament had Power to make such a Law, was admitted; but they thought it ought not to be used but upon extraordinary Occasions, when the Offenders were so big, that they could not otherwise be brought to Justice; or where the Crimes did not fall under the Denomination of the Common Law, which was not the present Case: That there was not one Precedent for attaintattainting a Perſon who was in Cuſtody and forthcoming; but what had been univerſally branded: They were rather Reproaches to the ill Reigns they were made in, and to be marked out as Rocks to be avoided, than Patterns to be imitated: That though it was true they were not tied up by the Rules of Weſtminſter-hall, yet what was Reaſon and Juſtice in Weſtminſter-hall was ſo every where elſe; and ſo far as thoſe Rules were founded on Reaſon and Juſtice, they ought to be imitated: That they had indeed made a Law to prevent People's being executed by an arbitrary Power, and in an unlawful Manner in Weſtminſter-hall; but if they made this Example, the Subject might be perpetually executed here, and would be never the ſafer for the Bill of Treaſons: That after this Precedent, every Man would be in Danger of being proceeded againſt in like manner, we had ſeen Parties hang one another by Turns, with great Violence. Some Gentlemen indeed had ſaid, they did not aim at the Priſoner's Blood, but at his Confeſſion; and ſo he was to be racked to Death from one reading of the Bill to another, and poſſibly might come to be hanged at laſt, not for High-Treaſon, but for not confeſſing it. As to the Safety of the Government, which was pretended, they did not ſee how the Safety of the Government depended upon his Life; or that it would be a Penny the worſe if the Bill did not paſs: The Preamble to the Bill for attainting the Duke of Monmouth gave a ſubſtantial Reaſon for it, That he was in Arms and could not be brought to Juſtice; which implied, that if he could have been brought to Juſtice, they would not have attainted him: They did admit indeed, where the Government was at Stake, and nothing could preſerve the Kingdom but breaking through the ſettled Forms, there the Government might, and in all ſuch Caſes would, break through them, whatſoever Rules were preſcribed; but they did not think Sir John Fenwick's living or dying of that Conſequence as the paſſing this Bill of Attainder was. As to the Allegation of his having protracted his Trial, it was natural, and what every Body in ſuch Circumſtances attempted, and could not be a ſufficient Ground to attaint him: And as to his being inſtrumental in withdrawing the Evidence, this was neither proved, or ſo much as ſuggeſted in the Bill; and if it had, did not demand ſo ſevere a Puniſhment, any more than his having aſperſed ſome great Men as the Bill charged: That it was true, he had charged ſome Gentlemen, and it was very hard they ſhould ſit as Judges on the Perſon who accuſed them, and endeavoured to baffle his Evidence, by cramming a Bill of Attainder down his Throat: And there were other Gentlemen in the Houſe who were the King's Counſel and Proſecutors; and it was hardly agreeable to Juſtice, that theſe ſhould ſit in Judgment on the Priſoner: That High-Treaſon indeed was a great Crime, but what was there in this Caſe to make it differ ſo much from other Treaſons, that they muſt proceed in this extraordinary manner? He had aſperſed great Men, he had prevaricated with the Government, and protracted his Trial till a Witneſs was withdrawn: But if theſe Reaſons were ſufficient to induce them to have recourſe to a Bill of Attainder, then whenever there ſhould be but one Witneſs for the future, by Virtue of this Precedent, the Legiſlature muſt interpoſe, and a Bill of Attainder be brought in. True it was, this might ſufficiently convince Men that they could never be ſafe, how artful ſoever they were in practiſing againſt the Government: But then, what Security to the Subject were all the Laws made for regulating Trials in Caſes of Treaſon? If when there was but one Witneſs, and perhaps not one, the Perſon accuſed might be taken out of the ordinary Courts of Juſtice and condemned to die, becauſe common Fame had declared him guilty: And if Goodman's Paper, who was withdrawn, was to be admitted as an Evidence before the Houſe, the Conſequence of that would be, that if a Miniſter of State could hereafter get an Examination ſworn before a Juſtice of Peace, and then ſend the Witneſs away, a Bill of Attainder might be clapped on the Back of the Party accuſed, and this ſhould be deemed ſufficient Evidence to deſtroy him: If after this Precedent, forty Men ſhould be taken up for a Plot, and there ſhould be two Witneſſes againſt twenty of them, and one againſt the other twenty, then a Bill of Attainder muſt be brought in to condemn the latter without legal Evidence: And if this was to be the Method of proceeding for the future, Men would be more unſafe than they were before the Acts of Treaſon were made, inaſmuch as Parliaments were as liable to be influenced as Juries, and their Power was irreſiſtable.

1696. 8 W. III.

1696. 8 W. III.

That moſt of the Attainders which had been produced as Precedents had been reverſed; becauſe the Perſons condemned had not had the Benefit of the Law, and if that was a good Reaſon for reverſing ſuch Attainders, it was a good Reaſon alſo why they ſhould not proceed by Attainder: And to tell them the Government was in Danger, and that the Fate of England and Europe depended on this Bill, was certainly offered, rather to amuſe than convince them; it was impoſſible the Government could be in Danger from one they had in their Power, and might reſtrain him of his Liberty for Life, and whoſe Eſtate and Intereſt were ſo inconſiderable. It was ſtrange, the Government could not ſupport it ſelf without taking away the Life of ſuch a one, contrary to the Rules of Law.

Theſe Debates having continued till Eleven at Night, the Queſtion was put, That the Bill be committed, which paſſed in the Affirmative, Ayes 182, Noes 128: But the Committee made an Amendment, by adding the following Words to the Bill, viz. Of which Treaſon Sir John Fenwick is guilty.

The Bill paſſed on the ſecond reading, with an Amendment.

The Bill being read a third Time on the 25th of Nov. 1696. ſeveral Speeches were made for and againſt it; but the preceeding Abſtract contains the Subſtance of theſe as well as the former.

The Queſtion being afterwards put, That the Bill do paſs, it was carried in the Affirmative, Ayes 189, Noes 156: And then the Bill was ſent up to the Houſe of Lords, where it was paſſed by a Majority of five Lords only, excluſive of the Lords Spiritual, who did not vote, and ſeveral Peers entered their Proteſts againſt the Bill for the following Reaſons; 1. becauſe Bills of Attainder againſt Perſons in Priſon, and who are therefore liable to be tried by Common Law, are of dangerous Conſequence to the Lives of the Subjects, and may tend to the Subverſion of the Laws of the Kingdom. 2. Becauſe the Evidence of Grand Jurymen of what was ſworn before them againſt Sir John Fenwick, as alſo the Evidence of the petty Jurymen in another Cauſe, was admitted here, both which are againſt the Rules of Law; and beſides thoſe Jurymen diſagreed in their Teſtimony. 3. Becauſe the Information of Goodman in Writing was received, which by Law could not be admitted, and the Priſoner on account of his not being brought Face to Face, as the Law required, could not have the Advantage of croſs-examining him; nor did it appear by any Evidence, that Sir John Fenwick, or any others employed by him, had tampered with Goodman, or perſwaded him to withdraw, and it would be of dangerous Conſequence, if a Perſon ſo accuſed ſhould be condemned; for by this Means, a Witneſs that was inſufficient to convict a Man, ſhould have more Power to deſtroy him by his Abſence, than if he was produced viva voce againſt the Priſoner. 4. Becauſe if Goodman had appeared againſt the Priſoner, he was infamous in the whole Courſe of his Life; and therefore could not be a good Witneſs, eſpecially in a Caſe of Blood. 5. Becauſe in this Caſe there was but one Witneſs (viz. Porter), and he a very doubtful one. 6. Becauſe Sir John Fenwick was ſo inconſiderable a Man, that he could not endanger the Peace of the Government, and there was no Neceſſity therefore of proceeding againſt him in this extraordinary Manner.

Read a third Time, and paſſed the Commons.

The Royal Aſſent given to the Bill.

The King gave the Royal Aſſent to this Bill for the Attainder of Sir John Fenwick on the 11th of January, but was contented he ſhould be beheaded only, and not put to Death as a Traitor; and Sir John was beheaded accordingly, on the 28th of January 1696-7 on Tower-hill, when he left the following Paper with the Sheriffs, viz.

Sir John Fenwick executed.

The Paper he left.

SPeaking nor Writing was never my Talent, I ſhall therefore give a very ſhort but faithful Account, firſt, of my Religion, and next, what I ſuffer moſt innocently for, to avoid the Calumnies I may reaſonably expect my Enemies will caſt upon me when dead, ſince they have moſt falſely and maliciouſly aſperſed me whilſt under my Misfortunes.

As for my Religion, I was brought up in the Church of England, as it is eſtabliſhed by Law, and have ever profeſſed it; though I confeſs I have been an unworthy Member of it, in not living up to the ſtrict and excellent Rules thereof, for which I take Shame to my ſelf, and humbly ask Forgiveneſs of God, I come now to die in that Communion, truſting as an humble and hearty Penitent to be received by the Mercy of God, through the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt my Saviour.

1696. 8 W. III.

My Religion taught me my Loyalty, which I bleſs God is untainted; and I have ever endeavoured, in the Station wherein I have been placed, to the utmoſt of my Power, to ſupport the Crown of England in the true and lineal Courſe of Deſcent, without Interruption.

As for what I am now to die, I call God to witneſs I went not to that Meeting in Leaden-hall-Street, with any ſuch Intention as to invite King James, by Force, to invade this Nation; nor was I my ſelf provided with either Horſe or Arms, or engaged for any Number of Men, or gave particular Conſent for any ſuch Invaſion, as is moſt falſely ſworn againſt me.

I do alſo declare in the Preſence of God, that I knew nothing of King James his coming to Calais, nor of any Invaſion intended from thence, till it was publickly known: And the only Notion I had that ſomething might be attempted, was from the Thoulon Fleet coming to Breſt.

I alſo call God to Witneſs, that I received the Knowledge of what is contained in thoſe Papers that I gave to a great Man that came to me in the Tower, both from Letters and Meſſages that came from France: And he told me, when I read them to him, that the Prince of Orange had been acquainted with moſt of thoſe Things before.

I might have expected Mercy from that Prince, becauſe I was inſtrumental in ſaving his Life: For, when about April 1695, an Attempt formed againſt him came to my Knowledge, I did, partly by Diſſuaſions, and partly by Delays, prevent that Deſign; which, I ſuppoſe, was the Reaſon that the laſt villainous Project was concealed from me.

If there be any Perſons whom I have injured in Word or Deed, I heartily pray their Pardon; and beg of God to pardon thoſe who have injured me; particularly thoſe who with great Zeal have ſought my Life, and brought the Guilt of my innocent Blood upon this Nation, no Treaſon being proved on me.

I return my moſt hearty Thanks to thoſe noble and worthy Perſons who gave me their Aſſiſtance by oppoſing this Bill of Attainder, without which it had been impoſſible I could have fallen under the Sentence of Death. God bleſs them and their Poſterity; though I am fully ſatisfied they pleaded their own Cauſe while they defended mine.

I pray God to bleſs my true and lawful Sovereign King James, the Queen, and Prince of Wales, and reſtore him and his Poſterity to this Throne again, for the Peace and Proſperity of this Nation; which is impoſſible to proſper till the Government is ſettled upon a right Foot.

And now, O God! I do with all humble Devotion commend my Soul into thy Hands, the great Maker and Preſerver of Men, and Lover of Souls; beſeeching thee that it may be always dear and precious in thy Sight, through the Merits of my Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

In this Place I ſhall, as I propoſed, give ſome ſelect Speeches for and againſt this Bill of Attainder

1696. 8 W. III.

Attainder in the House of Commons, and then make my Remarks upon the whole as usual.

Sir John Hawles, Sollicitor General.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is a Bill for attainting Sir John Fenwick of High Treason: 'Tis the greatest Crime we know in the Law; and, I think, the greatest Crime known in a Government. It is much greater than Murther, or any thing else; because it subverts the Government, and the Law whereby these Crimes are punished; and Persons should be deterred from committing these Crimes.

It hath been made a Question by the Gentlemen at the Bar, (I think two of them) Whether this Matter that Sir John Fenwick is indicted and accused of is High Treason or not? I must confess I heard something of it without Doors; and that they would make it out, That if he was guilty of the Matter charged it was not High Treason. I thought it somewhat a bold Matter, but did not think they would have undertaken it in this Place, though they might have pretended some Flaw in the Indictment. But it seems they have the Authority of a good Lawyer in it, and they have quoted one learned Author, as they please to call him; though I take that for a great Compliment: I believe they may mean my self; and they have done me some Honour; for they say my Lord Chief Justice Hales was of the same Opinion; and then said something of Dyer. Now he hath read something at large out of that Author he speaks, and challenges any one to shew any Opinion, That ever a Conspiracy to levy War was High Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. III. Now I would give a Challenge on the other Side, That he would shew me any Opinion before that Time, or since, That a Design to depose the King is not High Treason within that Statute? The Author that he speaks of, says that expressly in the Matter of my Lord Russel, and tells you particularly; and in The Government Vindicated, which was only an Answer as to the Prosecution of my Lord Russel, there are several Cases cited, That a Design to depose the King was High Treason, and agreed to by that very Person; and it always was agreed to be High Treason. Then take the State of this Case, and that of my Lord Russel: The great Matter was, That he sent some Persons to view the Guards (it was said, in order to seize the King); this was Evidence against my Lord Russel for a Conspiracy to levy War: But it was said, That this was not so much a Conspiracy to levy War against the King as against the Guards. But this is of a quite different Nature: Capt. Porter hath given you an Account of it, (and I think Goodman's Examination is to the same Purpose): That they met in Leaden-hall-Street, and consulted how to bring King James back again; and the only Method they could think of was, to send Charnock over to King James, that he might prevail with the French King to send them 10,000 Men, and they would meet him here with 2000 Horse; and for what Purpose was this? It was to bring back King James again. I would be glad to hear if those Gentlemen that were at the Bar, or any Body else, could say this was any thing else but a Design to depose King William? And they can't shew me one Lawyer's Opinion, but that designing to depose the King was ever called the imagining the Death of the King within the Statute of 25 Edw. III. The first Resolution of this Matter was pretty early; I think it was Henry IV's Time, and that was pretending Richard II. was alive, and that he was the lawful King. So that the Matter is Treason, as it is charged in the Indictment.

1696. 8 W. III.

Then as to the Precedent, That 'tis an ill Precedent: I must confess I am not afraid of a Precedent of this Kind. I should be glad if these Gentlemen should turn back, and see how many Attainders have been by Act of Parliament: But I dare say, there have been more Men destroyed by the irregular Judgment of a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, than by all the Acts of Parliament, whether legal or illegal.

As to what they say of my Lord Coke, who mentions the Attainder of my Lord Cromwell, and Sir J. Mortimer, the Gentleman pretends to repeat my Lord Coke's Words at large; but he did not deal so well as he ought to do by you; for he should have told you all my Lord Coke tells you; That Cromwell was never brought to answer, neither permitted to say any thing for himself, neither in Parliament, nor where he was. Now, pray Sir, is this the present Case? Hath not Sir John Fenwick been heard by you? I would be glad that Gentleman, or any body could shew me, that any Person hath had so fair an Hearing before Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, as Sir John Fenwick hath had before you. As to Sir J. Mortimer, 'tis much of the same Nature. My Lord Coke says, there was a Jealousy of Sir J. Mortimer's pretending to the Crown; and because they suspected him, they did give out that he said, That the Earl of March was Heir to the Crown; and, if he did not, he would pretend to it himself, &c. Now, says my Lord Coke, this was but a bare Pretence, and nothing else. He speaks as if he did not ever think him guilty of those Words; and says, having indicted him, they not being able to proceed that Way, they made it good by Act of Parliament, and he was condemned. So that what my Lord Coke complains of is, That these Persons so condemned were never heard: And, if this be the Truth of the Matter, these Precedents (with Submission) have no Affinity with yours. But I believe this may be said in this Case, Sir John Fenwick hath been heard, and that more than ever any one in Parliament was before, in a Capital Matter.

As to the Case of my Lord Strafford, he had Counsel assigned him to stand by and hear, but not to prompt him. If there arose any Point of Law, he was to propose the Matter to the Lords, and the Counsel was to assist him by their Directions. And, in the Case here before you, you have allowed Sir John Fenwick Counsel; not only to assist him in Point of Law, but to assist him in Point of Fact too. They have made Answer for him; so that I say he hath been tried fairer than any Man ever was in Parliament, be it upon Bill, or upon Impeachment; that is, as to the Matter of Precedent. Then it hath been ſaid, This would not be good before the Judges. I muſt confeſs it; but the Evidence, Captain Porter gave of his own Knowledge of Sir John Fenwick, every body will agree, is what the Law will allow. But he is but a ſingle Witneſs, and you ought not to proceed upon the Evidence of a ſingle Witneſs. Let us ſee how the Law ſtands upon the whole Matter. You have made an Act of Parliament laſt Seſſions, and I own the Law was before that, that there ſhould be two Witneſſes in Caſe of Treaſon; but all that goes no farther than to Trials in the King's-Bench, and Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer and Goal Delivery. And if you look upon thoſe Acts, 'tis very plain, for they refer moſtly unto the Judges, what they ſhall do in ſuch and ſuch Caſes: But then you will ſee what is the Reaſon of making thoſe Rules: I think there was good Reaſon that you ſhould not put that Power in Perſons below that you have in your ſelves: You give them Rules to proceed by, and they are to keep up ſtrictly to them: You may act by other Rules. 'Tis one thing when I command my Servant to do ſuch a Thing, and another thing when I act my ſelf: And there is a Difference when a Judicature is by few, and when 'tis by many; the Law puts a greater Confidence in many, than in a few. The ordinary Trial is by twelve Jurors; but if it be a Matter of an high Nature, as an Attaint, then it ſhall be by twenty-four; and you do prefer a greater Number in every thing to a few. 'Tis ſaid, tho' a Judge do think in his Conſcience a Perſon guilty, yet he ought not to make uſe of that private Knowledge; and a Caſe was quoted out of H. 4. but I think that Judge might have behaved himſelf ſomething better than he did; and, ſure I am, now he would be blamed. I do not ſay that a Judge, upon his private Knowledge, ought to judge, he ought not: But if a Judge upon the Bench knows any thing whereby the Priſoner might be acquitted or convicted (not generally known) then, I ſay, he ought to be called from the Place where he ſate, and go to the Bar, and give Evidence of his Knowledge: And ſo the Judge, in H. IV's Time, ought to have done, and not to have ſuffered the Priſoner to have been convicted, and then get a Pardon for him; for a Pardon will not always do the Buſineſs; for there may be a Forfeiture that the King's Pardon does not reſtore. But though we act as Judges here, do we act only as Judges? I thought we were as well Triers of the Fact as Judges. There is this Difference between the Judicature of Weſtminſter-Hall and this Court. They are to judge upon a Fact found by a Jury; but we act both the Part of a Jury in trying, and alſo of Judges in judging what the Fact amounts to: So that if a Jury-man may make Uſe of his private Knowledge to acquit the Priſoner, as (I think) no body doubts but 'tis his Duty to do, then every Gentleman in this Houſe may make uſe of his private Knowledge to acquit the Priſoner, or convict him.

I confeſs, for my Part, I am ſatisfied, that Sir John Fenwick is guilty of this Crime for which he ſtands accuſed. I do think this Crime is High Treaſon: I think there is no Danger of a Precedent in this Caſe, if you convict him, being convinced, upon the Evidence you have heard, that he is Guilty. I own, if any Gentleman think he is not guilty of meeting at the King's-Head Tavern in Leadenhall-Street, or at Mrs. Mountjoy's, for the Purpoſe given in Evidence, he ought to be againſt the Bill: But I think every Man that is of that Opinion ought to be for the Bill. I am one of thoſe that think he is Guilty; and therefore am for committing the Bill.

1696. 8 W. III.

Mr. Harcourt. I can readily agree with the Gentleman that ſpoke laſt, that High Treaſon is the higheſt Crime in the Law; and further, That the Matter of the Indictment, that is mentioned in the Recital of the Act, is undoubtedly High Treaſon: And I am ſure he will agree with me in one Thing alſo, That the greater the Crime is that any Perſon is accuſed of, the clearer the Proof ought to be by which he is convicted.

Mr. Harcourt, (afterwards Lord Harcourt.)

Some Gentlemen have begun their Diſcourſe in Relation to the Power; but ſure 'tis no Argument becauſe I can do a thing, therefore I will do it; becauſe we have Power to repeal Magna Charta, and all other ſubſequent Laws which have been made in Favour of Life and Liberty, and Property, by the ſame Conſequence we ought to do it. A better Reaſon muſt be given me, before I conſent to this Bill.

Then for the Precedents 'tis ſaid, There have been many, aud many have been mentioned: And, if I thought it worth while, I would mention many more you have not heard of: As for Precedents in general, they are ſo far imitable as they are grounded upon true Reaſon, and agreeable to Juſtice: But I don't remember any one Precedent of this Nature for a Perſon in Cuſtody, forth-coming to be tried, yet to be attainted without a Trial at Law, but what has been univerſally branded; and they all ſeem to be Reproaches even to theſe ill Reigns in which they were uſually made; and rather to be marked out as Rocks for us to avoid, than Patterns for our Imitation.

Before I particularly mention the Facts how they ſtand before you, I would beg Leave to obſerve upon the general Method of your Proceedings, and tell you what ſtaggers me in it.

I have often heard this called a Trial, and that we are the Judges: The Gentleman that ſpoke laſt gave us another Title, and told us we were the Jury alſo: I know no Trial for Treaſon but what is confirmed by Magna Charta, per Judicium Parium, by a Jury, which is every Engliſhman's Birth-right, and is always eſteemed one of our darling Privileges; or per legem terræ, which includes Impeachments in Parliament; but if it be a Trial, 'tis a pretty ſtrange one, where the Perſon that ſtands upon his Trial hath a Chance to be hanged, but none to be ſaved. I can't tell under what Character to conſider our ſelves, whether we are Judges or Jurymen. I never heard of a Judge, I am ſure not of a Jury-man, before, but he was always upon his Oath:

1696. 8 W. III.

Oath: I never heard yet of a Judge but had Power to examine Witneſſes upon Oath, to come to a clear Sight and Knowledge of the Fact: I never heard of a Judge, but, if a Priſoner came before him, the Priſoner was always told, he ſtood upon his Deliverance, and had not only a Power to condemn the Guilty, but to ſave the Innocent. Have we this Power? Suppoſe, upon ſuch a Trial as this (if it muſt be called ſo), it may ſo happen, that a Perſon that comes before us ſhould be the innocenteſt Man in the World; what Judgment is it that we can give, for ſo much as ſuch a Perſon hath made his Innocency fully appear? Is the Speaker, by his Warrant, to ſend him back again to Newgate? You can't diſpoſe of him otherwiſe, though you were ſatisfied of his Innocency: But, in ſuch a Caſe, the Party muſt undergo a double Trial, which is contrary to all the Rules I have heard of. If I am a Judge in the Caſe, I beg Leave to tell you, for my own Juſtification only, what a Definition I have met with of a Judge's Diſcretion. My Lord Chief Juſtice Coke ſays, 'tis Diſcernere per Legem; and, by that Diſcretion, I beg Leave to conſider this Caſe: If Judges make the Law their Rule, they can never err; but if the uncertain arbitrary Dictates of their own Fancies, which my Lord Coke calls the crooked Cord of Diſcretion, be the Rules they go by, endleſs Errors muſt be the Effect of ſuch Judgments.

As to this particular Caſe, I did expect from the Gentleman that ſpoke laſt, that he would have told you, there was a plain Evidence why you ſhould go on to the paſſing of this Bill; but, inſtead of that, I am ſurprized to hear a thing mentioned, that in Parliamentary Proceedings a Man may be hanged by one Witneſs; certainly that is not to be taken for granted.

As to this particular Caſe, I would take Capt. Porter as upon his Oath, for Suppoſition: You have one Witneſs againſt Sir John Fenwick for High Treaſon; and, with your Leave, I deſire to examine what you have more in this Caſe.

Yeſterday you voted a Paper to be read — Goodman's Narrative or Examination; 'tis a different Caſe now; you have it before you to determine upon. Yeſterday the Queſtion was only for hearing: But, Gentlemen, now conſider how far they ought to believe it, and the other Evidence we heard. And firſt, there is ſome Evidence that Clancy tampered with Porter, and gave him a Sum of 300 l. and ſo they would infer, becauſe Porter was tampered with to be gone, therefore Goodman was. It was told us further (and I deſire I may be informed, if I am miſtaken) that Clancy ſaid, he came from Sir John Fenwick, and afterwards my Lady Mary Fenwick ſaid ſhe would make good what Clancy had ſaid: And from theſe Arguments they preſume that Sir John Fenwick knew of it. Give me Leave to tell you a Rule I never heard contradicted, That Preſumption is to be made in Favour of Life; but to preſume a Man Guilty becauſe Porter was tampered with by another,—Becauſe he ſaid it was by Sir John Fenwick's Order, ſhall we preſume Sir John Fenwick did it? Is Hear ſay to be Evidence? Or is a Man to be had to the Gallows upon Preſumption? How often, and with how much Reaſon have we heard Examinations againſt Judgments, upon Preſumptions, Inuendo's, conſtructive and accumulative Treaſon? &c.

1696. 8 W. III.

Gentlemen, There is ſome further Evidence; and that is of what was ſworn at Cook's Trial: And ſome Gentlemen thought fit to have the Record read, and an Examination of what was ſworn there. I can never go ſo far as to think it reaſonable, That what Evidence hath been given in one Caſe ſhould affect another Man; but all this is to be anſwered, by calling it Parliamentary Proceedings. We doubt 'tis no Evidence in the Courts below; but they are mentioned with ſome kind of Diſdain, as very inconſiderable. In this Caſe, I beg Leave to ſay this in their Vindication, That whatever the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall are, 'tis not therefore Reaſon, becauſe 'tis a Rule; but becauſe 'tis Reaſon, and Reaſon approved of by long Experience, therefore 'tis a Rule: And if they make their Rules for that Cauſe, I hope that is a Cauſe why we ſhould imitate them: But I would not have thoſe Rules thought Matters of Form, but Subſtance, or, more properly, Part of the Law it ſelf.

Upon the whole Matter, if no Gentleman will give us a Reaſon why this is Evidence, but one Witneſs, and that not upon Oath; and if we are come to our Parliamentary Diſcretion, to ſupply that Defect, the Want of the other, 'tis a Diſcretion I will diſclaim all the Days of my Life: And I hope you will reject the Bill.

Sir Thomas Littleton. Sir, I ſhall not trouble you long in this Debate, that hath taken up ſo much of your Time already in the Conſideration of ſome Matters we have been upon; though I did think your Time not very regularly ſpent, till this Occaſion offered it ſelf. I hope, therefore, now it will take up leſs of your Time: I ſee the great Matter that was inſiſted on before, is inſiſted upon ſtill; and I do think we may ſay it among our ſelves, though we would not let the Counſel, That we are tied up, in this Caſe, by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; but, I believe, if that was the Caſe, and the Queſtion was no otherwiſe than whether or no we are tied up by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, I believe it would receive a Determination, that we are not bound up to thoſe Rules. Sir Thomas Littleton.

But I will take leave to tell you what I think is proper for us to ground our Judgment on. I think the great Reaſon, even of thoſe that are againſt the Precedent, why they did admit Sir John Fenwick to have Counſel, and to examine Witneſſes, if we had any, and to croſs-examine the Witneſſes, and why they were willing to hear Evidence on both Sides in the Nature of a Trial; the great Reaſon was, becauſe that, in a Caſe of ſo great Conſequence as this is, they would have the beſt Information they could obtain. Why did they deſire to be informed; but that afterwards they could lay their Hands upon their Hearts, and give their Judgment upon their private Opinion, Whether he was guilty or no?

no? They ſay, we are not to give our Judgment upon our private Opinion; I always will. (It was not long ago we were not to have our Religion upon our private Opinion neither.) And, when I am juſtified in that, I will rely upon it: Whether this be ſtrictly legal Evidence, I do not lay ſo much Weight upon it, as whether it hath ſatisfied my Conſcience; and I believe there is not a Man in the Houſe but is ſo (upon what he hath heard), and doth believe that Sir John Fenwick is Guilty; and, if we believe he is Guilty, I would be glad to know by what Rules in the World any Man can give his Vote againſt this Bill, being of that Belief. And I tell you why I think every Man believes ſo—becauſe every Man in the Kingdom, that hath not heard ſo much as we have heard, does believe him to be ſo: And I can't think that their Repreſentatives only ſhould be of another Opinion.

What Evidence have you had? You have had Capt. Porter's Evidence, and that would be good even in inferior Courts: And beſides that, you have the Evidence of what Goodman did ſwear before the Grand Jury; you have heard what he did ſwear, and the Grand Jury did believe him: You have heard likewiſe what he did ſwear in another Cauſe to the Petit Jury, and they believed him, and convicted the Priſoner upon it: And though this be not legal Proof, ſtrictly ſpeaking, will any body ſay that I have Reaſon to disbelieve this Man, and think he hath ſworn falſe? Ay, but here is but one Witneſs, Gentlemen tell you. I will put a Caſe where I believe this Houſe would attaint a Man without any Witneſs. Suppoſe two Perſons had ſeen Sir John Fenwick kill the King (I believe we ſhould not have pulled him in Pieces in a barbarous Manner, but he would have had a Trial); and ſuppoſe, before his Trial, they had been conveyed away, if before they had ſworn this to a Grand Jury, and they had found the Bill; I believe this Houſe would have attainted him for it.

Sir, I do not think that we ſhould ſtand upon theſe little Niceties, nor be bound by the little formal Proceedings of other Courts, when the Government is at Stake. We are ſent hither to take Care that the Publick Safety do not ſuffer any Miſchief from the Enemies of it: We have had Plot upon Plot; and I have heard ſo much ſaid on Behalf of the Lancaſhire Plot without Doors, that I wiſh we do not get an ill Name upon our ſelves before we have done. We have this Power to exert upon extraordinary Occaſions; and here is a Man that hath endeavoured to ſubvert the Government and Well-being of them that ſent you hither. I hope you will uſe it now; and if they knew who were not of that Opinion, I believe thoſe that ſent them would hardly ſend them any more.

Mr. Howe.

Mr. Howe. Sir, as to the Argument, That if it was known how we gave our Opinion, thoſe that are againſt this Bill, the People would not chuſe them again: I am not afraid of that, I have been told ſo often: And yet I find the People that I live amongſt, uſe me better and better every Day; and I believe, Sir, they will deſire to uſe me, when they will lay other Men aſide. I muſt in ſome Meaſure ſupport what was ſeemed to be reflected on an Honourable Gentleman, in that he ſaid, he had rather be tried by 12 than 400. I am of his Opinion, and this is my Reaſon for it: I have my lawful Challenge in Caſe of the 12; and if there be any on the Pannel I have offended, I can deſire they may be withdrawn, and that cannot be done in any Caſe here.

1696. 8 W. III.

But Gentlemen put the Streſs of their Argument upon that which no Body denies, and prove it handſomely; and well they may: For it is ſelf-evident, the Power, of Parliament they inſiſt on, when no Body pretends but we have a Power to do what we pleaſe: But I muſt ſay of their Power what Bracton ſays of the King's Power, Hoc tamen non poteſt facere, quod non poteſt juſte facere. It is ſaid, we are not tied up to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall; we are not ſo: But I beg Leave to tell them, that what is Reaſon and Juſtice in Weſtminſter-Hall, is ſo every where. And I do take theſe particular Points, we ſpeak of, to be grounded upon Reaſon and Juſtice; and ſo far we are to purſue them.

Two Evidences was not given as a Reſtraint upon Weſtminſter-Hall, for Fear they ſhould do ſomething that is ill, for they are anſwerable for every Thing they do ill; but they were allowed to the People of England, that they might have a fair Trial; and it was thought conformable to the Laws of God, the Law of Reaſon, and the Law of all Countries, That no Man's Life ſhall be taken away upon any particular Occaſion: And for to ſay, that a Man's Life may be taken away by two Witneſſes in one Place, and by one in another, is to ſay, that there is no certain Rule to prove a Man guilty of a Crime that may forfeit his Life, which is not admitted in any Country whatever.

But truly, Sir, we are going a little further; for the Gentleman before told you, There was no need of two Witneſſes; one would ſerve: But now they go a little further, for they tell you there needs never a one at all; for I do ſay, If every Gentleman here is to be guided by his private Opinion, there is no Man but before he heard this Cauſe, did conceive in their Opinion ſome Judgment of his Guilt: And, Sir, I think no Man but would have told you, that would have been an unjuſt Judgment.

But they do ſay, That the Bill of Treaſon that was made laſt Seſſions of Parliament, was to limit Weſtminſter-Hall; and that I will truſt that with my ſelf, which I will not truſt with my Servant. Why truly, if I, or my Servant, was to commit an Error, or a great Crime, I had rather my Servant did it than my ſelf: But I do not think that my Servant ſhould be bound up from doing an unjuſt Thing, and my ſelf ſhould have the Liberty to do it. Another Thing that Law provided againſt was, the People ſhould not be hanged without ſufficient Evidence; and theſe Things have been long complained of: But I never thought that the Evidence of one Witneſs and one Witneſs would be ſupported in theſe Days.

But,

1696. 8 W. III.

But, Sir, what have you done? We have prevented People being executed by an Arbitrary Power, and in an unlawful Way in Weſtminſter-Hall; but if you give this Example, you have brought the ſame Proceedings into this Houſe, and that they may be perpetually executed here; and ſo the Subject will be never the ſafer for the Bill of Treaſon.

And I do believe likewiſe, that it is better that a very heinous Fault, or a Miſtake, ſhould be committed in Weſtminſter-Hall for ten Years together, than once perpetrated in this Houſe: And my Reaſon is this; becauſe Weſtminſter-Hall have a Law to be tried by, if they tranſgreſs that Law, and there is a Way by turning out of Judges and other Things; and this Houſe hath no Superior Power, and when they do a Thing they make it a Law: So that this Houſe (as it hath often been obſerved) can make this Nation unhappy; becauſe this Houſe can only eſtabliſh Arbitrary Power and Miſery upon this Nation by a Law.

Sir, as to the Evidence, to ſay ſomething to it, ſince every Body hath ſpoke to it; for my Part, I do confeſs to you, the longer I ſit here, and the more I have heard of this Trial, the leſs I have been convinced within my ſelf, that theſe Witneſſes can know any Thing of Sir John Fenwick's Guilt. I have heard Captain Porter give his Evidence; but that is no ſufficient Proof to me: I have heard what Evidence Goodman did give to the Grand Jury; but whether they did ask ſuch Queſtions as I ſhould, if I had been of the Grand Jury; or whether they did confront him with Evidence, I cannot tell? Therefore, though the Grand Jury was convinced by it, it is no Reaſon to convince us; becauſe we might not be convinced by the ſame Evidence.

But to go farther: There is very great Reaſon to believe that Goodman was not then at this Place, and that not one Word that Goodman ſays is true. I have ſuch Reaſon for what I ſay, that if Cook's Trial had been before this Houſe, (not to arraign Weſtminſter-Hall, though I think we are a Superior Power, and I may ſay what I pleaſe of that Trial); I ſay, if Cook's Trial had been before this Houſe, and what I have heard be true, I do think they would hardly have found Cook guilty upon Goodman's Evidence: It is pretty evident now, Goodman was not at the King's-Head; for there were three as poſitive Evidence as could be, that he was not at that Place when he ſwore he was: And I obſerve a little Failure in Captain Porter's Evidence in that Point; for I don't think it proved by Captain Porter, that Goodman was by when this Diſcourſe was; for he ſays he ſpake of this Thing at Mrs. Mountjoy's, and dined there.

Members. No, no: It was at the King's-Head.

Mr. How. Well, there was but one Place where it was. Now, whether Captain Porter heard them talk of it before Goodman came in, or whether Goodman be a good Witneſs, he having been there but the latter Part of the Time, which ſeemed to me to be the Time they ſhould have given over their Talk of the Buſineſs, they having been ſo long together before; but it does not appear to me, that Goodman can be a good Witneſs.

1696. 8 W. III.

But I take it, that it is not juſt, nor reaſonable to find a Man guilty upon one Witneſs and Circumſtantial Evidence. I did mention a Caſe where there was a poſitive Witneſs, and a Circumſtantial Witneſs, it was in my Lord Delamere's Trial; and yet that was not thought a convincing Argument by the Lords to find him Guilty; and I hope no Conſideration will oblige us to do that which I am ſure we ſhould blame them for doing.

The Conſequence of this, Gentlemen ſay, they do not fear: I believe, if Sir John Fenwick had been told when he was Major-General of King James's Army, that I ſhould come here to ſit upon his Life, he would have laughed at it, and thought it impoſſible; but the contrary has happened: And I have ſeen Parties hang one another with ſuch Violence, I pray God we may keep from it. I do not know, we are all concerned in ſome Meaſure, it having been the Unhappineſs of this Nation, that at one Time or another every Body hath been concerned, that they may have a Proceeding of this ſort againſt them, and this ſurmounts all that at preſent Gentlemen can do; for it extends beyond all Pardons, and will reach beyond the Act of Indempnity. God knows who may be ſerved ſo, notwithſtanding all the Acts of Indempnity.

Sir, there is one Thing that is ſaid further, which the Gentlemen at the Bar conclude with, as a ſubſtantial Argument that we do not aim at Sir John Fenwick's Blood (God forbid we ſhould), but at his Confeſſion: You will here read the Bill once, and twice will commit and paſs the Bill (Sir John Fenwick not confeſſing), and ſtill this is not to aim at his Blood: But it happens, perhaps, that this Man knows no more of this Matter; and this Man is racked in a manner to Death from Reading to Reading, becauſe he does not confeſs; and at laſt he comes to be hanged, drawn and quartered (inſtead of High Treaſon), for not confeſſing it.

This I take to be the dangerouſeſt Part of all the Arguments that have been urged: For this I muſt tell you, that, according to my private Opinion, I do believe that Sir John Fenwick does know of no more Perſons concerned (nor do I believe he knows all that he ſays) than he tells you. He hath not been a Man that hath kept Company with great Men: He hath generally relieved the poor Jacobite Officers: There are five People, as I take it, he hath told you he did converſe with; I would fain know in what Plot any Man converſes with above Five of the Plotters? There may be a Plot that may be moſt dangerous, and yet a Perſon that knows of this Plot, may not know above two or three others that are concerned in it.

But the great Argument is, Take care of your Government. In the firſt Place, they muſt ſuppoſe the Safety of the Government depends upon his Execution, or why do they uſe it as an Argument? But I wiſh they would ſhew me the Government would be one Penny the worſe if this Bill does not paſs. Do you want want Examples of Punishment to deter Men? No; you have had lawful Proof against four or five Persons, and they have been executed: Here are Examples made, that no Body for the future may presume to plot together and not to be executed.

What is the Reason of this Bill then? Why, there is a Plot going on, Sir John Fenwick hath been imprisoned this six Months and more; and will you hang him because there is a Plot now going on? What Consequence is that? Do you think that he knows any Thing of it, or that he can discover it? It hath been started since his Confinement it may be, and he knows nothing of it: So that as to what is pressed of his Confession, I know no one Thing would be gained by it, that could be useful to the Government; for I believe all hath been discovered already that he knows, and that Plot hath been utterly disappointed, and they have been fain to make a new one. Will you proceed in a Bill of Attainder, unless the Matter be of the greatest Consequence? The Preamble of the Bill for attainting the Duke of Monmouth gave a substantial Reason for it, that he was in Arms, and could not be brought to Justice: That implied, that if he could have been brought to Justice, they would not have attainted him.

I think I need not give you more Arguments in this Matter, I wish I could hear those that have been given well answered. I shall say no more; but I know this, that my private Opinion shall never guide me in this Case; it is not the same Thing with the Case my worthy Country-man put: In the Case of Religion, my private Opinion does not affect other Persons; indeed it does the Papists, where they will murther others that are not of that Religion.

Mr. Boyle. The Disorder a certain worthy Gentleman was in, makes me the more concerned, for fear of falling into it my self.

I hope in this Debate, Gentlemen will be very cautious of using it as an Argument, What Application our Votes shall have without Doors, and with those we represent, when we are to give Judgment, as far as in us lies, for the Life and Death of a Man; and therefore I must observe, that the Eagerness that is justifiable upon Impeachments, may not look so well, now we are Judges upon a Bill of Attainder. You have gone over the whole Course of the Evidence, and I believe that this Debate will shew you pretty plainly what is to be the Fate of this Bill; for I believe all the Arguments will now be used that can be: As to what hath been said of extorting a Confession, I take it to be quite out of the Case.

I am sorry to be engaged one Way or another: I would not, if I could help it, out of the House, be upon a Jury of Life and Death; yet, in that Case, I should know the Law, or be told it by the Judges: But in this Case, we are both Jurymen and Judges, and know not what Rules we are to go by; but set up a Court of Equity, which hath no Bounds, but our own Consciences.

As to Sir John Fenwick, I know him not; as to his Cause, I am sure I am against it; but how far I think him guilty or not, I think is not the single Point to be considered. I must confess, there have been several People accused of this Conspiracy, and have been named by the Evidence at the Trials; and I believe they are much alike Guilty, being upon the same Evidence; but as to all that hath been opened before you, and proved, it can amount to no more then this, There is but one Evidence, which by the Law would be a good Evidence to convict him in another Place; and therefore I do agree with the Gentleman that spoke under the Gallery, that this is a very extraordinary Case; for one Witness is not sufficient at Law to convict him, and the Law would be very different, if I am to judge according to my own Opinion, and not by the Rules prescribed by the Law: But though this Proceeding is not strictly according to the Law of the Land, yet, if it was such an extraordinary Case that required you to dispense with those Forms, and come to this extraordinary Manner of Proceeding, I think, for my own Part, it might be supported by the Necessity of it, for it is impossible that it should be otherwise in Practice: Thus, when the Government is at Stake, and nothing will preserve it but the breaking through the settled Forms; then the Government will break through them, and whatever Rule you prescribe, it will always happen so.

There is a very extraordinary Case, and that was in the Conspiracy of the State of Venice, above a Hundred Years ago, I think, set on Foot by the Spaniards; then the State, to get the whole Matter out, promised a Pardon to as many as were concerned in it; and after they had promised it, and treated with them about it, they thought it necessary, for the Preservation of the whole, to break their Faith, and they were all put to Death. This was upon Point of Preservation of the Government.

But Sir, as to Precedents, give me Leave to say, I do not give that Authority to them, unless I know all the Springs, and secret History and Transactions, that were their Guide in making those Precedents; and as to Precedents that have been quoted, when the Parliament has declared what was Treason, and what was not Treason, or have declared Constructive Treason, they may be grounded upon the Statute of 25 Edw. III. But I think, there is no Statute upon which they can ground the Condemnation of a Man upun one Witness.

In the Case of my Lord Strafford, upon Constructive Treasons, it was there said, That it was a Fire that had lain hid for 240 Years; and that it never broke out before, but to consume him and his Posterity. It was answered by Pym, If that was the Case, it was not for want of Law to justify such a Proceeding, but all that Time had not produced such an Offender.

I do not doubt, but if any one will consider the late Conspiracy; and if that was the Question, but it was as extraordinary as any Thing can happen; for it was to subject their Country to a Foreign Power, which is very extraordinary, and several Persons were concerned concerned in it: But there is one extraordinary Part which I do not remember this Gentleman is accuſed of, and that is the Aſſaſſination. Treaſon it ſelf is a very extraordinary Crime; but, give me Leave to ſay, that extraordinary Part is not alledged againſt this Gentleman; and this Bill does not ſeem to be brought in for that, wherein he is concerned in common with ſome others, but for the ſubſequent Matter alledged in the Bill. This Bill is grounded, not ſo much upon that he is guilty, as a great many more are, as upon ſeveral Circumſtances which have happened to no Body elſe. Give me Leave to inſtance in a Caſe now in my Head, (I beg your Pardon that I ramble; 'tis from the Awe I have upon me from this Aſſembly). in Catiline's Conſpiracy; and if that was our Caſe, no doubt there would be another ſort of Argument for it: There they conſulted what to do with Cethegus and the other Conſpirators; he was at the Head of an Army, which only expected his Orders to lay Rome in Aſhes: The Queſtion was, Whether they ſhould break the Porcian Law? And for the Safety of the Senate, they were put to Death before the Aſſembly roſe.

Now to come to this Part of it: Though Sir John Fenwick is a great Offender, yet I think his Caſe is not ſo extraordinary, as to make you proceed upon this Bill. I do take his living, or dying, not to be of that Conſequence as this Bill of Attainder: I know not how he comes to be ſo conſiderable when in Hold; for when he walked about Town, I never heard he was feared or regarded at that Time.

But to come to the Allegations in your Bill, upon which you are to ground your Judgment; the firſt Part is a new Conſpiracy, that is, for intending to create a Jealouſy between the King and theſe Noble Perſons: As to them, you have already paſſed a Vote in their Juſtification; and I think, their Actions may juſtifie them to the World, as much as any Vote of the Houſe of Commons: But whatever that may be, I think it was a fooliſh Piece of Conſpiracy, as well as an ill one, for one, when he was in Danger of being hanged for one Plot, to venture upon another; and I think, there was at that Time two Witneſſes to bring him to his Trial, and that is an Allegation in the Bill. And as to the Protracting of his Trial, it is natural, and ſo juſtifiable, whether innocent or not, and what every Body attempts; and no Body can wonder at it: But in one Caſe or the other, it can be no ſufficient Ground to attaint him.

The next Thing that is ſaid is, That he hath been the Occaſion of the withdrawing of the Evidence. Now I muſt obſerve, that is not alledged in the Bill, and is proved but by Hear-ſay: But ſuppoſe it was true, and alledged; if any Man concerned in Treaſon, ſhall endeavour, by Friends or otherwiſe, to get off an Evidence, can that amount to that which is deſigned to be puniſhed by this Bill? To High-Treaſon? It is the Part of thoſe that are entruſted with thoſe Matters, to be in Expectation of ſuch Practices. Whar are Gaols for, but to keep them in Cuſtody? And the People employed in thoſe Buſineſſes are to to take Care of it. Are we to ſupply a Defect of what ought to have been done in another Place?

So that I do ſay, That a Precedent in an extraordinary Caſe, is no Precedent to be uſed in a little Caſe; it may be urged, but it is but a Pretence: When you have paſſed this Bill, which is the Record, the Matter will appear no otherwiſe, than are the Suggeſtions of your Bill. A Man hath aſperſed great Perſons, which is a great Fault indeed (for he is not charged with the withdrawing of the Evidence); therefore attaint him upon one Evidence: I think by this Bill you will open a Door for a Precedent of all Treaſons of the ſame Nature. Sir, there have been many Precedents mentioned; I will trouble you with none, becauſe moſt Gentlemen have read the Argument of Mr. St. John in this Caſe: I muſt confeſs, unleſs there was that Neceſſity as is pretended, which I do not ſee, I do not ſee how you can juſtify paſſing this Bill of Attainder, either by the Law of God or Man, in any Nation allowed.

I muſt confeſs, I have no manner of Concern how this Queſtion goes; what I have ſaid, is more to ſatisfy my own Judgment, than work upon other People: I am not ſatisfied there is that Neceſſity that is pretended; and therefore, as my Judgment is now informed, I cannot give my Vote for committing of this Bill.

Mr. Harley. It would be very unreaſonable and impertinent to trouble you long, after ſuch a Debate; I ſhall avoid Repetition of what hath been ſuggeſted to you, much better from other Perſons than would have been from me. Mr Harley (afterwards Earl of Oxford.)

I own, 'tis a Caſe of great Concern, and it is my Misfortune that I ſhould ever ſit upon a Thing of this Nature; but I will diſcharge my Conſcience always, and give what Arguments occur to me, why I am againſt this Bill.

Gentlemen have been pleaſed in their Arguments, to enter upon the Debate of your Power and Authority, and have made that a Part of their Argument; but I think, with Submiſſion, we need not diſpute that at all. It is admitted, that there hath been Bills of Attainder paſſed formerly, and your Authority is not under Diſpute; for the Legiſlative in all Nations, have a Power lodged in them, for the Safety of the whole.

But your proper Enquiry is, Whether this is ſuch a Caſe as you ought to exerciſe this extraordinary Power? omne regnum ſub graviore regno: Though you have this abſolute Authority, yet it is to be executed by the Rules of Reaſon, and by the Rules (for ſuch there are) of Eternal Juſtice; and I look upon this as one that is inviolable, That no Man can forfeit his Life, in ſuch a Caſe as this is, without two Witneſſes: I muſt adhere to that, becauſe I have heard nothing in this Debate that can make me quit that Maxim; and it is ſuch an antient Land-Mark, that I will never draw a Curſe upon me, and my Poſterity, for removing of it. I beg Leave to ſpeak with this Earneſtneſs to you.

Gentlemen have been pleaſed to make it Part of their Arguments, The great Danger the Government is in, if this Bill does not ſucceed. I will not uſe many Words, but I think that Argument ought not to be taken in the Groſs, but to be examined, Whether this Argument, of the Hazard of the Government, is of equal Poize for you to break the Eternal Rules of Juſtice. I won't quote the Caſe, becauſe every Gentleman knows it, (though there was two Witneſſes in that Caſe, to put an innocent Perſon to Death) where it is urged, the Romans will come, and take our State and Nation: But with how much Reaſon that was urged, every Body knows, and how far Government is now in Danger. Let us conſider, Is this Gentleman out of your Power? Is the Government in Danger of a Man that is your Priſoner? Is he in open Rebellion againſt you, if this Law does not paſs? If you have not your Hands in this Blood? Is he not under the Power of the Law? Did not he tell you ſo himſelf?

Every Gentleman ought to have a Zeal for the Government, and I wiſh it was as viſible in every Thing elſe; but if that be ſo, give us Leave alſo to ſpeak with Zeal for our Liberty and Antient Conſtitution. The Argument is turned two Ways; on one Side you are told, That this probably may make him confeſs ſomething; and by others, he is to be made an Example of Puniſhment. This is the firſt Beginning of a Bill of this Nature; but the ſame Reaſon that leads you to this, muſt lead you to all the reſt: The ſame Reaſon that is urged for this Bill to make him confeſs, will lead you to bring in a Bill to make him a good Evidence; this every Body muſt allow to be the Conſequence of it.

How does this Bill come before you? It comes before you upon a villainous, ſcandalous Aſperſion of ſome great Men; though I know them not all, yet I have a great Value for them, and I would make their Caſe my own: But if they were the neareſt Relations I had, I would be againſt this Bill upon their Account; and let any one examine the Reaſon of it.

Sir, I won't run into Precedents, but only becauſe it hath been told you, That the Precedents were made in one Reign by one Faction, and then the Attainders were reverſed in another Reign, by another Faction. There is one occurs to my Mind which hath been touched at, and is at leaſt of Inſtruction to me: There was a Caſe in Edw. the IIId's Time; there was the Depoſition of a King, a King barbarouſly murthered, and his Son upon the Throne; and there was the Notoriety of the Fact, for which a great Man was attainted in his Son's Reign, and no different Title: And four Years after, a Bill was brought in againſt the Earl of March; and one of the Articles againſt him was, That he had procured that Attainder of that Noble Lord, under Pretence of ſome Letter, or Paper, that was ſigned by him; which, if it was ſo, ſays the Record, was no Evidence.

I lay this before Gentlemen, to ſhew them how Things have turned, and Precedents that have been made very unanimouſly; but in bad Times have been turned to ſhed the beſt Blood in England. It grieves me to my Soul to hear of Mr. Corniſh, whoſe Attainder you have reverſed, to hear that quoted as a Precedent in this Houſe: It is not whether two Witneſſes be the Rule of Weſtminſter-Hall, it is the Rule of right Reaſon; and it is a Maxim in your Law, Make what Law you will againſt the Law of God, it is void; and this is the Law of God, and right Reaſon. 1696. 8 W. III.

You muſt provide for the Government; and when you cannot do it by Courſe of Law, then Armies muſt do it when the Courts are ſhut. I hope Gentlemen will not put a hard Conſtruction upon what I have ſaid; I have done it to diſcharge a good Conſcience.

Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave. I am ſure, at this Time of Night, I am unfit to ſpeak in ſo great a Matter; I muſt confeſs, I ſhould not have troubled you, if it had not been in the Caſe of Blood. Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave.

You have had a great Debate before you of the Power of Parliaments, and that hath been ſufficiently argued; and I have not Learning enough to give you any Precedents that have not been already quoted: But every Body does agree in this, That what Power you have of this kind, is not to be exerciſed but upon extraordinary Occaſions. Now I would be glad to know, What this extraordinary Occaſion is?

Every Body allows, that Treaſon is the greateſt Crime a Man can be guilty of; and the Charge of this Gentleman is High-Treaſon: But therefore in this Caſe, muſt you exerciſe this Authority? Pray wherein does this Caſe differ from any other Caſe of High-Treaſon, that any other Perſon will be practiſing againſt the Government? All the difference that I can make of it, conſiſts in two Points; the one is, That he hath prevaricated with the Government, and the other, That Gentlemen ſay, he hath been a Means of Procraſtinating his Trial; in which Time, an Evidence hath made his Eſcape. I will allow you, that it is a very great Crime for any one to aſperſe ſo great Men as he hath done; but I would be glad to know, whether there being ſuch an Ingredient, it be ſufficient to attaint him of High-Treaſon upon that Account.

Then as to that of a Witneſs being gone, Gentlemen have ſaid, They are apt to believe, and there is great Preſumption, that he hath been the Occaſion of this Witneſs being gone. Is that an Ingredient ſufficient, though at preſent it hath not been proved to you? But if it had been proved, I ſhould not however think that is Treaſon: Then if this be the only Difference between this Gentleman, and any other Perſon that ſhall be practiſing to ſubvert the Government, I would know, if there be but one Witneſs againſt any Man for conſpiring againſt the King, if they may not have Recourſe to this Precedent, to proceed againſt him by Bill of Attainder? For the Argument is, Whoſoever is endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, provided there be but one Witneſs, you are obliged by Virtue of your Legiſlative Power, to bring a Bill of Attainder againſt him: And what then? Of what Uſe is the great Care and Wiſdom of your Anceſtors, and your ſelves, that where a Crime is ſo great, and the Puniſhment ſo great, there ſhould be two Witneſſes?

1696. 8 W. III.

I was mightily ſurprized to hear Gentlemen tell you, That two Witneſſes is a Form in your Law, and a Form in inferior Courts: I never could believe that was a Form; for according to your Law, no Man ſhall be declared guilty of Treaſon, unleſs there be two Witneſſes againſt him; ſo that it gives in a manner, a Determination to the Crime: That I take to be the Caſe.

A Gentleman told you, That he was fully ſatisfied by Proof, that this Gentleman is Guilty: But how can a Man ſatisfy his own Conſcience, to condemn any Man by a Law that is ſubſequent to the Fact? For that is the Caſe; and pray ſee the Danger of Precedents: It now will appear upon your Journals, that you have cauſed to be read, a Depoſition of a Perſon that was abſent, taken before a Juſtice of Peace, when the Perſon accuſed had no Opportunity to interrogate him; and likewiſe, that you have heard a Witneſs as to what a Man ſwore in the Trial of another Man: All this will appear upon your Books.

And truly, I would be glad to know, if another Age may not be apt to think, that you took theſe to make good the Defect of a another Witneſs; and then I muſt appeal to you, if you have not admitted of a Teſtimony, which according to no Law is admitted.

They ſay, you are not tied to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall, nor their Forms: Is there any Law in being, that ſays a Judge may hear a Witneſs as to what was ſworn upon the Trial of another Perſon, to condemn him that was not Party to that Trial? If there be no ſuch Law, then the Rule is founded upon Juſtice and common Right, that nothing ſhall be brought againſt a Man, when a Man was not a Party when the Oath was made, and he had no Opportunity to examine him.

I thought it my Duty to tell you, That when you have made this Precedent, if any Perſon ſhall be accuſed of Treaſon but by one Witneſs, there will be the ſame Reaſon to proceed thus againſt him.

Remarks on the Bill of Attainder againſt Sir John Fenwick.

The principal Points to be conſidered in this memorable Proceeding, are, 1. Whether Sir John Fenwick was charged with High Treaſon by the Bill of Attainder, when he appeared at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons?

2. If the Treaſon was duly proved, which was afterwards added to the Charge?

3. If it was not duly proved, Whether the Government was in ſuch imminent Danger from Sir John, that there was a Neceſſity of making an Act of Parliament, on Purpoſe to execute him without Proof?

1. As to the firſt Particular, Whether Sir John was charged with High Treaſon by the Bill of Attainder, when he was brought before the Commons? His Counſel ſhewed, beyond Contradiction, that he was not; and therefore never applied themſelves to defend or diſprove that Treaſon which was only recited in the Bill, and not charged upon him. And the Commons themſelves ſufficiently acknowledged, that there was then no ſuch Charge in the Bill, by that very material Amendment they afterwards made to the Bill in theſe Words, (viz.) Of which Treaſon the ſaid Sir John Fenwick is Guilty. The Counſel for Sir John had made it ſo evident, That no Tribunal in the whole World ever condemned a Man unleſs the Charge were both alledged and proved, that this Amendment appeared neceſſary even to the Houſe of Commons: But then, Whether Sir John ought not to have been heard in his Defence, after they had charged him poſitively with the Treaſon, I leave to others to determine.

1696. 8 W. III.

2. As to the ſecond Particular, Whether the Treaſon was duly proved? it ſeems to be admitted: If by due Proof we mean legal Proof, they had very little of this Kind when the Commons paſſed the Bill: Not a ſingle Witneſs to prove it upon Oath, and but one that appeared to affirm it on his bare Word, and he of a very bad Character. Indeed it was ſaid, that the Legiſlature were not tied up to Rules and Forms, but whatever they determined in their private Thoughts or Conſciences, whether they had a Syllable of legal Proof or not, was lawful; for thoſe who made the Law, might repeal or alter it as they ſaw fit; nothing they did could, ſtrictly ſpeaking, be unlawful.

And it muſt be admitted, that the Legiſlature may make what Proof they pleaſe to be legal Proof: But when this very Parliament had, within two Years, made a Law that no Man ſhould be accuſed, much leſs condemned for High Treaſon, but on the Oaths of two Witneſſes, Was it decent for them to condemn a Man without one Witneſs, till that Law was repealed, unleſs upon abſolute Neceſſity, where the Fate of the Nation depended on his Life?

Had the Legiſlative Power been lodged ſolely in the Prince here, as it is in a neighbouring Nation, and he had juſt made a Law, That no Man ſhould be accuſed of High Treaſon, but on the Teſtimony of two Witneſſes; and yet ſhould have put a Man to Death ſoon after, upon leſs Evidence, What would his Subjects have thought of it? Would it have ſatisfied them, to have ſhewn he was veſted with a Legiſlative Power; and therefore nothing he did could be unlawful? Would they not have retorted upon him, That, in Juſtice, he ought to have repealed his former Edict, before he had condemned a Subject upon leſs Evidence than his own Laws required?

Had the ſame Prince promulged a Law, That no Man ſhould get drunk, would it have been decent (though his Supreme Authority might make it lawful) to get drunk himſelf, while he puniſhed that Offence in others?

Had the Prince ſhewn, indeed, that unleſs he broke through the ordinary Rules and Forms of Law, and diſpenſed with ſome Statutes for a Time, the Nation would infallibly have been ruined; not a Subject, I believe, not a reaſonable Man, I am ſure, would have been diſſatisfied with ſuch Diſpenſations, for the Safety of the Whole: The Properties, and even the Lives, of private Men muſt ſometimes be expoſed and hazarded, where the Government is at Stake. The Safety of the People, no doubt, is the Supreme Law. The ſole Queſtion, therefore, ſeems to be, by the Conceſſions of all Parties, Whether there was a Neceſſity of taking off Sir John Fenwick? Which

1696. 8 W. III.

Which has been ſo thoroughly debated in this Trial, that nothing can be added to the Arguments on either Side. And as the Legiſlature ſeem to have determined, that there was ſuch a Neceſſity by paſſing this Bill, it would not be decent in any private Man to affirm the contrary.

It was intimated, indeed, in ſome of the Speeches that were made upon this Occaſion, That if ſome great Men had not been perſonally affronted and aſperſed by Sir John Fenwick, this Cauſe had never been brought before the Houſe; and that, in Reality, he died for High Treaſon committed againſt ſome of the Miniſtry, rather than for High Treaſon againſt his Prince. But can it be ſuppoſed the Wiſdom of the Nation ſhould be biaſſed or influenced by the Piques and Reſentments of deſigning Miniſters in a Caſe of Blood?

However, it is certainly a Point of Prudence in all Gentlemen, to give as few perſonal Affronts and unneceſſary Provocations to their Enemies as poſſible; for theſe are too often remembered to their Prejudice, when Fortune frowns.

If we are to give any Credit to Sir John's Dying Speech, or to the Speeches of ſeveral others at their Executions, Charnock was not ſent over to France to procure Foreign Forces, by the Company that met at the King's-Head, which was the very Overt-Act he and they were condemned for: And a Noble Lord, now living, as I have related already, proteſts ſolemnly, Goodman was not at that Meeting, and that there was no ſuch Diſcourſe there. So that, notwithſtanding Sir John's Guilt was ſaid to be ſo evident as to have entirely ſatisfied the Conſciences of thoſe Gentlemen that were for the Bill, ſome People ſeem to doubt of the Fact, for which he was attainted, at this Day. Sir John was, indeed, a Jacobite, and diſaffected to that Government: And if an Act had been made to hang up every Jacobite in the Nation, it would have been lawful, becauſe an Act of Parliament is Law. But ſhould the Tables have been turned, and the Jacobites have met with Succeſs, would not thoſe Gentlemen have thought it a Hardſhip, if a Law had been made to hang up all, or any Number of Men, who were known to be diſaffected to the Government, without ſome particular Treaſon legally charged and proved upon them?

It may be further obſerved, that ſome Gentlemen, who clamoured moſt violently againſt condemning Men for Treaſon in the late Reigns, without two poſitive Witneſſes, were moſt zealous, when they got into Power, to diſpenſe with ſuch Laws, and hang up their Adverſaries without any Evidence at all. What would the Friends of Lord Ruſſel and Sidney have ſaid, when a Witneſs was wanting, if the Miniſtry had procured an Act of Parliament to deſtroy them without legal Proof; when there was not one Precedent for it ſince the Foundation of the Government, where the Party was forth-coming? How would they have inſiſted on the Birth-rights and Privileges of Engliſhmen, to be tried by a Jury, and to have had the Witneſſes brought Face to Face. This would have furniſhed Sir Robert Atkyns, and Sir John Hawles, with abundant Matter for their Remarks, and made them much more voluminous than we find them. Which brings me to conſider Sir John Hawles's Anſwer in the Houſe at this Debate, when he was charged with affirming, That a Conſultation to levy War was not Treaſon; and, by the ſame Rule that he vindicated the Innocence of the Lord Ruſſel, he ought to have vindicated the Innocence of Sir John Fenwick, who was only charged with a Conſpiracy to levy War, and correſponding with the King's Enemies, The Lord Ruſſel's very Caſe.

1696. 8 W. III.

To this Sir John Hawles anſwers, That though a Conſult, or a Conſpiracy to levy War, was not Treaſon, yet he always held, that a Deſign to depoſe the King was High Treaſon. That the Treaſon, charged on my Lord Ruſſel was no more, than that he ſent ſome Perſons to view the Guards, in order to ſeize or ſurprize them (while they were upon Duty, and watching for their Prince's Safety). This was not, he ſays, ſo much a Conſpiracy to levy War againſt the King, as againſt his Guards.

But the Lord Ruſſel was certainly charged with ſeveral Overt-Acts of High Treaſon, (viz.) his being at Treaſonable Conſults to raiſe War and Rebellion, in order to depoſe and deſtroy the King, and the ſending Perſons to view the Guards in order to ſurprize them. The firſt of theſe Sir John Hawles is here pleaſed to admit was High Treaſon. And as to the ſecond, which he ſuggeſts was only a Conſpiracy to levy War upon the King's Body-Guards, while they were upon Duty about his Palace, I may appeal to all Mankind, Whether there be a Government under the Sun, either Monarchical, or Republican, that would not interpret a Conſpiracy to fall upon their Guards while they were upon Duty, watching in Defence of their Perſons, to be a Conſpiracy againſt their Maſters and Sovereigns: Or whether, at this Day, if any Perſons ſhould be convicted of conſpiring to ſurprize the Guards at the Palace of St. James's, and of ſending ſome of their Number to view what Poſture they were in, in order to ſurprize them, they would not be deemed to conſpire againſt the King himſelf, and be adjudged guilty of High Treaſon. But Lawyers, as well as other People, appear to be of one Opinion when they are out of Power, and of another when they are in Power, and will maintain the groſſeſt Abſurdities and Contradictions to gratify their Spleen, their Ambition, or Avarice.

I ſhall cloſe theſe Remarks with this ſhort Obſervation, That one of the principal Inducements to the paſſing this Bill was ſaid to be, that the Diſaffected might ſee that no Artifice could ſcreen them from the Reſentment of the Government. But I am fully convinced, no Laws can defend a Man againſt the Rage and Fury of a certain Party, who carry Malice in their very Countenances, and will not ſcruple to overturn the beſt Conſtitution to revenge themſelves on their Fellow-Subjects, when they happened to have Power in their Hands.

The next Trial we find bound up with the State Trials, was for Piracy; which having little Relation to the State, I shall only give a short Abstract of the Case, that I may enlarge the more upon such as are properly State Trials.

The Trial of Dawson, &c.

Their Case.

The Prisoners, Joseph Dawson, Edward Foreseeth, William May, William Bishop, James Lewis, and John Sparkes, were tried at an Admiralty-Sessions held at the Old-Baily, on the last Day of October 1696, for Felony and Piracy; for that on the 30th of May, in the 6th Year of King William and Queen Mary, they did surprize and seize near the Groyne in Spain, a Ship called The Charles the Second, of Forty Guns, belonging to certain English Merchants, and commanded by Capt Charles Gibson, forcing the said Captain, his Mate, and several of his Men, to go on Shore, and afterwards running away with the said Ship and Furniture.

They were indicted a second Time for piratically seizing and carrying away two Danish Ships on the 30th of August 1694. And a third Indictment was preferred against them for committing Piracy on a Moorish Ship near Surat in the East-Indies, on the 28th of September 1695.

Joseph Dawson confessed himself guilty on all the three Indictments; and the Facts were unquestionably proved against the rest: Whereupon they were all condemned and executed. These Pyrates were Part of the Crew which sailed with Captain Every, so famous for his Piracies, and the rich Prizes he made in the East-Indies, and on the Coasts of Madagascar.

Captain Vaughan's Trial

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the said Thomas Vaughan with High Treason, for that on the 8th Day of July, in the seventh Year of his present Majesty, there being then War between our said Lord the King, and Lewis the French King; and the said French King having fitted out a small Ship of War, called The Loyal Clancarty, manned with fifteen of his own Subjects, Enemies of our Lord the King, he, the said Thomas Vaughan, a Subject of this Kingdom, entered himself a Soldier on board the said Ship, and took the Command of it; and, as a Rebel to his said King and Supreme Lord, did, in the Service of the said Lewis the French King, on the High Seas, within the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England (viz.) about fourteen Leagues from Deal, by Force of Arms, traitorously adhere to the said Enemies of our Lord the King, and cruised in several Places within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, to take and destroy the Ships of our said Lord the King, and his Subjects.

And the Indictment further sets forth, That the said Thomas Vaughan, intending to stir up War and Rebellion, and to depose and destroy his said Sovereign, did, at the Time aforesaid, on the High Seas, about fourteen Leagues from Deal, assemble with other false Traitors, to the Number of fifteen Persons, armed and provided in a Warlike Manner, and cruised near several Maritime Places, with an Intent to take and spoil the Ships and Goods of our Lord the King, and his Subjects; against the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

His Irons taken off.

The Prisoner being brought to his Trial, and complaining of his Irons, the Chief Justice ordered them to be knocked off, that he might stand at Ease while he made his Defence; after which he pleaded Not Guilty: Then his Counsel, Mr. Phipps, being about to make some Exceptions to the Indictment, the Court told him, He ought to have excepted to the Indictment before the Prisoner had pleaded; for it was not the Intent of the late Act to alter the Method of Proceeding: However, he might move in Arrest of Judgment, if he had any material Exceptions to make.

Exceptions to the Indictment must be before he pleads.

The Prisoner then desiring that the Witnesses might be examined apart, out of the Hearing of each other; the Court granted his Request as a Favour, but told him, he could not demand it as his Right.

The King's Witnesses being called, Richard Crouch, one of the Seamen belonging to the Coventry Man of War, was sworn, who testified, That The Coventry coming to the Buoy in the Nore (at the Thames' Mouth), they spied a two and twenty-Oar-Barge, called The Loyal Clancarty, of which the Prisoner was Commander, and perceived he had a Design upon two Pinks that lay there, but The Coventry coming up, prevented it. That The Coventry chased The Loyal Clancarty, whereupon she run a-ground upon the Flats, and they pursued her with the Boats belonging to The Coventry, and took her. That there were five and twenty Men on Board the Barge, commanded by the Prisoner Vaughan, an Irishman; and that they came from France with a Design to burn the Ships in the Nore, as they understood.

Then Edmund Courtney, another Witness, was called, to prove that Vaughan, the Prisoner, run away to France with a Cuſtom-Houſe Boat: But his Counſel objected to this Evidence, becauſe this Fact was not mentioned in the Indictment; for, by the late Act for regulating Trials of Treaſon, no Evidence was to be admitted of an Overt-Act, not expreſly laid in the Indictment.

1696. 8 W. III.

No Evidence to be given of a Fact not laid.

To which the King's Counſel anſwered, That in an Indictment for compaſſing the King's Death, indeed, the Overt-Acts muſt be laid; becauſe the compaſſing or conſpiring the King's Death could not be diſcovered, but by ſuch Overt-Acts: But levying War, and adhering to the King's Enemies, were Overt-Acts of themſelves, and needed no other Acts to manifeſt them.

Whereupon the Chief Juſtice Holt declared his Opinion, That an Indictment for levying War, or adhering to the King's Enemies, generally was not good, unleſs it was alledged in what Manner the Party levied War, or adhered to the King's Enemies: And if they did expreſs in what Manner he levied War, or adhered to them, no Evidence ought to be given of any other Kind of War or Adherence that was not ſpecified in the Indictment. If it did not tend to prove ſome Fact that was ſpecially laid in it, They could not give Evidence of a diſtinct Act which had no Relation to the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment.

The Court thereupon directed the Counſel to prove what was done in The Loyal Clancarty; and it being demanded of Crouch the Witneſs, How he knew Vaughan was an Iriſhman? Crouch anſwered, He heard Vaughan tell the Lieutenant ſo, as he paſſed by; and he thought the Crew were all either Engliſh, Scotch, Iriſh, or Dutch; he did not know whether there were any French amongſt them.

Thomas Noden, another Seaman belonging to the Coventry Man of War, was ſworn, and teſtified, That as they were ſailing by the Nore and the Gunfleet, their Captain ſpied a ſmall Veſſel ſailing by the Sands, and ſuppoſing her to be a French Privateer, fired a Gun at her, but ſhe would not come to; whereupon they manned out their Boats, and came pretty near her, and ſhe ran a-ground: That the Long-boat belonging to The Coventry alſo ſtruck upon the Sands; and they waded after the Enemy (who had quitted their Veſſel) near half a League, and took all the Men, as well as the Veſſel: That it was a twenty-two-Oared Barge, called The Clancarty, and commanded by Capt. Vaughan, the Priſoner. That they had three or four and twenty Men on Board, ſeveral of whom were French, and they found in the Veſſel a Blunderbuſs, ſome ſmall Arms, and a conſiderable Quantity of Hand-Granadoes; and every Man had his Cartridge-box.

Samuel Oldham, another of the Crew belonging to the Coventry, confirmed the Teſtimony of the former Witneſſes; but ſaid, There were a Dozen Foreigners taken on board the Clancarty, whether French or Dutch, he could not tell, becauſe he could not ſpeak either.

Who ſhall be deemed Enemies, and not Pirates.

Hereupon the Chief Juſtice obſerved, If they were all Dutchmen, and appeared in a hoſtile Manner againſt the King of England's Subjects, they were to be deemed Enemies, though their State was in League with ours.

1696. 8 W. III.

The Priſoners Counſel replied, In the Indictment they were called, Subditi Gallici, French Subjects, which they could not be by any Conſtruction: But the Court ſaid, The French King's Commiſſion prevented their being Pirates; and, by Virtue of that Commiſſion, they might be termed his Subjects, with Reſpect to any other State but their own: Though they were not Frenchmen, they were Gallici Subditi, being in the French King's Service.

Robert Bub, another of the Coventry's Crew, teſtified, That the Night before The Clancarty was taken, The Coventry was at Anchor in the Nore: And, having taken down their Pennant, The Clancarty rounded their Ship two or three Times, taking her for a Merchant Ship; and that in the Morning The Coventry weighed and purſued her; and The Clancarty was taken by their Boats, with all her Crew, as the former Witneſſes teſtified: That the Pilot on Board them, who was an Engliſhman, declared their Deſign was to burn the Ships at Sheerneſs: And Vaughan himſelf acknowledged he was an Iriſhman, and came from Calais.

Cruttenden, the Marſhal of Dover, alſo depoſed, That Vaughan the Priſoner directed him to enter his Name in his Book, by the Name of Thomas Vaughan, an Iriſhman; but he was then in Drink: But when Vaughan was carried before a Juſtice next Morning, he denied, at his Examination, that he was an Iriſhman, but ſaid he was a Frenchman, born at Martinico in the Weſt-Indies.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Priſoner's Defence.

The Priſoner's Counſel hereupon obſerved, That the Indictment was not proved; for there it was ſaid, That the French King fitted out The Loyal Clancarty: That Capt. Thomas Vaughan was Commander, and that ſeveral Frenchmen, Subjects of the French King, were put on board: But one Witneſs ſaid, There were one or two Frenchmen; another, that there were none; a third, that they were Foreigners, but he could not tell of what Nation: That there was no Proof of the Priſoner's being Captain of The Clancarty, or that he had committed one Act of Hoſtility. All the Witneſſes teſtified, that The Clancarty made no Attempt to attack The Coventry, but, on the contrary, run away from her.

They obſerved alſo, That the Words of the Indictment were, that he came ad prædandum ſuper altum mare: Whereas Sheerneſs was not ſuper altum mare, but infra corpus comitatus; and ſo not within the Indictment.

To this the King's Counſel anſwered, That the Words, Ships at Sheerneſs, did not imply, Ships that lay within the Town of Sheerneſs, but off-Sheerneſs, which was altum mare.

The Priſoner's Counſel replied, They ought alſo to prove that he was Captain of The Clancarty at that Time; for the Indictment ſaid, Ad tunc fuit Capitaneus & Miles.

The Court ſaid, The Witneſſes proved he acted as Captain: And beſides, one of the Overt-Acts laid of his adhering to the King's Enemies, was, That he put himſelf a Soldier on board the ſaid Ship.

Dr.

1696. 8 W. III.

Dr. Oldys, another of the Priſoner's Counſel, anſwered, This Proof was built on the Sayings of People who had no Authority to examine them: But what he chiefly inſiſted on was, that they had failed in the Foundation of the Treaſon; for they had not proved the Priſoner a Subject of Britain: For as to his ſaying, over Night, when he was drunk, that he was an Iriſhman, the ſame Witneſſes atteſted, That, when he was examined next Morning by the Juſtices of Peace, he affirmed he was a Frenchman; ſo that the Proof was rather againſt them. And beſides, they had Witneſſes to prove he was a Native of Martinico.

Then the Priſoner called ſeveral Witneſſes, who teſtified, They knew him at Martinico; and one depoſed, That he was at his Father's, Thomas Vaughan's, in that Iſland, when the Priſoner was chriſtened; but they did not agree in their Evidence. And the King's Counſel called other Witneſſes, who contradicted theſe, and ſwore poſitively, That the Priſoner was a Native of Galway in Ireland: And of them, an Inhabitant of Galway, produced a Letter from the Priſoner, wherein he deſired he would not appear againſt him.

The Priſoner's Counſel, on the other hand, produced Witneſſes, who teſtified, That the King's Witneſſes were Men of bad Characters; and ſuggeſted, that there was another Thomas Vaughan of Galway, who died ten or a Dozen Years ago; but affirmed, that the Priſoner was a Frenchman.

The Evidence being cloſed, the Chief Juſtice proceeded to direct the Jury, and ſaid,

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

Gentlemen of the Jury, The Priſoner at the Bar, Thomas Vaughan, ſtands indicted for High Treaſon, for adhering to the King's Enemies, viz. That he put himſelf as a Soldier in the Service of the French King, in a Veſſel called The Loyal Clancarty, with divers other Perſons on board her, that were Subjects to the French King, and Enemies to the King of England, with a Deſign to burn the King's and his Subjects Ships; and for that Purpoſe went in that Ship. That the Priſoner was on board the Ship, and with ſuch a Deſign, is proved, without all Contradiction, by ſeveral Witneſſes that have been produced; that is, that the two-and-twenty-Oar Barge, which is the ſame called The Loyal Clancarty, lay hovering about the Buoy in the Nore; thoſe Men in The Coventry imagined they had ſome Deſign of Miſchief to the Ships, and they made after him with The Coventry. It was apprehended, by Capt. Vaughan and his Crew, that The Coventry would be too hard for them, and ſo they did ſubmit and were taken: And being examined upon what Account he came on our Coaſts, it is confeſſed by him, That he came with a Deſign to burn our Ships. You may obſerve what Sort of Men were on board. You have heard it proved to you, that Cruttenden, the Marſhal of Dover, entered thoſe Perſons taken on board the French Veſſel, of what Nation, and what Quality they were; and there were about a Dozen of theſe Frenchmen, for they were entered as ſuch. Now for a Subject of England to join with the King's Enemies, in Purſuit of a Deſign to burn or take any of the King's, or his Subjects Ships, that is an Adherence to the King's Enemies. But it appears, not only that Capt. Vaughan was in their Company, but that he was their Commander; which commanding the Veſſel, on board which were French Subjects, Enemies of the King, and the Kingdom of England, is High Treaſon, and the particular Fact of Treaſon for which he is indicted. And it appears that he had a Commiſſion from the French King to command this Veſſel, The Loyal Clancarty.

1696. 8 W. III.

Now the Priſoner having this Commiſſion to be Commander of this Veſſel, though they that ſerved under him were not native Frenchmen, but other Foreigners; yet their ſubjecting themſelves to him, acting by Virtue or Colour of that Commiſſion, makes them to be the French King's Subjects, during their Continuance in their Service; for otherwiſe all Prizes which they ſhould take would make them to be Pirates; which none will pretend to maintain, when they acted by a Commiſſion from a Sovereign Prince, that was an Enemy. And if they ſhall cruize upon our Coaſts, with a Deſign to take or deſtroy any of the King's, or his Subjects Ships, they are Enemies, though they were the Subjects of a Prince or State in Amity with the King of England. But, at this Time, there is no Neceſſity of entering upon this Queſtion, becauſe it is proved, that diverſe who were on board this Veſſel, were Frenchmen; the joining with whom, in Proſecution of ſuch a Deſign, is that Kind of High Treaſon of adhering to the King's Enemies. So that if Capt. Vaughan was a Subject of England, he is proved guilty of High Treaſon, if you believe the Evidence.

You are, therefore, to conſider the Evidence on both Sides. The Queſtion principally is, Whether the Priſoner be a Subject of the King of England? If you are ſatisfied that he is not an Engliſh Subject, but a French Man, then he is not guilty of this High Treaſon; but if you are ſatisfied, by the Series of the whole Evidence, that he is an Iriſhman, and that he had a Commiſſion from the French King, and that he cruiſed upon our Engliſh Coaſts, in Company with the King's Enemies, with a Deſign to take, burn, or deſtroy any one of the King's, or his Subject's Ships, you are to find him guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted; otherwiſe you are to acquit him.

The Jury being withdrawn, after a ſhort Time they returned into Court with their Verdict, That the Priſoner was GUILTY. Vaughan convicted.

And it being demanded, What he could ſay, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon him? He anſwered, he referred himſelf to his Counſel: Whereupon Mr. Phipps objected, That the Treaſon of adhering to the King's Enemies was not well laid in the Indictment; for it did not ſay, the Priſoner adhered to the King's Enemies againſt the King, and poſſibly he might join with the King's Enemies againſt Holland and Spain: To which the Court anſwered, That the adhering to the King's Enemies againſt his Allies, was an encouraging them, and enabled them to do Miſchief to the Moves in Arreſt of Judgment.

King

1696. 8 W. III.

King: — That the 25 Edw. III. defined the Treaſon to be in adhering to the King's Enemies, and expreſſed the Overt Act to be a giving them Aid or Comfort. It was ſufficient to alledge the Treaſon in the Words of the Statute, adhering to the King's Enemies; and if the Overt-Act alledged, ſhewed it to be againſt the King, and in Purſuance of his Adherence, that was ſufficient. Mr. Phipps replyed, That the Indictment only ſaid, he went a cruiſing, whereas, they ought to have alledged ſome Act of Hoſtility: But the Court over-ruled that Objection, and ſaid, that the cruiſing upon the Coaſt with an armed Veſſel was an hoſtile Act, and that their going on Board, and putting themſelves in a Poſture to attack the King's Ships, was an actual levying of War: And the Court having over-ruled ſome other leſs material Exceptions to the Indictment, Sentence was paſſed on the ſaid Thomas Vaughan as a Traitor, and he was executed in Purſuance of it.

The Exceptions over-ruled.

He is condemned, and executed.

Here are ſome nice Diſtinctions between Piracy and Treaſon, and in what Caſes a Man ſhall be deemed a Subject, and in what Circumſtances a Foreigner.

1696. 8 W. 3. Remarks on Vaughan's Trial.

Particularly it is reſolved, That of whatever Nation a Man is, his acting by a Commiſſion from a Sovereign Prince, prevents his being treated as a Pirate, and that he ſhall be deemed a Subject of that Prince under whom he acts againſt all others but his own natural Sovereign; and as to him, he ſhall be deemed a Traitor, if the Prince he acts under be an Enemy to his own Sovereign; as he ſhall be alſo, if he confederates with the Subjects of another Power, in Amity with his Prince, againſt his own Country: But if he commits hoſtile Acts on others, without a Commiſſion from ſome Sovereign Prince, he is a Pirate.

And here we find it reſolved again, That no Overt-Act ſhall be given in Evidence, unleſs it be laid in the Indictment, except it conduce to prove a Fact that is laid in the Indictment.

1697. 8 W. III. Knollys's Caſe.

Proceedings againſt CHARLES KNOLLYS, Eſq; (commonly called Earl of Banbury) for the Murder of Philip Lawſon, Gent. which Proceedings were begun in the Year 1692, and continued to the Year 1697.

1697. 8 W. 3.

This not being a State Trial, I ſhall content my ſelf with giving a ſhort Abſtract of the Proceedings.

AN Indictment was found againſt the ſaid Charles Knollys, by the Grand Jury of the County of Middleſex, in December 1692. charging him with the Murder of the ſaid Philip Lawſon, which was removed by Certiorari into the King's-Bench, in Hillary Term 4 and 5 W. & M. Where the Defendant being arraigned, pleaded a Miſnomer in Abatement of the Indictment, ſetting forth, that he was Earl of Banbury, his Anceſtors having been ſo created by Letters Patent from the Crown. The Attorney General replied, that he had petitioned the Houſe of Peers to be tried before them on this Indictment, and they had adjudged thereupon, that he had no Right to the Earldom: To which Replication the Defendant demurred, and Mr. Attorney joined in Demurrer: And Arguments were heard on each Part by the Court of King's-Bench, but no Judgment was given thereupon; for the Court of King's-Bench differed with the Houſe of Peers, as to his Title to the Earldom; and ſo the Defendant was never tried for the ſaid Murder.

In January 1697, the ſaid Charles Knollys petitioned his Majeſty King William, to grant him a Summons to Parliament, as Earl of Banbury, and to recommend his Caſe to the Examination of the Houſe of Lords; and his Majeſty referred it to them accordingly, to conſider the Defendant's Claim to that Earldom: Whereupon, the Lords repreſented to the King, That about five Years before, the ſame Perſon did petition the Houſe of Lords, that, being indicted for the Death of Philip Lawſon, he might be admitted to a Trial by his Peers; and having heard him by his Counſel, as to his Title to the ſaid Earldom, the Houſe came to this Reſolution and Judgment, That the Petitioner had no Right to the Title of Earl of Banbury, and ordered his Petition to be diſmiſſed; which Judgment the Lords ſaid, they had great Reaſon to believe, was not made known to his Majeſty at the Time of the ſaid Reference.

1699 11 W. III. Cowper's Trial.

In this Proceeding it appears, that the King's-Bench held, that they were empowered to judge of a Nobleman's Title, and whether he made out his Deſcent from his Anceſtors; for notwithſtanding the Houſe of Peers had determined he had no Title, that Court did declare, that the Defendant had a Title to the Earldom of Banbury, and conſequently that he could not be tried as a Commoner for Murder in the King's-Bench: And if I underſtand the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt aright, he was of Opinion, That the Houſe of Peers were not a proper Court to try the Fact, being a Right of Inheritance; becauſe they could

1699. 11 W. III. Lords Warwick and Mohun,

The Trial of EDWARD Earl of Warwick and Holland, and others, for Murder, before the House of Peers, in Westminster-Hall, on the 28th and 29th of March, 1699. 11 W. III.

1699. 11 W. III.

This being a Prosecution for Murder, and no State Trial, I shall give but a short Abstract of the Case.

Their Case. THE Indictment charged the Earl of Warwick, the Lord Mohun, Richard French, Roger James, and George Dockwra, Gent. with the Murder of Captain Richard Coote.

It seems, these Gentlemen were drinking together on the 30th of October 1698. at Lockett's, the Greyhound-Tavern in the Strand, where they staid till after Midnight; and then happening to quarrel, they called for Chairs, and were carried to Leicester-fields, where they fought, three of a Side, in the Dark, when they could scarce distinguish each other: And in this Encounter Captain Coote was killed, and the Lord Warwick and Mr. French slightly wounded; and the Lord Warwick's Sword appeared to be bloody up to the Hilt afterwards.

The House of Peers having heard the Evidence, and the Observations of the King's Counsel upon it, came to a Resolution, That the Earl of Warwick was guilty of Manslaughter, but not of Murder: Whereupon he claimed the Benefit of his Peerage, which is equivalent to Clergy; and he was thereupon discharged.

The Lord Mohun was tried the next Day for the same Murder; but it appearing he had endeavoured to prevent their fighting, and was not instrumental in the Death of Captain Coote, he was acquitted by the unanimous Opinion of the House of Peers.

1699 11 W III. Cowper's Trial.

The Trial of SPENCER COWPER, Esq; JOHN MARSON, ELLIS STEVENS, and WILLIAM ROGERS, Gent. for Murder, at Hertford Assizes, before Mr. Baron Hatsell, on Wednesday the 16th of July, 1699. 11 W. III.

1699. 11 W. III.

This being one of the most memorable Trials in our Age, and the World to this Day divided in their Opinions, concerning the innocency of the Prisoners, it was thought proper to be compiled with the State Trials, though it was of a private Nature; and for the like Reasons, I presume, it will be expected I should treat more largely of it in this Work, than I have of other Trials for Murder.

THE Prisoners being severally arraigned, and pleading Not Guilty, it was demanded, If they would join in their Challenges, or challenge separately? To which Mr. Cowper answered, If they should challenge separately, there must be so many separate Trials; and therefore, to prevent the Trouble of the Court, they were content there should be but one Challenge for all.

Then the Pannel was called over, and there being so many challenged for the King and the Prisoners, that there was not a full Jury on the principal Pannel, Mr. Cowper moved, That the Counsel for the King might shew their Cause of Challenge, now the Pannel was gone through: To which Mr. Jones, of Counsel for the King, answered, That it never was put upon the King's Counsel to shew Cause; and insisting upon it, though the Judge was of another Opinion, Mr. Cowper gave it up, and others were added to the principal Pannel, till Twelve were sworn.

The Indictment. Then the Clerk of the Arraignments read the Indictment to the Prisoners in English, which set forth, That Spencer Cowper, late of the Parish of St. John's, in the Town of Hertford, in the County of Hertford, Esq; John Marson, late of the Parish and County aforesaid, Gent. Ellis Stevens and William Rogers, of the said Parish and County, Gent. not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, &c. did on the 13th Day of March, in the 11th Year of the King, at the Parish af St. John's aforesaid, make an Assault upon Sarah

1699. 11 W. III.

Stout, Spinſter, and a certain Rope about the Neck of the ſaid Sarah Stout did fix and bind, and the Neck and Throat of the ſaid Sarah did hold, ſqueeze, and gripe, and thereby the ſaid Sarah Stout did choak and ſtrangle, of which choaking and ſtrangling ſhe inſtantly died; and ſo the ſaid Spencer Cowper, John Marſon, Ellis Stevens, and William Rogers, did kill and murder her: And the ſaid Sarah Stout being ſo choaked and ſtrangled, they the ſaid Spencer Cowper, &c. in order to conceal the ſaid Murder, did afterwards throw her into a certain River called the Priory River; againſt the King's Peace, &c.

Mr. Jones afterwards opened the Indictment and the Evidence, in the following Manner.

Mr. Jones opens the Indictment and the Evidence.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, I am of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe, and it is upon an Indictment, by which the Gentlemen at the Bar ſtand accuſed for one of the fouleſt and moſt wicked Crimes almoſt that any Age can remember; I believe in your Country you never knew a Fact of this Nature: For here is a young Gentlewoman of this County murdered and ſtrangled in the Night time. The Thing was done in the dark, therefore the Evidence cannot be ſo plain as otherwiſe might be.

After ſhe was ſtrangled and murdered, ſhe was carried and thrown into a River, to ſtifle the Fact, and to make it ſuppoſed ſhe had murdered her ſelf; ſo that it was indeed, if it prove otherwiſe, a double Murther; a Murther accompanied with all the Circumſtances of Wickedneſs and Villany that I remember in all my Practice, or ever read of.

This Fact, as it was committed in the Night-time, ſo it was carried very ſecret; and it is very well we have had ſo much Light as we have, to give ſo much Satisfaction: For we have here in a Manner two Trials, one to acquit the Party that is dead, and to ſatisfy the World, and vindicate her Reputation that ſhe did not murder her ſelf, but was murdered by other Hands. For my Part, I ſhall never, as Counſel in the Caſe of Blood, aggravate; I will not improve or enlarge the Evidence at all: It ſhall be only my Buſineſs to ſet the Fact as it is, and to give the Evidence, and ſtate it as it ſtands here in my Inſtructions.

My Lord, for that Purpoſe, to lead to the Fact, it will be neceſſary to inform you, That upon Monday the 13th of March, the firſt Day of the laſt Aſſizes here, Mr. Cowper, one of the Gentlemen at the Bar, came to this Town, and lighted at Mr. Bareſoot's Houſe, and ſtaid there ſome Time, I ſuppoſe, to dry himſelf, the Weather being dirty; but ſent his Horſe to Mrs. Stout's, the Mother of this Gentlewoman. Some Time after, he came thither himſelf, and dined there, and ſtaid till Four in the Afternoon; and at Four, when he went away, he told them he would come and lodge there that Night, and ſup.

According to his Word he came there, and had the Supper he deſired: After Supper, Mrs. Stout, the young Gentlewoman, and he ſat together till near Eleven o'Clock. At Eleven o'Clock there was Orders given to warm his Bed, openly, to warm his Bed in his hearing. The Maid of the Houſe, Gentlemen, upon this went up Stairs to warm his Bed, expecting the Gentleman would have come up and followed her before ſhe had done; but, it ſeems, while ſhe was warming the Bed, ſhe heard the Door clap together; and the Nature of that Door is ſuch, that it makes a great Noiſe at the clapping of it to, that any Body in the Houſe may be ſenſible of any one's going out. The Maid, upon this, was concerned, and wondered at the Meaning of it, he promiſing to lie there that Night; ſhe came down, but there was neither Mr. Cowper nor Mrs. Stout; ſo that we ſuppoſe, and for all that we can find and learn, they muſt go out together. After their going out, the Maid and Mother came into the Room, and the young Gentlewoman not returning, nor Mr. Cowper, they ſat up all Night in the Houſe, expecting what time the young Gentlewoman would return. The next Morning after they had ſat up all Night, the firſt News of this Lady was, that ſhe lay floating and ſwimming in the Water by the Mill-Damm: Upon that, there were ſeveral Perſons called; for it was a Surprize how this ſhould come to paſs. There ſhe lay floating with her Petticoats and Apron, but her Night-rail and Morning-gown were off, and one of them not found till ſome Time after; and the Maid will give you an Account how it came to be found.

1699. 11 W. III.

This made a great Noiſe in the Country, for it was very extraordinary, it happening that from the Time the Maid left Mr. Cowper and this young Gentlewoman together, ſhe was not ſeen or heard of till next Morning, when ſhe was found in this Condition, with her Eyes broad open, floating upon the Water.

When her Body came to be viewed, it was very much wondered at; for, in the firſt Place, it is contrary to Nature, that any Perſons that drown themſelves ſhould float upon the Water. We have ſufficient Evidence, that it is a Thing that never was: If Perſons come alive into the Water, then they ſink; if dead, then they ſwim; that made ſome more curious to look into this Matter. At firſt it was thought that ſuch an Accident might happen, though they could not imagine any Cauſe for this Woman to do ſo, who had ſo great Proſperity, had ſo good an Eſtate, and had no Occaſion to do an Action upon herſelf ſo wicked, and ſo barbarous; nor cannot learn what Reaſon ſhe had to induce her to ſuch a Thing. Upon View of the Body, it did appear, there had been Violence uſed to the Woman; there was a Creaſe round her Neck, ſhe was bruiſed about her Ear, ſo that it did ſeem as if ſhe had been ſtrangled, either by Hands or a Rope.

Gentlemen, upon the Examination of this Matter, it was wondered how this Matter came about; it was dark and blind: The Coroner at that Time, nor theſe People, had no Evidence given, but the ordinary Evidence, and it paſſed in a Day.

We muſt call our Witneſſes to this Fact, that of Neceſſity you muſt conclude ſhe was ſtrangled, and did not drown herſelf: If we give you as ſtrong a Proof, as can be upon the Nature of the Fact, that ſhe was ſtrangled, then 1699. 11 W. III. then the ſecond Matter under your Enquiry will be, to know who, or what Perſons ſhould be the Men that did the Fact. I told you before, it was, as all wicked Actions are, a Matter of Darkneſs, and done in Secret, to be kept as much from the Knowledge of Men as was poſſible.

Truly, Gentlemen, as to the Perſons at the Bar, the Evidence of the Fact will be very ſhort, and will be to this Purpoſe.

Mr. Cowper was the laſt Man unfortunately in her Company; I could wiſh he had not been ſo with all my Heart: 'Tis a very unfortunate Thing that his Name ſhould, upon this Occaſion, be brought upon the Stage: But then, my Lord, it was a ſtrange thing, here happens to be three Gentlemen, Mr. Marſon, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Stevens: As to theſe three Men, my Lord, I don't hear of any Buſineſs they had here, unleſs it was to do this Matter, to ſerve ſome Intereſt or Friend that ſent them upon this Meſſage: For, my Lord, they came to Town (and in Things of this Nature, 'tis well we have this Evidence; but, if we had not been ſtreightened in Time, it would have brought out more; theſe Things come out ſlowly), theſe Perſons, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Rogers, and Mr. Marſon, came to Town here, on the 13th of March laſt, the Aſſize-Day. My Lord, when they came to Town, they came to an Houſe, and took Lodging at one Gurrey's; they took a Bed for two, and went out of their Lodging, having taken a Room with a large Bed in it; and afterwards they went to the Glove and Dolphin, and then, about Eight o'Clock, one Marſon came to them there; in what Company they came, your Lordſhip, and the Jury, will know by and by: They ſtaid there, my Lord, at the Glove, from Eight o'Clock to Eleven, as they ſay. At Eleven theſe three Gentlemen came all in to their Lodging together at this Gurrey's. My Lord, when they came in, it was very obſervable amongſt them, unleſs there had been a Sort of Fate in it; firſt, that they ſhould happen to be in the Condition they were; and, ſecondly, fall upon the Diſcourſe they did at that Time: For, my Lord, they called for Fire, and the Fire was made them; and, while the People of the Houſe were going about, they obſerved and heard theſe Gentlemen talk of Mrs. Sarah Stout; that happened to be their Diſcourſe: One ſaid to the other, Marſon, She was an old Sweetheart of yours: Ay, ſaith he, but ſhe caſt me off; but I reckon, by this Time, a Friend of mine has done her Buſineſs — Another Piece of Diſcourſe was, I believe a Friend of mine is even with her by this Time. They had a Bundle of Linnen with them; but what it was is not known; and one takes the Bundle and throws it upon the Bed: Well, ſaith he, her Buſineſs is done: Mrs. Sarah Stout's courting Days are over; and they ſent for Wine, my Lord: So, after they had drank of the Wine, they talked of it, and one pulled out a great deal of Money; ſaith one to another, What Money have you ſpent to Day? Saith the other, Thou haſt had 40 or 50 l. for thy Share: Saith the other, I will ſpend all the Money I have, for Joy the Buſineſs is done.

My Lord, this Diſcourſe happened to be among them, which made People of the Houſe conſider and bethink themſelves; when the next Day they heard of this Mrs. Stout's being found in the Water, this made them recollect and call to Mind all theſe Diſcourſes. 1699. 11 W. III.

My Lord, after theſe Gentlemen had ſtaid there all Night, next Morning, truly, it was obſerved (and I ſuppoſe ſome Account will be given of it) that Mr. Cowper and they did meet together, and had ſeveral Diſcourſes; and that very Day went out of Town; and, I think, as ſoon as they came to Hoddeſdon, made it all their Diſcourſe and Buſineſs to talk of Mrs. Stout.

My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes, and prove all theſe Facts that I have opened to your Lordſhip; and then, I hope, they will be put to give you ſome Account how all theſe Matters came about.

The Evidence of Sarah Walker.

Then Sarah Walker, Servant to the deceaſed Mrs. Stout, being called as a Witneſs for the King, teſtified, That on Friday before the laſt Aſſizes Mr. Cowper's Wife ſent her Miſtreſs a Letter, acquainting her, She might expect her Husband at the Aſſizes, and he came in with the Judge accordingly the Monday following; and her Miſtreſs as ing him, as he rode by, if he would alight, he ſaid, No; he would go and ſhew himſelf, but would ſend his Horſe preſently, and let her know at what Time he would come; but her Miſtreſs, thinking he had forgot, ſent her (the Witneſs) to know if he deſigned to come: He anſwered, He had Buſineſs; but came, however, in leſs than a quarter of an Hour, and dined there: And, going away about Four o'Clock, her Miſtreſs asked him, If he would lie there? He ſaid, Yes; and came at Nine o'Clock; and, having ſat about half an Hour, he asked for a Pen and Ink, and wrote a Letter to his Wife; after which, he deſired he might have Milk for his Supper, which the Witneſs brought him; and, when he had ſupped, her Miſtreſs bid her make a Fire in his Chamber; and, when ſhe came and told Mr. Cowper ſhe had made one, he looked at her, but ſaid nothing; and her Miſtreſs, in his Hearing, bid her warm his Bed, which ſhe went up to do as the Clock ſtruck Eleven, and about a quarter of an Hour after, ſhe heard the Houſe-Door ſhut, and thought he was gone to carry his Letter; but, coming down into the Parlour a quarter of an Hour after ſhe heard the Door ſhut, ſhe found no body there; both Mr. Cowper and her Miſtreſs were gone, and ſhe never ſaw her more alive.

Mr. Cowper deſiring ſhe would be particular as to the Time he went away, Sarah Walker anſwered, It was a quarter after Eleven by their Clock; but that went half an Hour faſter than the Town Clock.

Mr. Cowper demanding Why ſhe did not enquire after her Miſtreſs that Night? the Maid anſwered, She thought her Miſtreſs was with him, and could come to no Harm. Old Mrs. Stout, her Mother, was againſt her making any Enquiry; becauſe, if they did not find her, ſhe ſaid, it would alarm the Town, and there might be no Occaſion: However, they 1699 11W. III. they ſat up all Night in Expectation of their Return.

Mr. Cowper demanding If her Miſtreſs did not uſe to ſtay out all Night; or, if ſhe had not ſaid ſo? the Maid anſwered, No. Then he asked If her Miſtreſs was not melancholly? ſhe anſwered, She could not ſay but ſhe was melancholly; but ſhe imputed it to a Fit of Illneſs; ſhe knew no other Cauſe.

Mr. Cowper asking If ſhe did not buy Poiſon within this Twelvemonth, and by whoſe Order? ſhe anſwered, That ſhe (the Witneſs) had bought Poiſon twice, to poiſon a Dog that broke ſome things; but had no Order for it.

Mr. Jones demanded, if ſhe ever found her Miſtreſs inclined to do her ſelf a Miſchief? ſhe anſwered, She never did.

Mr. Jones asking, If Mr. Cowper's Horſe ſtood at her Miſtreſs's Houſe, and if Mr. Cowper ever returned to Mrs. Stout's again? ſhe anſwered, His Horſe ſtood there, but Mr. Cowper never returned after that Night he went away, in the Manner ſhe related.

Mr. Jones asking, If Mr. Cowper told them he would lie there? the Maid anſwered, When he went from Dinner, he ſaid ſo.

Evidence of Mrs Stout's being found in the River.

Then Berry the Miller was ſworn, and teſtified, That going out at Six in the Morning, to ſhoot a Fluſh of Water, he ſaw ſomething floating, which proved to be the Cloaths of the Deceaſed, her Body being five or ſix Inches under Water: That ſhe lay on her Right Side, her Right Arm being driven between the Stakes, which ſtood about a Foot aſunder: That the Water was then about five Foot deep: She did not appear at all ſwelled, and her Eyes were open.

John Venables teſtified, That he ſaw the Corps in the River, that ſhe lay on her Right Side, rather above the Water than under, inſomuch that one of her Ruffles appeared above the Water; and both this Witneſs and the laſt agreed that her Eyes were open, and that there were no Weeds, or any thing under the Corps, to hinder it from ſinking.

Leonard Dell depoſed, That he ſaw the Corps floating, and that Part of her Cloaths were above the Water; that her Face might alſo be ſeen, it was ſo near the Surface, and her Eyes were open; and agreed with the former Witneſſes, that ſhe lay on her Right Side, with her Head and Right Arm between the Stakes or Piles, that were fixed in the River: He believed there might be about five Foot Water, and there was nothing under her to prevent the ſinking of the Corps: That he and another took the Corps out of the Water, and laid it on the Bank, where it remained an Hour: She was laced, and he did not perceive her to be at all ſwelled, or that any Water came out of the Corps on moving it, only a Froth came out of her Mouth and Noſtrils, about as much as he could hold in his Hand.

John Ulſe alſo teſtified, That he helped to take her out of the Water, and ſhe lay on one Side between the Stakes; and that upon taking her out, no Water came from her, only ſome Froth at her Noſtrils: That the Stakes did not bear up the Corps, and there was nothing under it to keep it from ſinking.

Katharine Dew depoſed, That ſhe ſaw the Corps taken out of the Water; that ſhe lay on one Side in the River, her Teeth clenched, the Water flowing a little over her Face, and ſome Part of her Coats above the Water, her right Arm lying againſt a Stake: That ſhe was laced, and not at all ſwelled, and ſhe ſaw a purging Froth iſſue out of her Noſe and one of her Eyes. 1699. 11W.III.

Thomas Dew depoſed, That ſhe lay on her Side in the Water, her right Arm within the Stakes, and her left Arm without; that her Shoes and Stockings were clean, without any Mud or dirt on them; and he did not think the Corps had ever ſunk to the Bottom; and, when ſhe was taken out, no Water came from her, only ſome Froth out of her Noſe; and ſhe was not at all ſwelled.

Edward Blackno confirmed the Teſtimony of the former Witneſſes, as to the Poſture of the Corps in the Water: As did alſo William Edmunds and William Page.

Anne Ulſe alſo confirmed the Teſtimony of the former Witneſſes, and ſaid, One of her Arms was about a Stake, and the other down in the Water: That her Shoes and Stockings were clean: Her Stockings were rolled down, and ſhe had no Garters on.

William How gave the like Evidence, obſerving, That one of her Arms and her Head were in the Grate (or Stakes.)

John Meager alſo teſtified, That the Corps floated in the Water, her Right Arm in the Grate, and her Left Arm with the Stream; but that it was not borne up by any thing but the Water.

The Evidence of the Surgeons.

Then Mr. John Dimſdale, jun. the Surgeon, was ſworn: Whereupon Mr. Cowper ſaid, There were ſome eminent London Phyſicians attending, and deſired they might be called into Court, and hear the Surgeons Evidence: And the Court agreeing to it, Dr. Sloane, Dr. Garth, Dr. Morley, Dr. Gilſtrop, Dr. Harriot, Dr. Wollaſton, Dr. Crull, Mr. William Cooper, the great Anatomiſt, Mr. Bartlet, and Mr. Camlin, were brought in.

Mr. Dimſdale then gave his Evidence, teſtifying, That he went at the Requeſt of old Mrs. Stout, to view the Corps, together with Mr. Camlin, the ſame Day it was found; and he obſerved a little Swelling on the Side of the Neck, and ſhe was black on both Sides, particularly the Left Side, and between her Breaſts up towards the Collar-Bone.

It being demanded how her Ears were, he ſaid, There was a Blackneſs on both Ears, and a Settling of Blood.

Mr. Cowper then asked him, If he did not ſay that the Settling of Blood was no more than a common Stagnation before the Coroner's Inqueſt? He anſwered, He did not remember a Word of that; but he confeſſed, there was no Mark or Circle about her Neck.

Sarah Kimpſon teſtified, That ſhe helped to ſtrip the Corps, and there was a Settlement of Blood behind the Ear, bigger than her Hand would cover, and another Settlement of Blood under her Collar-Bone; but ſhe ſaw no Mark about the Neck: That the Body was flat and lank; no Water in it, as ſhe could perceive: That ſhe (the Witneſs) had a Child drowned, not long before, in the ſame Place; and they found her ſunk to the Bottom of the River the next Morning, ſwelled to a great Degree, being very full of Water, as appeared when the Child was opened. And Mr. Cowper demanding of Mrs. Kimpſon, If there was no Settlement of Blood about the Child? ſhe anſwered, She ſaw none.

Mrs. Peppercorn, the Midwife, teſtified, That ſhe was preſent at the ſtripping the Body, and, at old Mrs. Stout's Requeſt, examined it, and found the Deceaſed was not with Child. That ſhe had a black Place on the Side of her Head, and another about her Ear: That no Water came from her, but a Froth purged from her Mouth and Noſtrils, as was uſual.

Elizabeth Huſler alſo depoſed, She helped to ſtrip the Deceaſed, found the Body lank and thin, and no Appearance of Water in it: That there was a ſettling of Blood at the Top of the Collar Bone, and a ſettling of Blood under each Ear; but moſt under her left Ear.

Anne Pilkington gave much the ſame Evidence; and Mr. Cowper asking her if ſhe did not make Oath, That the Deceaſed had a Circle round her Neck? ſhe anſwered, She never did, nor durſt not do it: Whereupon Mr. Jones, looking upon her Examination, ſaid, It was croſs her Neck there.

Mr. Coatſworth the Surgeon depoſed, That the Body, having been buried ſix Weeks, was taken up by her Friends; and he went to Hertford, at the Requeſt of old Mrs. Stout, to ſee it opened: That her Face and Neck, to her Shoulders, appeared black, and ſo much corrupted, that they were unwilling to proceed; but the Mother inſiſting to have it done, they opened her, and found the Stomach and Guts as full of Wind, as if they had been blown with a Pair of Bellows: That, putting the Guts aſide, they came to the Uterus, which they viewed very nicely, and ſaw it perfectly empty: That, upon opening the Stomach, they let out a great deal of Wind, but no Water; neither was there any in the Lobes of the Lungs, or Diaphragm; but all was dry: Whereupon he (the Witneſs) obſerved, That this Woman could not be drowned; for, if ſhe had taken in any Water, it would have rotted all the Guts: As for any Marks about her Head and Neck, it was impoſſible to diſcover them, they were ſo rotten; but all the reſt was ſound to a Miracle: He did not imagine they ſhould have found them ſo.

Mr. Cowper here objected againſt this Kind of Evidence: For that the Body had been taken up again by the Relations, without any legal Authority, after the Coroner's Inqueſt had ſat upon it: Thus they might have broken the Skull in a hundred Pieces, after the Coroner had viewed it, and then have proſecuted him for it. He apprehended they ought to have had a Writ of Melius inquirendum, to authorize them to make another Inſpection, and to have given him Notice, that he might have had Surgeons there to ſuperintend their Proceedings.

The Judge anſwered, If they had done an ill Thing in taking up the Body without Orders (though he did not know there was any more Hurt in taking up that Body than another), that could be no Reaſon why they ſhould not hear that Evidence.

Mr. Coatſworth alſo obſerved, That Mr. Camlin, Sir William Cooper's Surgeon, was preſent when they inſpected the Body.

Then John Dimſdale the Elder teſtified, That being ſent for by Mrs. Stout to view the Body of her Daughter, on the 28th of April, they found the Head and Neck ſo mortified, that they were in Doubt whether they ſhould proceed; but Mrs. Stout inſiſting her Daughter ſhould be opened, to clear her of the Scandal of being with Child, they opened the Body, and found it as ſound as any Fleſh could be; no manner of Putrefaction in her Lungs, or any other Part, but very full of Wind: That they ſearched the Stomach and Thorax, but found not one Drop of Water about them; nor was the Coffin or Shroud in the leaſt wet or ſoiled: And, examining the Uterus, they ſaw no Sign of Conception. Then they conſulted together, whether ſhe was drowned or not; and were all of Opinion, She was not drowned: Only Mr. Camlin deſired to be excuſed from giving his Opinion. It being demanded of the elder Dimſdale, Why he believed ſhe was not drowned? he anſwered, Becauſe they found no Water in her; and if there had been any, that would have cauſed a Fermentation, and rotted the Lungs and Guts; whereas her Inteſtines were not putrified, as they would have been in a Week's Time, if there had been but a Pint of Water there.

Then John Dimſdale the younger, and his Brother, Robert Dimſdale the Phyſician, were ſworn, and teſtified, They viewed the Corps after it was opened, and did not find a Drop of Water in the Thorax, or Abdomen. Mr. Cowper demanding of Mr. Robert Dimſdale, If it was poſſible there ſhould be Water in the Thorax? he anſwered, They ſhould have expected Water, or a Putrefaction; but they found no Putrefaction either in the Bowels or Inteſtines, but only in her Head and Shoulders, and one Arm.

Mr. Cowper demanding how any Water ſhould paſs into the Thorax? Dr. Dimſdale anſwered, By the Lymphæduct, if any Way: And being asked, If any Water could paſs into a Body after Death? he anſwered, No.

John Dimſdale the younger added, That he opened the Child, above-mentioned to be drowned; and that it was extremely ſwelled in the Belly and Stomach, and had abundance of Water in it. His Brother, the Phyſician, alſo obſerved, That on opening the Abdomen of the Child that was drowned, they found abundance of Water in the ſeveral Cavities.

Mr. Cowper demanding, If he was not angry Mr. Camlin would not join with them in their Opinion? he anſwered, No: But being asked again, If he did not tell Camlin he was a Graduate Phyſician? he ſaid, They had ſome Words about it.

Dr. Coatſworth being ſworn, it was demanded of him, What was his Opinion of Bodies found floating without any Water in them?

He anſwered, Every one that was drowned was ſuffocated, by Water paſſing down the Wind-pipe into the Lungs upon Reſpiration; and, at the ſame Time, the Water preſſing upon the Gullet, there would be a Neceſſity of ſwallowing great Part of it into the Stomach. He had been in Danger of Drowning himſelf, and was forced to ſwallow a great Quantity of Water. If a Perſon was drowned, and taken out immediately, as ſoon as the Suffocation was effected, he ſhould not wonder if there was but little Water in the Stomach and Guts; but if it lay in the Water ſeveral Hours, it muſt be ſtrange if the Belly ſhould not be full of Water: But he would not ſay it was impoſſible to be otherwiſe.

Mr. Cowper demanding, Whether he attempted to drown himſelf, or was in Danger of drowning by Accident? he anſwered, By Accident: Whereupon Mr. Cowper obſerved, There was a Difference where a Perſon drowned himſelf on Purpoſe, and was drowned by Accident; for when he was drowned by Accident, he ſtruggled a great while, and took in much Water before he died; but when a Perſon threw herſelf into the Water on Purpoſe to be drowned, ſhe died immediately, receiving but little Water before ſhe expired.

Dr. Naylor being ſworn, declared he was of Opinion, That a drowned Body would have a Quantity of Water in it; and, if there was no Water in the Body, he ſhould believe the Perſon was dead before he was put into the Water.

Then Mr. Cowper demanded, If the Dr. did not conſtantly vote againſt the Intereſt of his Family in that Corporation? and ſaid, He ſhould have asked the Dimſdales the ſame Queſtion: But the Court told him, That was not material.

Mr. Babington, a Surgeon, alſo declared upon his Oath, he was of Opinion, That all Bodies that went into the Water alive, and were drowned, had Water in them, and ſunk as ſoon as drowned; nor did they riſe ſo ſoon as this Woman did: And this, he found, was the Opinion of Phyſicians.

Whereupon the Judge, Mr. Baron Hatſel, ſaid, He had heard ſo too; and that was the Reaſon they tied Bullets to dead Bodies to ſink them at Sea. Mr. Cowper anſwered, the Reaſon of that was, That the Bodies ſhould not riſe again, for they would ſink without.

Mr. Babington proceeded, and ſaid, He had once a Patient that was half an Hour under Water, and lived ſeveral Hours afterwards; and, during that Time, diſcharged great Quantities of Water: And though he fell into the Water by Accident, he did not believe that made any Difference.

Dr. Burnet alſo declared upon Oath, he was of Opinion, Whether one fell into the Water by Accident, or threw himſelf in, the Body would receive Water as long as it was alive; and there were Endeavours for Reſpiration; and, after thoſe Endeavours were over, no Water would come in, for all the Parts were cloſed; and, conſequently, there muſt have been Water found within this Woman, if ſhe was drowned; and he believed drowned Bodies always ſunk.

Dr. Woodhouſe was of Opinion, That every Body, ſuffocated with Water, muſt have a great deal of Water in the Stomach, and ſome in the Lungs. And Mr. Cowper demanding which Way it ſhould paſs into the Thorax? The Dr. anſwered, The Thorax was the Veſſel where the Lungs lay, in the Cavity of the Breaſt: The Wind-pipe was the Conveyance to the Lungs: That, while a Perſon was ſtruggling for Reſpiration, there might be a Relaxation of the Parts, and a Perſon muſt ſuck in ſome Water as well as Air; conſequently ſome Water would get into the Wind-pipe, and ſo enter the Lungs; but the greater Quantity, no doubt, would be in the Stomach.

The Court demanding, What was his Opinion as to the Putrifying of the inward Parts? the Dr. anſwered, No doubt, where Water gets into the Stomach, or, wherever it was, it would putrify ſoon.

Edward Clement, a Seaman, being called as a Witneſs for the King, declared, That in the Sea-fight at Beachy-head, in the Year 90, he ſaw ſeveral thrown over-board, and their Bodies floated; and it was a Rule with them, That when Bodies came dead into the Sea they always floated; and therefore, when any one died a Natural Death, and was buried at Sea, they tied Weights to the Corps to ſink it: But he had ſeen ſeveral Men drowned who ſunk downright, as ſoon as the Breath was out of their Bodies. It being demanded of him, How he obſerved the dead Bodies floated after the Battel? he anſwered, They floated with their Heads juſt down, and the Small of their Backs and Buttocks upwards. That he ſaw hundreds floating ſo in Beachy-head Fight.

That he ſaw the Coronation ſhipwrecked in Sept. 1691, when he belonged to the Ship Dutcheſs: That they looked out, and ſaw them taking down their Maſts, and ſaw them walking up and down, on the Right Side of the Ship, while ſhe ſunk down; after which, they ſwam up and down like Shoals of Fiſh one after another: He ſaw them hover upon one another, and drop away by Scores at a Time; and there were not above Nineteen that ſaved themſelves by Boats or Swimming out of the whole Ship's Crew, which conſiſted of five or ſix hundred Men. The reſt ſunk downright, twenty at a Time.

Richard Gin, another Seaman, depoſed, That, when they buried any one at Sea, they tied Weights to the Body, believing that otherwiſe the dead Body would ſwim.

Evidences againſt Marſon, Stevens, and Rogers.

Some Obſervations on this Evidence.

Then Mr. Jones, the King's Counſel, ſaid, He hoped they had given the Jury Satisfaction, That the Deceaſed did not drown herſelf, but was carried into the Water after ſhe was killed: For, if it was true that all dead Bodies, thrown into the Water, ſwam; and Bodies, that fell into the Water alive, and were drowned, ſunk, that was ſufficient Evidence ſhe was not drowned, but came by her Death ſome other Way. They had ſhewn, That Mr. Cowper was the laſt Man in her Company; and, what became of her afterwards, no body could tell: And they ſhould now proceed to give Evidence, That, notwithſtanding all the Civilities and Kindneſs that paſſed between this Family and him, when the Noiſe of the Fact was ſpread abroad, Mr.

Cowper

1699. 11 W III.

Cowper did not come to conſult with old Mrs. Stout, what was proper to be done; but rode out of Town next Day, without taking any Notice of the Accident.

Mr. Cowper's Behaviour, after this Accident.

John Archer depoſed, That he ſaw Mr. Cowper take Horſe at the Glove, on Wedneſday Morning after the Aſſizes, and ride out the back Way; which Mr. Cowper obſerved, was the uſual Way he went the Circuit into Eſſex.

George Aldridge, the Hoſtler of the Glove, alſo teſtified, That he ſaw Mr. Cowper take Horſe on the Wedneſday, and go the Way that led to Chelmsford.—— He depoſed alſo, That Mr. Cowper ſent him for his Horſe to Mrs. Stout's, on the Tueſday Night, telling him he ſhould have Occaſion for the Horſe to go out with the Judge next Morning; and he went three Times before they would deliver the Horſe.

Mr. Cowper thereupon ſaid, He ſent for his Horſe, becauſe he heard ſhe had drowned her ſelf; and he thought it was prudent to do ſo, for fear the Lord of the Manor ſhould ſeize every Thing that was there, as forfeited.

Mr. Jones obſerved, he did not think fit to take his Horſe himſelf, though he put him up there: And now they ſhould proceed to give Evidence againſt the other three Priſoners.

Evidences againſt Marſon, Stevens, and Rogers

John Gurrey teſtified, That, at the laſt Aſſizes, Mr Stevens, and Mr. Rogers came and hired a Lodging of his Wife in the Afternoon, when he was at Church: That they came to his Houſe again about Eleven at Night, and brought Mr. Marſon with them: They all went up Stairs, had a Fire lighted, and asked for the Landlord, whereupon he (Gurrey) came up to them, and fetched them Wine, and at their Deſire ſat down and drank with them: Then they asked, If Mrs. Sarah Stout lived in Town, and if ſhe was a Fortune? And he promiſed to ſhew them Mrs. Stout the next Day: And Mr. Rogers and Stevens telling Marſon he was her old Sweet-heart, Marſon anſwered, She had thrown him off, but a Friend of his was even with her by that time: —— That Mr. Marſon putting by his Wig, he ſaw his Head was wet; and Marſon ſaid, he was juſt come from London, and that made him in ſuch a Heat: That the next Morning he (the Witneſs) hearing of the Accident, went down to Mrs. Stout's, and ſaw them laying her out in the Barn, and meeting Mr. Marſon and Mr. Stevens, and Mr. Rogers as he came back, he told them the News, and they deſired him to go with them to the Barn again, which he did; and while he was viewing of the Corps they went away: And about Eleven the ſame Morning he ſaw Mr Marſon and Mr. Stevens with Mr. Cowper in the Market-Place.

Here Mr. Cowper demanded of Gurrey, If he did not ſay to his Wife, they muſt not meddle with Sarah Walker, the Maid of the Deceaſed; becauſe ſhe was a Witneſs againſt the Cowpers? Gurrey thereupon acknowledged that, upon his Wives ſaying ſhe ſuſpected Sarah Walker, he bid her not concern herſelf with her, for Fear of taking off her Evidence.

Martha Gurrey the Wife of the ſaid John Gurrey teſtified, That Stevens and Rogers came to her Houſe about Five in the Afternoon, on the Day the laſt Aſſizes began, and hired a Lodging of her; after which they went away, and returned between Eleven and Twelve at Night, and brought Mr. Marſon with them, and deſired they might all three lie together: That ſhe made them a Fire, and her Husband fetched them Wine, and one of them asked him if he knew Mrs. Sarah Stout, telling Marſon ſhe was an old Sweet-heart of his, and Marſon anſwered, She had turned him off, but a Friend of his was even with her; and Mr. Rogers ſaid he was in with her; and afterwards ſaid her Buſineſs was done; and laying down a little Bundle they had, he added, Mrs. Sarah Stout's courting Days are over: Whereupon ſhe (the Witneſs) replied, ſhe hoped it was no Hurt to the Gentlewoman, and looking on Mr. Marſon, ſhe ſaw him put his Peruke aſide, and his Head reeked, and he told them he was juſt come from London, which made him diſappointed of a Lodging: That going afterwards into the next Room, ſhe heard them diſcourſing about Money, and one of them ſaid, the Uſe Money was paid to Night: And next Morning after they were gone, ſhe found a Cord at the End of the Trunk, which ſhe was ſure was not there before, and produced the Cord in Court.

Mr. Cowper demanding, Why they did not give this Evidence to the Coroners Inqueſt? She anſwered, ſhe did tell her Husband ſhe thought they ought to be taken up, and he ſaid he would not do it, he did not know but it might coſt him his Life; and that ſhe was afterwards ſo troubled about it, that ſhe could not reſt Day or Night, and told him if he would not reveal it, ſhe would do it her ſelf.

Elizabeth Gurrey, the Siſter of the former Witneſſes depoſed, That ſhe heard Mr. Marſon ask the other Gentlemen how much Money they had ſpent? And they anſwered, what was that to him? He had had 40 or 50 l. to his Share; and the other demanding if the Buſineſs was done, he anſwered, he believed it was; but if it was not done, it would be done that Night: Then he pulled a Handful of Money out of his Pocket, and ſwore he would ſpend it all, for Joy the Buſineſs was done: That Mr. Cowper's Name was mentioned in their Diſcourſe; but not Mrs. Stout's: One of them was very hot; he wiped his Head with a Handkerchief, and his Shoes were wet and dirty; ſhe thought it was Mr. Marſon.

Upon this Evidence Mr. Jones obſerved, That Mr. Marſon pretended he was juſt come from London; but when he was examined, he ſaid he came to Hertford about Eight o'Clock, and went to the Glove and Dolphin Inn, where he ſtaid till he came to his Lodgings; but it was ſtrange he ſhould be in ſuch a great Heat and wetſhod if he came from the Tavern, where he had been ſitting four or five Hours, by his own Relation; and thereupon his Examination was read.

And here the Evidence for the King being cloſed, and Mr. Cowper directed to enter upon his Defence, he ſaid,

Mr. Cowper's Defence.

Now they have done on the Part of the King, my Lord, and you Gentlemen of my Jury, I muſt beg your Patience for my Defence:

1699. 11 W. III.

fence: I confeſs it was an unfortunate Accident for me (as Mr. Jones calls it) that I happened to be the laſt Perſon (for ought appears) in the Company of a Melancholy Woman. The Diſcourſe, occaſioned by this Accident, had been a ſufficient Misfortune to me, without any Thing elſe to aggravate it; but I did not in the leaſt imagine that ſo little, ſo trivial an Evidence as here is, could poſſibly have affected me to ſo great a Degree, as to bring me to this Place, to anſwer for the worſt Fact that the worſt of Men can be guilty of.

My Lord, your Lordſhip did juſt now obſerve, That I have appeared at the Bar for my Clients; but I muſt ſay too, that I never appeared for my ſelf under this or the like Circumſtances, as a Criminal for any Offence whatſoever.

Mr. Jones very well ſaid, when he ſpoke on the Part of the King, that if this Gentlewoman was murthered, the Crime was villainous, baſe, barbarous, and cruel; and for my Part I think ſo too: The Crime would be ſo great, that it could never be ſufficiently condemned: But at the ſame Time I may aver, that to ſuppoſe a Murther without good Grounds for it, and afterwards to charge innocent Men with it knowingly and maliciouſly, is to a Trifle as baſe and barbarous as the Murther it ſelf could be.

My Lord, I ſpeak for my own Part, I know not at what Price other Men may value their Lives; but I had much rather my ſelf was murthered then my Reputation; which yet, I am ſenſible, hath ſuffered greatly hitherto, by the Malice and Artifice of ſome Men, who have gone pretty far in making this Fact, as barbarous as it is, to be credited of me: And therefore I muſt beg your Lordſhips and the Juries Patience, while I not only defend my Life, but juſtify my ſelf alſo from theſe Things that have unjuſtly aſperſed me, by the Conſpiracy and Artifice of my Accuſers.

My Lord, in all the Evidence that hath been given, I muſt obſerve, there is no poſitive Evidence (with Submiſſion) to induce the Jury, or any one, to believe the General that this Gentlewoman was murthered; but they go upon Suppoſitions and Inferences, which are contradicted by other Circumſtances, in the very Evidence of the Proſecutor, that make full as ſtrong to prove ſhe was not murthered, as that ſhe was; ſo that, as it ſtands, it can amount only to a bare Suppoſition that ſhe was murthered by any Body.

Then, as to the Evidence that particularly relates to my ſelf or the Gentlemen who ſtand with me at the Bar, that they, or I were concerned in it, (if ſhe was murthered) there is not one Syllable of Proof; at moſt, it amounts but to make us ſuſpect of a Murther, not proved, but only ſuſpected: This I obſerve upon the Evidence as it now ſtands without Anſwer, as it has been given on the King's Part; and how far, in the Caſe of Life, Men ſhall be affected with Evidence of this Nature, which neither proves the Murther in general, nor that they did it in particular, though no Defence was made, or any further Anſwer given, I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips and the Jury's Judgment.

But, my Lord, I do not doubt but I ſhall be able to wipe away, even that remote Suſpicion, by my Defence: They have been long in their Evidence for the King; and therefore I muſt beg your Patience while I give a particular Anſwer to every Part of it, in as good a Method as I am able: And I will waſte as little Time as may conſiſt with the juſtifying of my Reputation; for which I know your Lordſhip will have as tender a Regard, to ſee it doth not ſuffer unjuſtly, as for my Life it ſelf.

And I promiſe your Lordſhip, I ſhall trouble you with no Evidence which is not expreſs and plain, no Inuendo's or Suſpicions; but I ſhall prove fully and clearly, in the firſt Place, That there was no Ground at all in this Caſe, to ſuppoſe ſhe was murthered by any one but her ſelf.

The firſt Fact that they inſiſted upon, to infer a Murther from it, was, That the Body was found floating: Now, my Lord, that Fact I am able by the Evidence I have, as well as from that of the Proſecutor, to deny: For the Fact was directly otherwiſe that is, ſhe was not found floating.

And whereas the Proſecutor's Witneſſes, who have been produced to this Point, are obſcure and poor Men, and your Lordſhip obſerves, have been taught to ſay generally that ſhe floated, which, when they are required to explain, and deſcribe how ſhe lay, they contradict themſelves in, by ſhewing ſhe lay Sideways between the Stakes, and almoſt all under Water: Now I ſhall give your Lordſhip and the Jury, a full and particular Account and Deſcription from the Pariſh Officers, Men employed by the Coroner to take the Body out of the Water, of the very Manner and Poſture in which it was firſt found; which they are much better able to do than the Proſecutor's Witneſſes, having ſeen her before all or moſt of thoſe People; and theſe Officers clearly agree, that her Body was under Water, when found, except ſome ſmall Appearance of her Petticoats, near or on the Surface of the Water, which may be very eaſily accounted for; becauſe the Stakes the Witneſſes mention, and which are driven into the Ground croſs the River to prevent Weeds and Trumpery from running into the Mill-ſtand, as the Witneſſes have already ſaid, about a Foot diſtance from one another, and are ſet with their Feet from the Mill, and their Heads inclining towards the Mill with the Stream. Now, my Lord, every Body knows, that though a drowned Body will at firſt ſink, yet it is buoyant, and does not go down-right, and reſt in one Place like Lead; for a human Body is ſeldom or never in a Stream found to lie where it was drowned: A Body, drowned at Chelſea, has been often found by Fiſhermen at London, and that before it came to float above Water. Now if a Body is ſo buoyant, as that it is driven down by the impellant Force of the Current (though it do not float above Water) it ſeems a Conſequence, that when it comes to be ſtopped and reſiſted by the Stakes which lie with their Heads downwards, inclining with the Stream, the Stream bearing the Body againſt the Stakes, muſt needs needs raiſe it upwards, to find another Paſſage, if poſſible, when the ordinary and natural is obſtructed. I have ſeen, I remember, that where Weeds have been driven down a River, and have been rolled along at the Bottom, when they have come down to a Board or Stakes of a Wyer or Turnpike, they have been by the Force of the Water raiſed up againſt thoſe Boards or Stakes, and forced over them; though without ſuch Obſtruction, they had undoubtedly continued to roll under the Water. I do not know of any one Symptom they pretend to, of her not being drowned, from any thing obſerved of her in the Water: Then as to the flatneſs of her Belly, when ſhe was laid in her Coffin, I ſhall ſhew it is a common and natural Accident; ſometimes drowned Bodies are ſwelled more, ſometimes leſs, ſometimes not at all: I think it hardly deſerves a Phyſician to prove, that a Body may be drowned with very little Water; that a Man may be drowned by ſtrangling, or Suffocation cauſed by a little Water in the Lungs, without any great Quantity of Water received in the Body, is a certain and eſtabliſhed Truth; for I am told, that when Reſpiration ceaſes, the Party dies, and can receive no Water after that; ſo that nothing is to be inferred from a Body's having more or leſs Water found in it, eſpecially if your Lordſhip will give me Leave to obſerve this Diſtinction, where a Body is voluntarily drowned, and where it is drowned by Accident; for People that fall in by Accide nt doſtruggle and ſtrive as long as they can; every Time they riſe, they drink ſome Water into the Stomach to prevent its paſſing into the Lungs, and are drowned no ſooner then needs muſt; but Perſons that voluntarily drown themſelves, to be ſure deſperately plunge into the Water, to diſpatch a miſerable Life as ſoon as they can; and ſo that little Quantity in the Lungs, which cauſes Death, may be the ſooner taken in, after which no more is received: And I hope, by Phyſicians it will appear, there is good Ground for this Difference.

The next is the Evidence that the Chirurgeons have given on the other Part, relating to the taking this Gentlewoman out of her Grave, after ſhe had been buried ſix Weeks; whether this ought to have been given in Evidence, for the Reaſons I hinted at, in a Criminal Caſe, I ſubmit to your Lordſhip: But as it is, I have no Reaſon to apprehend it, being able to make appear, that the Gentlemen who ſpoke to this Point, have delivered themſelves in that Manner, either out of extreme Malice, or a moſt profound Ignorance: This will be ſo very plain upon my Evidence, that I muſt take the Liberty to impute one, or both of thoſe Cauſes, to the Gentlemen that have argued from their Obſervations upon that Matter.

And now, if your Lordſhip will but pleaſe to conſider the Circumſtances under which they would accuſe me of this horrid Action, I don't think they will pretend to ſay, that in the whole Courſe of my Life, I have been guilty of any mean or indirect Action; and I will put it upon the worſt Enemy I have in the World to ſay it. Now, for a Man in the Condition I was in, of ſome Fortune in Poſſeſſion, related to a better, in a good Employment, thriving in my Profeſſion, living within my Income, never in Debt, (I may truly ſay, not five Pounds, at any one Time, theſe Eight Years paſt) having no Poſſibility of making any Advantage by her Death, void of all Malice; and, as appears by her own Evidence, in perfect Amity and Friendſhip with this Gentlewoman, to be guilty of the murthering her, to begin at the Top of all Baſeneſs and Wickedneſs, certainly is incredible.

My Lord, in this Proſecution, my Enemies ſeeing the Neceſſity of aſſigning ſome Cauſe, have been ſo malicious to ſuggeſt before, (though not now, when I have this Opportunity of vindicating my ſelf publickly) that I have been concerned in the Receipt of Money for this Gentlewoman, had her Securities by me, and ſometimes that I had been her Guardian, or her Truſtee, and I know not what. I now ſee the Contrivers and Promoters of that Scandal, and they know it to be baſe, falſe, and malicious: I never was concerned in Intereſt with her directly or indirectly; and ſo I told them when I was before my Lord Chief Juſtice: 'Tis true, it was then juſt ſuggeſted by the Proſecutors, I then denied it, and I deny it ſtill — I thank God I have not been uſed, nor have I needed, to deny the Truth.

My Lord, you find the Proſecutors have nothing to ſay to me upon this Head, after all the Slanders and Stories they have publiſhed againſt me of my having Money in my Hands which belonged to the Deceaſed: But though they do not ſtir it, I will, and give your Lordſhip a full Account of all that ever was in that Matter. When I lodged at Hertford, ſome Time ſince ſhe deſired me to recommend to her a Security for 200*l.* if it came in my Way: My Lord, when I came to Town, I underſtood that one Mrs Puller, a Client of mine, had a Mortgage formerly made to her by one Mr. Loftus of Lambeth in Surry, for the like Sum; and that ſhe was willing to have in her Money: I wrote to this Gentlewoman, the Deceaſed, to acquaint her of the Security; ſhe thereupon did ſend up 200*l.* and ſome odd Pounds for Intereſt (the Account of which I produced to my Lord Chief Juſtice): This Money was ſent to me by Mr. Cramfield, as I have been informed, and by him given to Mr. Toller's Clerk, and by him brought publickly to me.

My Lord, this Mortgage I immediately transferred by Aſſignment indorſed on the Back of it, and Mrs. Habberfield, a Truſtee for Mrs. Puller, ſigned and ſealed it; and that very 200*l.* and Intereſt due was at one and the ſame Time paid to Mrs Puller, and by her the Principal was paid to her Daughter, in Part of her Portion: All this was tranſacted the beginning of December laſt, and ſhe was not drowned till the 13th of March following: And, my Lord, theſe People, that are now the Proſecutors, did own before my Lord Chief Juſtice, that they had found this Mortgage amongſt the Deceaſed's Writings in her Cabinet at the Time of her Death. Now, my Lord, I ſay, that, ſaving this one Service I did her, as I ſaid, in December laſt, I never was otherwiſe concerned with her in the receiving or diſpoſing of any of her Money; nor had I ever any of her Securities for Money in my keeping; and I defy any Adverſary I have to ſhew the contrary.

My Lord, as there appears no Malice, no Intereſt, ſo they have proved for me, that there was no Concealment of Shame to induce me to commit ſo barbarous an Action; otherwiſe perhaps, now they find they can aſſign no other Cauſe, they would content themſelves to give that Reaſon, and fling that Scandal at me: And though I take it, by the Experience I have had of them, they did not deſign to do me any Favour, yet, I thank them, in endeavouring to vindicate her Honour, they have ſecured my Reputation againſt that Calumny; and though I am ſatisfied, as I ſaid, they did not intend me Kindneſs, yet I thank God, they have given me a juſt Opportunity to take Advantage of their Cunning, for the clearing my Innocence in that Particular.

Then, my Lord, not to reſt it here, but to ſatisfy the Jury and the World, how this Gentlewoman came to deſtroy herſelf, I ſhall give the cleareſt Evidence that was ever given in any Court, that ſhe murthered herſelf. When I enter upon this Proof, I muſt of Neceſſity treſpaſs upon the Character of this Gentlewoman that is dead. I confeſs this is a tender Point, 'tis a Thing I would willingly be excuſed from, and it is not without a great deal of Reluctancy and Compulſion forced from me: That ſhe was melancholy, the Proſecutors themſelves have proved, but I muſt of Neceſſity ſhew you the Occaſion and Reaſons of it, and the Witneſſes will tell your Lordſhip what deſperate Reſolutions ſhe had been under formerly, and that will lead me to near the Time of her Death, to ſhow why, and upon what Accidents, ſhe made away her ſelf. I will not enumerate Particulars, by way of opening; only I muſt tell your Lordſhip, that ſome Letters of hers muſt of Neceſſity be produced, which truly, as I ſaid, I ſhould not meddle with, if I had not theſe innocent Gentlemen here to defend, as well as my ſelf. Perhaps it may be ſaid, that in Honour I ought to conceal the Weakneſs of this Gentlewoman; but then, in Honour and Juſtice to theſe Gentlemen that are falſly accuſed with me, I cannot do it; I hope this one Reaſon will excuſe me to the World, for I have no other that could have obliged me to bring theſe Letters upon the Stage: I ſolemnly proteſt, if I ſtood here ſingly in the Caſe of my own Life, upon the Evidence given againſt me, I take it to be ſo inconſiderable, I would not do it; but I muſt do it, to ſhow that theſe Gentlemen alſo are innocent, and to preſerve them; becauſe I am ſatisfied in my own Mind they are ſo. My Lord, when I have done that, I ſhall ſhew your Lordſhip in the next Place, that it is utterly impoſſible I could be concerned in this Fact, if I had had all the Motives and Provocations in the World to have done it: I ſhall ſhew your Lordſhip, in Point of Time, it could not be.

The Maid Sarah Walker, who is the ſingle Witneſs, I take it, that ſays any Thing in the leaſt relating to me, ſaid but now, the Clock had ſtruck Eleven before ſhe carried up the Coals, and about a quarter of an Hour after, while ſhe was warming the Bed above Stairs, ſhe heard the Door clap, and ſometime after ſhe came down, and found that I and her Miſtreſs were gone: Now in Point of Time, I ſhall prove it utterly impoſſible I could be guilty of the Fact I am accuſed of, being ſeen to come into the Glove Inn as the Town Clock ſtruck Eleven, and ſtaying there more than a quarter of an Hour, was, after ſeveral Things done at my Lodging, in Bed before Twelve o'Clock, and went no more out that Night, as I ſhall prove. As for that little Circumſtance of ſending for my Horſe, which they have made uſe of all along to back this Proſecution, their very telling me of that Matter, ſhews how they are put to their Shifts to juſtifie their accuſing me; I ſay in Prudence I ought to have done what I did: I ſent for him on the Tueſday, but as their Witneſs ſaith, I told him at the Time I bid him fetch my Horſe, not to uſe then, nor till by the Courſe of the Circuit I was to go into Eſſex with the Judges the next Morning; and till then the Proſecutor's Witneſs, who is the Hoſtler at the Glove Inn, was ordered to ſet him up there, to litter him down, and to take Care of him, and feed him; and that he ſhould be ready for me to go to Chelmsford on the Morrow, whither I went with the other Counſel the next Morning, being Wedneſday; and this, my Lord, is the Whole of that Matter.

My Lord, this Buſineſs ſlept near two Months after the Coroner's Inqueſt, before I heard of it, or imagined my ſelf to be concerned in it, and was never ſtirred, till two Parties, differing on all other Occaſions, had laid their Heads together: I beg Leave to let your Lordſhip a little into that Matter, to ſhew you how this Proſecution came to be managed with ſo much Noiſe and Violence as it hath been. I can make it appear, that one of the greateſt of the Quakers, Mr Mead by Name, has very much, and indirectly too, concerned himſelf in this Matter: It ſeems, they fancy the Reputation of their Sect is concerned in it; for they think it a wonderful Thing, nay, abſolutely impoſſible (however other People may be liable to ſuch Reſolutions) That one, who was by her Education entitled to the Light within her, ſhould run headlong into the Water, as if ſhe had been poſſeſſed with the Devil; of this they think their Sect is to be cleared, though by ſpilling the Blood of four innocent Men. The other ſort of People that concur with the Quakers in this Proſecution, I ſhall mention, now I come to obſerve what the Witneſſes are that have been produced againſt me: Some of them I have nothing to object to, but that they are extreme indigent and poor, and have been helped by the Proſecutor; thoſe that are ſo, ſay nothing as to me; others who live in this Town, and give their Opinions of the Manner of her Death, are poſſeſt with much Prejudice againſt me, upon Feuds that have riſen at the Elections of my Father and Brother in this Town; and theſe, with the Quakers have wholly dreſt up this Matter for ſeveral Ends; the Quakers to maintain the Reputation puration of their Sect, and the others to deſtroy, or break at leaſt, the Intereſt of my Family in this Place. But, however effectual theſe Deſigns may have been, to have made a great Noiſe in the World out of nothing; I am ſatisfied now, that I am in a Court of Juſtice, where no Perſon's Reputation, much leſs his Life, will be ſacrificed to the Policy or Malice of a Party without Proof; and therefore I have taken up ſo much of your Time, to ſet the true Riſe of this Proſecution before you in a clear Light.

My Lord, as to my coming to this Town on Monday, it was the firſt Day of the Aſſizes, and that was the Reaſon that brought me hither: before I came out of Town, I confeſs, I had a Deſign of taking a Lodging at this Gentlewoman's Houſe, having been invited, by Letter, ſo to do: And the Reaſon why I did not, was this: My Brother, when he went the Circuit, always favoured me with the Offer of a Part of his Lodging, which, out of good Husbandry, I always accepted: The laſt Circuit was in Parliament-time, and my Brother, being in the Money-Chair, could not attend the Circuit as he uſed to do: He had very good Lodgings, I think one of the beſt in this Town, where I uſed to be with him: Theſe were always kept for him, unleſs Notice was given to the contrary. The Friday before I came down to the Aſſizes, I happened to be in Company with my Brother and another Gentlemen, and then I ſhewed them the Letter, by which I was earneſtly invited down to lie at the Houſe of this Gentlewoman during the Aſſizes (it is dated the 9th of March laſt); and, deſigning to comply with the Invitation, I thereupon deſired my Brother to write to Mr. Bareſoot, our Landlord, and get him, if he could, to diſpoſe of the Lodgings; for, ſaid I, if he keeps them, they muſt be paid for, and then I cannot well avoid lying there: My Brother did ſay, He would write, if he could think on't: And thus, if Mr. Bareſoot diſpoſed of the Lodgings, I own I intended to lie at the Deceaſed's Houſe; but, if not, I looked on my ſelf as obliged to lie at Mr. Bareſoot's. Accordingly I ſhall prove, as ſoon as ever I came to this Town, in the Morning of the firſt Day of the Aſſizes, I went directly to Mr. Bareſoot's (the Maid and all agree in this) and the Reaſon was, I had not ſeen my Brother after he ſaid he would write, before I went out of London; and therefore it was proper for me to go firſt to Mr Bareſoot's, to know whether my Brother had wrote to him, and whether he had diſpoſed of the Lodgings or not. As ſoon as I came to Mr. Bareſoot's, there was one Mr. Taylor, of this Town, came to me, and I, in his Hearing, asked Mr. Bareſoot, his Wife, and Maid-ſervant, one after another, If they had received a Letter from my Brother, to unbeſpeak the Lodgings? they told me, No; that the Room was kept for us; and, I think, that they had made a Fire, and that the Sheets were airing. I was a little concerned he had not writ; but, being ſatisfied that no Letter had been received, I ſaid immediately, as I ſhall prove by ſeveral Witneſſes, If it be ſo, I muſt ſtay with you; I will take up my Lodging here: Thereupon I lighted, and ſent for my Bag from the Coffee-Houſe, and lodged all my things at Bareſoot's: and thus I took up my Lodging there as uſual. I had no ſooner done this, but Sarah Walker came to me from her Miſtreſs to invite me to Dinner, and accordingly I went and dined there; and when I went away, it may be true, that, being asked, I ſaid I would come again at Night; but that I did ſay I would lie there, I do poſitively deny; and, knowing I could not lie there, 'tis unlikely I ſhould ſay ſo. My Lord, at Night I did come again, and paid her ſome Money, which I received from Mr. Loftus, who is the Mortgager for Intereſt of the 200*l.* I before mentioned (it was ſix Pounds odd Money, in Guineas and half Guineas) I writ a Receipt, but ſhe declined the ſigning of it, preſſing me to ſtay there that Night; which I refuſed, as engaged to lie at Mr. Bareſoot's, and took my Leave of her; and that very Money, which I paid her, was found in her Pocket, as I have heard, after ſhe was drowned.

Now, my Lord, the Reaſon that I went to her Houſe at Night, was, firſt, as I ſaid, to pay her the Intereſt-Money; in the next place, it was but fitting, when I owned my ſelf under a Neceſſity of diſappointing her, and lying at Bareſoot's, to go to excuſe my not lying there; which I had not an Opportunity at Dinner-time to do. My Lord, I open my Defence ſhortly, referring the Particulars to the Witneſſes themſelves, in calling thoſe who will fully refute the Suppoſitions and Inferences made by the Proſecutors, whom firſt, my Lord, I ſhall begin with, to ſhew there is no Evidence of any Murder at all committed: And this, I ſay again, ought to be indiſputably made manifeſt and proved, before any Man can be ſo much as ſuſpected for it.

Judge Hatſel bid Mr. Cowper not flouriſh too much, but call his Witneſſes, and then make his Obſerv tions.

Then Robert Dew appeared as a Witneſs for the Priſoner, and teſtified, That he ſaw Sarah Stout taken up; that ſhe lay in the River, covered with the Water about half a Foot, and had a ſtriped Petticoat on, but nothing could be ſeen above Water; and that when he heaved her up, he found ſeveral Sticks and Flags under her; that ſhe lay on her Right Side in the Water, her Head leaning down, and her Arm between the Stakes, which ſtood ſloping, leaning down the Stream a little. That when ſhe was taken out, he perceived a white Froth come from her Mouth and Noſe, and, as they wiped it away, more came out. The Priſoner's Witneſſes of the finding the Corps.

Toung, the Conſtable, confirmed the Evidence of the laſt Witneſs, differing only in this, That he ſaw Part of her Coat lie on the Top of the Water, and that they found ſix Guineas, ten Shillings and three Pence half Penny in her Pockets.

Wall, one of the Coroner's Inqueſt, depoſed, That there were no Marks upon the Body when they viewed it, only a little Mark about her Ear, and ſomething near her Collar Bone; and that Mr. John Dimſdale told them, Theſe Marks were no more than uſual in ſuch Caſes:

1699. 11 W. III.

The Opinions of the Phyſicians.

Caſes: It was only a Stagnation of the Blood. —— Other Witneſſes teſtified, That ſhe frothed pretty much at the Mouth.

Then Mr. Cowper proceeded to examine Dr. Sloane, and the reſt of the Phyſicians he had brought from London, as to their Opinion concerning the Body's having no Water in it.

Dr. Sloane ſaid, A ſmall Quantity of Water, in the Wind-pipe, would ſuffocate a Perſon; and he believed, whether a Perſon came alive or dead into the Water, ſome Quantity would get into the Wind-pipe, but none into the Stomach, after the Perſon was dead.

The Court demanding, If there had been Water in the Body, if it would not have putrified the Parts? he anſwered, It would have putrified the Stomach leſs than the Lungs: That, no doubt, there would be a Fermentation more or leſs, as the Air came more or leſs to the Body: It might be otherwiſe where the Air was wholly ſhut out, which was ſuppoſed to be the modern Way of embalming or preſerving dead Bodies without Spices, which was in a great meaſure brought about by the Cloſeneſs of the Coffin.

Mr Cowper asking, If any Water could paſs into the Thorax, or there could be any Water in the Body after ſix Weeks? he ſaid, He thought it ſcarce poſſible that any ſhould go from the Wind-pipe into the Cavity of the Thorax, without great Violence, for there was a Membrane that covered the Lungs, that would hinder the Water from paſſing through: That, if there was any Quantity of Water in the Lungs, the Spunginеſs of the Part would ſuck up ſome Part of it; and, in the Stomach, it was probable there was a great Fermentation, and a great deal would riſe in Vapours or Steams, and go off that Way.

Dr. Garth ſaid, It was impoſſible the Body ſhould have floated unleſs it had reſted or been entangled with the Stakes, becauſe all dead Bodies fall to the Bottom: And, as all the Witneſſes agreed ſhe was found upon her Side, it was as hard to conceive how ſhe ſhould float in this Poſture, as that a Deal Board ſhould float edgeways: Therefore it was plain ſhe was entangled, or the Poſture would have been otherwiſe. As to the Quantity of Water in her, it need not be very great; but, he muſt own, the Water would force it ſelf into all Cavities where there was no Reſiſtance He believed, when ſhe threw her ſelf in, ſhe might not ſtruggle to ſave her Life, and ſo not ſup up much Water: However, he doubted not but ſome Water fell into her Lungs, becauſe the Weight of it would force it ſelf down; but this might imperceptibly work or fall out: Nor did he think Water in the Body would promote Putrefaction; for, in ſome Places, they kept Fleſh-meat from Corruption by preſerving it in Water; and, it was well known, it would putrify leſs in Water than when expoſed to Air. And, being asked again as to the ſinking of Dead Bodies, he perſiſted in his Opinion, That all dead Bodies would ſink, unleſs prevented by ſome extraordinary Accident; as, if a ſtrangled Body be thrown into the Water, and the Lungs being filled with Air, the Cord be left about the Neck, in that Caſe it might float, becauſe of the included Air, as a Bladder does; but here was no Cord, or any Mark of it, only a common Stagnation: The Seamen were miſtaken, when they ſaid they ſwam: He had made the Experiment on other Animals, and they all ſunk. Being asked, If any Quantity of Water could paſs into the Cavity of the Thorax? he anſwered, It was impoſſible there ſhould be any, till the Lungs were quite rotten; there was no Way but by the Lungs, which were inveſted with ſo ſtrong a Membrane, that they could not force Breath through it without their Blow-pipes.

Dr. Morley ſaid, There was no Neceſſity ſhe ſhould have a great Quantity of Water in her: If ſhe drew into her Lungs two Ounces of Water, it was the ſame Thing as to drowning her, as if there had been two Tons. They drowned a Dog the laſt Night, and diſſected him, and found not a Spoonful of Water in his Stomach, and about two Ounces in his Lungs; and the like Quantity in another they drowned: That they both frothed at the Mouth and Noſe: And if Bodies ſwam that had been lately killed, he thought it was by Accident: And he was of Opinion, there could be no Water in the Thorax, unleſs by an Impoſthume, or ſome Violence to Nature.

Dr. Woollaſton was of Opinion, It was impoſſible to diſcover if a Perſon was drowned, ſix Weeks afterwards; and that if there had been never ſo much Water in the Body, it muſt have forced its Way out before that Time: That he knew two People drowned, and taken up next Day; one was ready to burſt with Water, and the other had not the leaſt Sign of Water in him, except a watry Froth at his Mouth and Noſtrils.

Mr. Cooper, the Anatomiſt, depoſed, That three Ounces of Water, in the Windpipe, was enough to drown a Perſon; and admitted, that Bodies neceſſarily ſink in Water, if no Diſtention of their Parts buoy them up: That there could be no Water remain in the Body after ſix Weeks Time; and it was ridiculous to expect any in the Thorax, unleſs the Lungs had ſuffered ſome Apoſthumation: And as to the reſt, he concurred with the Phyſicians produced by the Priſoner.

Mr. Harriot, a Sea-Surgeon, teſtified, That dead Bodies always ſunk when thrown into the Sea: And Mr. Bartlet, another Seaman, confirmed his Teſtimony.

Mr. Camlin teſtified, That he and Mr. Dimſdale, and others, were ſent for by Mrs. Stout to view her Daughter's Corps, the Day ſhe was found; and that there was a Mark under her Left Ear, another below her Collar-Bone, and a third upon her Arm; and that Mr. Dimſdale, by his Conſent, and the reſt of the Surgeons and Phyſicians preſent, informed the Coroner's Inqueſt, That the Mark under her Ear was a Stagnation of Blood that frequently happened to drowned People. He added, That there were greater Marks of Stagnation on the Child that was found drowned in the ſame Place a little before: That the Child's Face was black and diſcoloured: That this Child was eleven or twelve Years of Age: And, laſtly, That there were no Signs of Mrs. Stout's being ſtrangled.

Then

1699. 11 W. III.

Then Mr. Cowper proceeded to call Witneſſes to ſhew that the Deceaſed was a melancholly Woman.

Evidence that the Deceaſed was melancholly

Mr. Bowd, a Tradeſman of Hertford, depoſed, That obſerving the Deceaſed to be melancholly, he asked her, If ſhe was in Love? and ſhe confeſſed ſhe was; but ſaid, The World ſhould not ſay ſhe changed her Religion for an Husband: And that having lately bought a Gown of this Witneſs, ſhe ſaid, She believed ſhe ſhould never live to wear it.

Mr. Firmin alſo teſtified, That the Deceaſed was melancholly.

Mrs. Bendy depoſed, That ſhe acknowledged her ſelf extremely melancholly, inſomuch that her Mind was diſordered by it.

Mrs. Low teſtified, That the Deceaſed often complained ſhe was melancholly, and confeſſed ſhe was in Love: That ſhe ſaid, She would take her full Swing of Melancholly, when her Mother was abroad, and lay a-bed a Week. That at another Time ſhe ſaid, Her Melancholly had occaſioned an Intermitting Fever; and being adviſed to ſend for a Phyſician, ſhe ſaid, Her Diſtemper lay in her Mind, and not in her Body; ſhe would take nothing, and the ſooner it killed her, the better; and that now ſhe delighted neither in Reading or any thing elſe.

Then Mrs. Cowper, Wife of the Priſoner's Brother Mr. William Cowper, (afterwards Lord Chancellor) being called as a Witneſs, teſtified, That ſhe was frequently in the Company of the Deceaſed, both at London and in the Country, and ſhe was extremely melancholly; and the Witneſs ſuſpecting it was upon Mr. Marſon's Account, asked, Why ſhe did not marry him, and make her ſelf eaſy? but ſhe ſaid, She could not: That ſhe appeared diſturbed alſo at the Preaching of a Quaker Waterman, who gathered a Rabble of People about him before her Mother's Door; and, preaching to them, arraigned her Conduct. That the Deceaſed once having a Fever, ſaid, She was in great Hopes it would carry her off, and neglected her ſelf with that View, often wiſhing ſhe were dead: That, at another Time, being very melancholly, the Priſoner's Wife ſaid, For God's Sake keep ſuch Thoughts out of your Head as you have had; talk no more of throwing your ſelf out of a Window. To which the Deceaſed anſwered, I may thank God that ever I ſaw your Face, otherwiſe I had done it: But I can't promiſe I ſhall not do it.

Mrs. Toller alſo depoſed, the Deceaſed was melancholly, and once ſaid, She would drown herſelf out of the Way.

Mr. Taylor depoſed, That the Saturday before the Deceaſed was found, ſhe appeared melancholly, and in a diſordered Head-Dreſs; and he taking Notice of it, ſhe ſaid, It would ſerve her Time.

He alſo teſtified, That the Priſoner told Barefoot, in his Hearing, He would lie at his Houſe, the firſt Morning of the Aſſizes, Barefoot having reſerved the Lodgings for his Brother, who did not come the Circuit as he intended: That the Priſoner gave this Reaſon for his lying there, (viz.) That his Brother muſt pay for it, and therefore he would take it himſelf.

1699. 11 W.III.

Here Mr. Cowper proceeded to open another Part of his Evidence: He ſaid, That being at Hertford in the Long Vacation, and Mr. Marſhal of Lyon's-Inn coming down to viſit him there, he introduced him into the Company of the Deceaſed, and he made his Addreſſes to her, and was well received as a Lover: But walking out one Evening with Mr. Marſhal, Mrs. Crooke and the Deceaſed, and Mr Marſhal and Mrs. Crooke being a little before them, Mrs. Stout (the Deceaſed) ſaid to him, the Priſoner, She did not think he had been ſo dull; and, he being inquiſitive to know in what his Dullneſs conſiſted? ſhe anſwered, What! Do you imagine I intend to marry Mr. Marſhal? and he replying, If ſhe did not, ſhe was to blame in what ſhe had done. Mrs. Stout ſaid, No, I thought it might ſerve to divert the Cenſure of the World, and favour our Acquaintance: And that he would produce ſome Letters to confirm this, after he had called Mr. Marſhall.

Evidence the Deceaſed was in Love with him.

Then Mr. Marſhall depoſed, That he came down to Hertford in the Long Vacation, to viſit Mr. Cowper, and met with Mrs. Sarah Stout firſt at his Lodgings: That ſhe gave him frequent Opportunities of improving his Acquaintance; and, by the Manner of his Reception, he had no Reaſon to ſuſpect the Uſe he was deſigned for: But, upon applying himſelf to her afterwards, in a Way of Courtſhip, he received a very fair Denial; and there his Suit ended. Mr. Cowper had been ſo friendly to give him Notice of ſome Things, that convinced him he ought to be thankful he had no more to do with her——— That he took her at her Word, when ſhe refuſed him, having partly, by his own Obſervation, but more by Mr. Cowper's Friendſhip, been pretty well able to gueſs at her Meaning.

Then two Letters from the Deceaſed, to Mr. Marſhal, (the firſt dated the 26th of December 1697, the other without Date) were read, which ſhewed there was a friendly Correſpondence carried on between them, but nothing more.

After which, Mr. Cowper produced a Letter from the Deceaſed to himſelf, but directed to Mrs. Jane Ellen at Hargrave's Coffee-Houſe, to prevent Suſpicion. Which Letter was in the following Words:

Letters of the Deceaſed to Mr. Cowper.

SIR, March the 5th.

" I Am glad you have not quite forgot that there is ſuch a Perſon as I in Being; but I am willing to ſhut my Eyes, and not ſee any thing that looks like Unkindneſs in you, and rather content my ſelf with what Excuſes you are pleaſed to make, than be inquiſitive into what I muſt not know. I ſhould very readily comply with your Propoſition of changing the Seaſon, if it were in my Power to do it; but, you know, that lies altogether in your own Breaſt. I am ſure the Winter has been too unpleaſant for me to deſire the Continuance of it: And I wiſh you were to endure the Sharpneſs of it, but for one Hour, as I have done for many long Nights and Days, and then, I believe,

1699. 11W. III.

" it would move that rocky Heart of yours, " that can be ſo thoughtleſs of me as you " are; but if it were deſigned for that End, " to make the Summer the more delightful, I " wiſh it may have the Effect ſo far, as to " continue it to be ſo too, that the Weather " may never over-caſt again; the which, if I " could be aſſured of, it would recompence " me for all that I ever ſuffered, and make " me as eaſie a Creature as I was the firſt Mo- " ment I received Breath; when you come to " H—— pray let your Steed guide you, and " don't do as you did the laſt Time; and " be ſure order your Affairs to be here as " ſoon as you can, which cannot be ſooner, " than you will be heartily welcome to your very ſincere Friend.

For Mrs. Jane Ellen, at Mr. Hargrave's near Temple-Bar, London.

Then another Letter from the Deceaſed to the Priſoner, dated the 9th of March, was read, and is as follows:

SIR,

" I Wrote to you by Sunday's Poſt, which I " hope you have received, however, as a " Confirmation, I will aſſure you, I know of " no Inconvenience that can attend your co- " habiting with me, unleſs the Grand Jury " ſhould thereupon find a Bill againſt us; but " I won't fly for it, for come Life, come " Death, I am reſolved never to deſert you; " therefore, according to your Appointment, " I will expect you, and then I ſhall only tell " you that I am Your, &c.

Further Evidence, ſhe was in Love with Cowper.

Then Mr. William Cowper, the Priſoner's Brother, was called to give Evidence for him: He ſaid, he would bear his Brother Witneſs, that it was with great Unwillingneſs he produced thoſe Letters; nothing but the Lives of thoſe Gentlemen who were tried with him, could have inclined him to that.

He depoſed further, That Mrs. Stout being in London, ſent his Brother Word ſhe would give him a Viſit at his Chamber: To prevent which, it was contrived between him and his Brother, that he (the Witneſs) being to dine with Mrs. Stout at his Father Cowper's in Hatton-Garden that Day, ſhould take an Opportunity to ſay that he (the Priſoner) was gone to Deptford; and that the Witneſs did mention it accordingly: Whereupon Mrs. Stout the Deceaſed, roſe up from Dinner in Confuſion, and going into the Yard, there ſwooned away, and they gave her ſuch Aſſiſtance as was uſual in ſuch Caſes.

He alſo teſtified, That his Brother communicated the laſt Letter to him on Friday before the laſt Aſſizes, and thinking, as the Caſe ſtood, it was better his Brother ſhould lie at his Lodgings at Mr. Barefoot's at the Aſſizes, than at Mrs. Stout's, he did not write to Mr. Barefoot to diſpoſe of the Lodgings to another.

Then Mrs. Barefoot teſtified, The Priſoner lay at her Houſe the Night the Accident happened, and came in a little after Eleven by the Town Clock, and did not go out again that Night: The Maid of the Houſe alſo, that put him to Bed, confirmed her Miſtreſs's Evidence, and affirmed, That the Clock ſtruck Twelve after the Priſoner was in Bed. 1699. 11W. III.

Then Mr. Cowper proceeded in his Defence, and ſaid, he would explain that Part of the Evidence that was given by Sarah Walker, Mrs. Stout's Maid, where ſhe ſaid, her Miſtreſs ordered her to warm the Bed, and he never contradicted it; and deſired the Court would obſerve thoſe Words in the laſt Letter, viz. No Inconvenience can attend your cohabiting with me; and afterwards, I won't fly for it, for come Life, come Death, I am reſolved; from whence might be conjectured, What the Diſpute was between them at the Time the Maid mentioned: He thought it was not neceſſary ſhe ſhould be preſent at this Debate, and therefore might not interrupt her Miſtreſs in the Orders ſhe gave; but as ſoon as the Maid was gone, he offered theſe Objections: He informed her by what Accident he was obliged to lodge at Mr. Barefoot's, and that the Family were fitting up for him: That his ſtaying at her Houſe under theſe Circumſtances, would provoke the Cenſure of Town and Country, and therefore he could not ſtay whatever his Inclinations were; but his Reaſons not prevailing, he was forced to decide the Controverſy, by going to his Lodging; ſo that the Maid might ſwear true, when ſhe ſaid, he did not contradict her Miſtreſs's Orders. His Inferences from her Letters.

Then he called Witneſſes, to ſhew it was impoſſible he could be at the drowning of Mary Stout; becauſe he went away from her Houſe a Quarter before Eleven, and was at his Inn, the Glove and Dolphin, before the Clock ſtruck Eleven, and it would take up above half an Hour to go from Mrs. Stout's to the Place where ſhe was drowned, and return to the Glove Inn.——And calling Elizabeth Spurr as a Witneſs, ſhe teſtified, That he came into the Glove Inn juſt as the Clock ſtruck Eleven, and ſtaid there a Quarter of an Hour before he went to his Lodgings: This Evidence was confirmed by two other Servants of the Glove Inn. Evidence of the Time of Night he came to his Lodging.

Sir Thomas Lane and Sir William Aſhurſt teſtified, That they had walked over the Ground above-mentioned, and it took them up above half an Hour, a uſual walking Pace.

Mrs. Mince was then called as a Witneſs, to diſprove what Sarah Walker had depoſed, namely, That her Miſtreſs did not uſe to go out a Nights.

Mrs. Mince teſtified, That Sarah Walker told her, her Miſtreſs uſed to entertain Company in the Summer-houſe in the Night-time, unknown to her Mother: That ſhe uſed to go out a Nights, and take the Key with her, and make her Mother believe ſhe was gone to Bed; and that one Time ſhe went out at the Garden-Window when the Garden-Door was locked, and bid her not ſit up for her, ſhe would come in at her own Time; and what Time ſhe came, ſhe (the Maid) ſaid ſhe did not know, for ſhe was gone to Bed.

Then the Priſoner called Sir William Aſhurſt, Sir Thomas Lane, Mr. Cox, and Mr. Thompſon Witneſſes to Mr. Cowper's Character.

Thompſon to his Reputation, who all gave him a great Character; and Mr. Cox ſaid, he had lived by him in Southwark Eight or Nine Years, and knew him to be a Perſon of Integrity and Worth, and all the Neighbourhood coveted his Company; that he took him to have as much Honour and Honeſty as any Gentleman whatever, and of all Men he knew, he would be the laſt Man that he ſhould ſuſpect of ſuch a Fact as this: He believed nothing in the World could move him to entertain the leaſt Thought of ſo foul a Fact.

Marſon's Defence.

Here Mr. Marſon entered upon his Defence, and ſaid, Their Buſineſs at Hertford was this: Mr. Ellis Stevens being Clerk of the Papers, and Mr. Rogers Steward, of the King's-Bench, were obliged to wait upon the Lord Chief Juſtice out of Town, with the Marſhal of the King's-Bench; and on the Monday he went with them to the Lord Chief Juſtice's Houſe in Lincoln-Inn-Fields, from whence they all ſet out for Hertford; but he (Marſon) being an Attorney of the Borough Court, and having Buſineſs there that Day, when they came as far as Kingſland, returned back to Southwark, where he attended the Court as uſual, and about four ſet out again for Hertford; and on the Way, at Waltham-Croſs, he met his Acquaintance Mr. Hanks a Clergyman, who had been to attend the Chief Juſtice returning to London; but he prevailed on him to go back with him to Hertford, and they galloped every Step of the Way, becauſe Night was coming on, and it was about Eight o'Clock when they came to Hertford, and he might be in a Sweat with riding ſo hard; but not in ſuch a Sweat as the Witneſs teſtified: That meeting with their Friends Mr. Stevens, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Rudkin, and other Acquaintance of the Marſhal's at the Coffee-houſe, they went from thence to the Glove and Dolphin, where they ſtaid till about Eleven; and from thence, he and Mr Stevens, and Mr. Rogers went to Gurrey's, where they lodged, and drank three Bottles of Wine before they went to Bed, and had ſome jocular Converſation with their Landlord Gurrey: He believed Mr. Stevens might ask him if he knew Mrs Sarah Stout, and what ſort of Woman ſhe was; and he believed he might ſay, my Friend may be in with her: That Mr. Rogers alſo asked him (Marſon) What Money he had got that Day? meaning at the Borough Court, and he anſwered, 50*s.* to which Rogers replied, We have been here ſpending our Money, I think you ought to treat us? As to the Bundle mentioned, he knew of none, except a Pair of Sleeves and a Neckcloth.

Rogers's Defence.

Mr. Rogers, in his Defence, ſaid, They came down with the Marſhal of the King's-Bench, and not thinking Mr. Marſon would have come that Day, had not provided a Lodging for him: That they went from the Coffee-Houſe to the Tavern, as Mr. Marſon had related; and there they had ſome merry and open Diſcourſe of this Gentlewoman, but he never ſaw her, or heard her Name before ſhe was mentioned there.

Stevens.

Mr. Stevens gave the ſame Account of their going to Hertford.

The Judge demanding, If they did not talk of Mrs. Stout's Courting Days being over? they all proteſted, There was not one Word of it.

1699. 11 W. III.

Then they called Witneſſes, to ſhew the Occaſion of the Diſcourſe they had, in Relation to Mrs. Stout.

Their Witneſſes.

Mr. Hunt teſtified, That happening to be at the Old Devil Tavern, on Sunday Night before the laſt Hertford Aſſizes, with Mr. Marſon and 3 or 4 more of Clifford's-Inn, and there being a Diſcourſe of attending the Chief Juſtice out of Town, and of Mr. Marſhal's courting Mrs. Stout of Hertford, one ſaid, If you do go, pray enquire after Mr. Marſhal's Miſtreſs, and bring us an Account of her.

Mr. Foſter confirmed Mr. Hunt's Teſtimony, and added, That either Mr. Marſon or Mr. Stevens ſaid, They would do their Endeavour, and enquire after the Lady.

Mr. Hanks, the Clergyman above-mentioned, depoſed, That he met Mr. Marſon at Waltham-Croſs, and went back with him to Hertford, whither they came about ſeven or eight at Night; and having ſet up their Horſes, they went to the Coffee-Houſe, where was the Marſhal of the King's-Bench, the Gentlemen at the Bar, and Mr. Rudkin; and they went from thence to the Glove and Dolphin, where they ſtaid till about Eleven, and then he and Mr. Rudkin ſaw the three Gentlemen at the Bar to their Lodgings, and left them there.

Mr. Rudkin alſo depoſed, That he drank with the ſame Company at the Glove and Dolphin till after Ten, and then went with them to their Lodgings, and left them there.

Witneſſes to their Characters.

Then the Priſoners, Stevens, Rogers, and Marſon, called Mr. Cox, Major Lane, Sir Robert Auſten, Sir John Shaw, and ſeveral other Gentlemen of good Credit, to their Reputations, who ſaid, They were Men of Subſtance, Attorneys of good Buſineſs in the Marſhal's or Borough Courts, and had generally fair Characters: That they were Men who would not have been guilty of ſo foul a Fact, upon any Account.

A Reply to Mr. Cowper's Defence.

Here Mr. Jones, the King's Counſel, obſerved, That Mr. Cowper gave a different Evidence now, from that he gave before the Coroner; for then he ſaid, He never knew any Diſtraction, or Love-Fit, or any other Occaſion, that ſhould put the Deceaſed upon this extravagant Action; and now he would have the whole Scheme turn upon a Love-Fit: And John Maſon, being called as a Witneſs for the King, teſtified, That Mr. Cowper made Oath before the Coroner, That he did not know any thing that ſhould be the Occaſion of her Death; She was a very modeſt Woman.

Mr. Jones demanding, Whether they asked him, If he knew any Perſon ſhe was in Love with? Maſon anſwered, Mr. Cowper ſaid he knew but of one, and his Name was Marſhal, and Mr. Marſhal told him, he was always repulſed by her.

John Archer alſo depoſed, That Mr. Cowper being asked before the Coroner, If he knew any thing of the Occaſion of Mrs. Stout's Death? he anſwered, He knew nothing of it.

1699. 11 W. III.

Here one of the Jurymen desired they might withdraw; but the Judge told him, They must make an End first.

Then Mr. Jones said, The Friends of the Deceased would call some Witnesses to her Reputation; and he believed the whole Town could attest, That she was a Woman of a good Reputation: Indeed the Prisoners had produced some Letters without a Name, but if they insisted on any thing against her Reputation, they must call Witnesses.

Judge Hatsel answered, He believed no body disputed that she might be a virtuous Woman, and her Brains might be turned by her Passion, or some Distemper: And then he proceeded to direct the Jury in the following Manner.

The Judge's Directions to the Jury.

Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard a very long Evidence; I am sure that you cannot expect that I should sum it up fully, but I will take Notice of some Things to you, that I think are most material; and if I omit any thing that is material, I would desire Mr. Jones (that is Counsel for the King) and Mr. Cowper, to put me in mind of it.

The Indictment against the Prisoners at the Bar is for a very great Crime, it is for Murder, which is one of the most horrid of all Crimes. You are to consider, first, what Evidence you have heard to prove it; and though there be no direct Proof, you are to consider what is Circumstantial. They do begin with Sarah Walker, who was Mrs. Sarah Stout's Maid, and she tells you, That Mr. Cowper, when he came to this Town upon Monday the 13th of March last, came to Mrs. Stout's House and dined there, and went away about Four of the Clock in the Afternoon; but she tells you, that the Friday before, there came a Letter from Mr. Cowper's Wife to Mrs. Stout, to let her know that Mr. Cowper would come and lodge at their House at Hertford, at the Assizes; so that when he came, she thought that he had intended to have done according to that Letter. She saith, That after Dinner Mr. Cowper went away, and came again at Nine at Night, and there he supped, he was desired so to do (and indeed had been invited to Dinner also that Day): And she doth say, That after Supper there was a Fire made in his Chamber (for this young Gentlewoman, Mrs. Stout, pressed him to lie at their House) and she ordered his Maid to warm his Bed; and I believe, says she, Mr. Cowper heard her say so, for he was nearer to her than I, at that Time; and he doth not deny but that he heard it: She says, That accordingly she went up to warm his Bed, and having stayed there a-while, she heard the Door clap; and when she came down into the Parlour, where she had left them, they were both gone; and that she could not tell what the Meaning of it was; and they waited for her all Night, old Mrs. Stout and this Maid, and she did not come in all Night, nor was afterwards seen alive; but Mr. Cowper was the last Person seen in her Company.

The other Witnesses that came afterwards, speak concerning the finding of the Body in the River, and tell you in what Posture it was. I shall not undertake to give you the Particulars of their Evidence, but they tell you, She lay on her Right Side, the one Arm up even with the Surface of the Water, and her Body under the Water; but some of her Cloaths were above the Water, particularly one says, the Ruffles of her Left Arm were above the Water: You have heard also what the Doctors and Surgeons said on the one Side and the other, concerning the Swimming and Sinking of dead Bodies in the Water; but I can find no Certainty in it, and I leave it to your Consideration.

Another Circumstance they build on, and which seems to be material, is, of her Belly being lank, and that there was no Swelling; whereas, say they, when a Person is drowned, there is a great deal of Water goes in and makes the Belly to swell; but here was no Swelling that Morning she was taken out, and no Water came out of her Mouth and Nostrils, only a little Froth there was, and her Belly was lank: But, say they on the other Side, that may very well be; for, perhaps, she might be choaked immediately, as soon as she was in the Water; and, say they, you may not wonder at that, for if she went to drown herself, she would endeavour to be choaked as soon as she could; for those Persons that are drowned against their own Consent, do swallow a great deal of Water; but those that drown themselves, do not swallow much Water, for they are choaked immediately by the Water going into the Windpipe, that we commonly call, Going the wrong Way. The Doctors and Surgeons have talked a great deal to this Purpose, and of the Waters going into the Lungs or the Thorax; but unless you have more Skill in Anatomy than I, you will not be much edified by it; I acknowledge I never studied Anatomy, but I perceive that the Doctors do differ in their Notions about these things: But as to Matter of Fact, it is agreed to by all the Witnesses for the King, that her Body was lank, her Belly was thin, and there was no Sign of any Water to be in it. They on the other Side tell you, That her Stays were on, and she was strait-laced, and that might occasion her Belly's being so small, and hinder the Water from going in.

Gentlemen, I was very much puzzled in my Thoughts, and was at a Loss to find out what Inducement there could be to draw in Mr. Cowper, or these three other Gentlemen, to commit such a horrid, barbarous Murder: And on the other Hand, I could not imagine what there should be, to induce this Gentlewoman, a Person of a plentiful Fortune, and a very sober good Reputation, to destroy herself.

Now, Gentlemen, I must confess, the Evidence that the Defendants have given by these Letters, if you believe them to be this Gentlewoman's Hand Writing, do seem to fortify all that Mr. Cowper's Witnesses have said, concerning her being Melancholy; it might be a Love-Distraction, and she might have been a virtuous Woman for all that; for it might be a Distemper which came upon her, and turned her Brains, and discomposed her Mind,

Mind; and then no Wonder at her writing thus, in a Manner different from the reſt of the Actions of her Life. Gentlemen, you are to conſider and weigh the Evidence, and I will not trouble you any more about that Matter.

As to theſe three other Gentlemen, that came here to this Town at the Time of the laſt Aſſizes, what there is againſt them you have heard: They talked at their Lodging at a ſtrange Rate, concerning this Mrs. Sarah Stout, ſaying, Her Buſineſs was done, and that there was an End of her Courting-Days, and that a Friend of theirs was even with her by this Time. What you can make of it, That I muſt leave to you, but they were very ſtrange Expreſſions; and you are to judge whether they were ſpoken in Jeſt, as they pretend, or in Earneſt. There was a Cord found in the Room, and a Bundle ſeen there, but I know not what to make of it. As to Mrs Stout, there was no Sign of any Circle about her Neck, which, as they ſay, muſt have been, if ſhe had been ſtrangled: Some Spots there were, but it is ſaid, poſſibly thoſe might have been occaſioned by rubbing againſt ſome Piles or Stakes in the River. Truly, Gentlemen, theſe three Men, by their Talking, have given great Cauſe of Suſpicion; but whether they or Mr. Cowper are guilty or no, That you are to determine. I am ſenſible I have omitted many Things, but I am a little faint, and cannot repeat any more of the Evidence.

All the Priſoners acquitted.

Then the Jury withdrawing for about half an Hour, returned with their Verdict, That neither Mr. Cowper, or any one of the other three Priſoners were Guilty: And thereupon they were all diſcharged.

An Appeal brought againſt Mr Cowper, and his Friends.

Mr. Spencer Cowper, and his three Friends, having been acquitted at the Summer Aſſizes at Hertford, in the Year 1699, as is related already, a Writ of Appeal was ſued out, the Beginning of March following, againſt the ſaid Cowper, Marſon, Stevens, and Rogers, at the Suit of Henry Stout, (Heir at Law of the deceaſed Sarah Stout) then about ten Years of Age; and Mrs. Mary Stout, Mother of the deceaſed, was on the 13th of April following, admitted Guardian to the Apellant, in order to proſecute the ſaid Suit.

The Under-Sheriff of Hertford, Boſtock Toller, not returning the Writ, was ſerved with ſeveral Rules in Eaſter Term by Mrs. Stout the Guardian, to compel him to make a Return: At length Mr. Toller attended the Court of King's-Bench, and made Affidavit, That upon the 16th of that Inſtant April, (being the Day after the Return of the Writ, and three Days after Mrs. Mary Stout was admitted Guardian to the Appellant), he delivered the Writ into the Infant's Hands.

The Writ given to a Child, by the Sheriff, and burnt.

The Court of King's-Bench hereupon ordered Toller to be examined upon Interrogatories, who in Juſtification of himſelf, declared, That the Appellant, with his Mother, his Uncle, and Aunt, came to him, and delivered him a Note from William Cowper, Eſq; the Brother of Spencer, informing him, that the Infant who attended him, was the Plaintiff in the Appeal, and one of the Women his Mother, and that, at their Requeſt, he delivered the Writ to the Infant; that he afterwards deſired the Infant and his Mother to give him the Writ back again, but they declared, The Infant, with Advice, had burnt the Writ.

1699. 11 W. III.

The Court of King's-Bench hereupon committed the ſaid Toller, and ſet a Fine of two hundred Marks upon him. And Mrs. Stout the Guardian, petitioned the Lord Keeper for a new Writ of Appeal, the Time (the Year and Day) being elapſed for ſuing out a Writ of Courſe; but her Petition was rejected.

The Sheriff fined.

A new Writ refuſed.

Mrs. Stout, the Guardian, afterwards drew up her Caſe, and preſented it to the Members of the Commons, at the Door of the Houſe, as I am informed, in hopes of obtaining an Act to renew the Writ of Appeal; but they ſaid, they would not bring in a Bill on purpoſe to try Mr. Cowper and his Friends again, after they had been fairly acquitted, and ſo the Matter was entirely dropped; only both Parties, in printed Papers, appealed to the World, as to the Juſtice of their reſpective Caſes.

Before I make any Obſervations of my own, therefore, on theſe Proceedings, I ſhall ſhew what Reflections the Parties themſelves made on them. Spencer Cowper and his three Friends obſerve, That they were all four in good Employments, and eaſy in their Circumſtances; and it was not credible, therefore, they ſhould commit ſo foul a Crime, eſpecially when they could have no Intereſt to ſerve, or paſſion to gratify, by doing it: For though it was at firſt reported, that Mr. Cowper did it for the Sake of Gain, this was not at all inſiſted on by the Proſecutors at the Trial, though he challenged them to ſhew in what Reſpect he could be a Gainer by this Gentlewoman's Death.

The Caſe ſtated by Spencer Cowper.

Nor was there, indeed, any Proof of a Murder being committed by any one; for the Coroner's Inqueſt, having a freſh View of the Body, on the Day it was found, after they had conſulted two Surgeons and a Midwife, gave a Verdict, that the deceaſed drowned herſelf, being Non compos; and nothing but the Zeal of the Quakers for the Reputation of their Sect, and to ſhew they were not liable to the Infirmities of the reſt of the World, aſſiſted by the Heat of a Faction, could ever have ſtired up this Proſecution, that had made ſo much Noiſe in the World.

That on the Day the Corps of the Deceaſed was found, Mr. Cowper was examined by the Coroner's Inqueſt, and then gave an exact Account of every Circumſtance which had ſince been proved againſt him: That about a Month after, all the ſaid four Gentlemen were ſeverally ſent for, and readily came, to the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, by whom they were examined; and the Truih of what they atteſted before him had never been contradicted or falſified, but all proved and made good at their Trial.

That after this Examination they were diſmiſſed without Bail, and might have fled, if they had been conſcious of any Guilt. —— That upon ſome Suggeſtions of the Proſecutors, they were examined a ſecond Time, and admitted to Bail: But upon the taking up and opening the Deceaſed, ſix Weeks after her Death, and ſome Informations and Certificates of thoſe that viewed the Corps, Mr. Cowper and Mr. Marſon were committed, and the other two ſtill continued upon Bail.

That the Proſecutors procured thoſe Informations and Certificates, by applying themſelves

That Mr. Marſon was afterwards admitted to Bail; but Mr. Cowper remained in Priſon all Trinity Term, 1699, and Part of the Vacation following, for the Space of two Months, till the Aſſizes at Hertford drew near, and then he ſued out a Writ for his Removal from London to be tried at Hertford, fearing his Enemies deſigned to keep him in Jail, or at leaſt to continue the Slander and Proſecution as long as they could. That the Proſecution was carried on againſt them with all imaginable Induſtry and Artifice, an Election Intereſt being thought in a great Meaſure to depend on the Succeſs of it: However, their Innocence was ſo manifeſt, that they were all acquitted on their Trial.

That the Proſecutors, to be further vexatious, and continue the Calumny, though they had nothing to object to the Fairneſs of the Trial, or any new Evidence to give, ſought for an Heir Male, in order to bring an Appeal, and try them again; and though they had found out the Infant, Henry Stout, in the ſame long Vacation 1699, and might have ſued out the Appeal next Term; they did not get the Writ of Appeal ſealed, till the very laſt Seal within the Year after the Deceaſed was drowned, and not above three or four Days before the End of the Year; which Delay, they ſuggeſt, was purely malicious, and deſigned merely to continue the Calumny.

That the Writ was at laſt ſued out, without either the Knowledge of the Plaintiff himſelf, or of his Mother (his Guardian by Nature), without whoſe Approbation the Writ ought not to have been ſued out by Law, nor the Infant engaged in ſuch a Proſecution for Blood.

That as ſoon as the Infant and his Mother underſtood what was done, and that the Suit was only carried on for Revenge, they declared their Diſlike of the Proceeding, and went with an Uncle and Aunt of the Infant's, to Mr. Toller, the Under-Sheriff, and demanded the Writ, tendering him his Fee for the Return thereof, which he (not knowing then of any Guardian aſſigned the Infant) delivered to them.

And when the Under-Sheriff was examined upon Interrogatories, how far the Appellees (Spencer Cowper and his three Friends) were concerned in getting the Writ from the Sheriff, the ſaid Sheriff, upon Oath, denied all Correſpondence with the Appellees, or any on their Behalf, touching the Delivery of the ſaid Writ, and denied he had any Reward, or Promiſe of Reward, or had any Security given to indemnify him for doing it; and that he delivered the Writ and Return to the Appellant and his Friends, as he believed it was fair and lawful for him to do, and for no other Reaſon whatever.

That Mrs. Mary Stout, the Mother of the Deceaſed, preferred a Petition to the Lord Keeper for a new Writ of Appeal; and the Infant (the Appellant) and his Mother preferred another Petition to the Lord Keeper, diſowning the former Writ, as iſſued out without their Conſent or Approbation, and deſiring that no new Writ might be iſſued out in the Infant's Name. And the Lord Keeper, being aſſiſted by the Maſter of the Rolls, and ſeveral of the Judges, having heard both Parties, by the reſpective Counſel, were unanimouſly of Opinion, 1699. 11W. III.

1. That the Chancery had Power to relieve in ſuch a Caſe, and to renew the Writ, if it were juſt ſo to do.

2. That, in this Caſe, it was not juſt or reaſonable.

And the Reaſons inſiſted on by Mr. Cowper's Counſel, to maintain the laſt Point, were, 1. That the Writ was ſued out clandeſtinely and fraudulently, without the Conſent of the Appellant, or his next Friend; and no Guardian aſſigned had any Thing to do with it, till the Writ was pending.

2. Becauſe it was deferred two Terms after the Acquittal of Mr. Cowper, &c. and not taken out till about four Days within the End of the Year; which ſhewed they did not deſign Juſtice, but to ſpin out the Calumny as long as they could, maliciouſly, and vexatiouſly.

3. That an Acquittal on an Indictment was a Bar to an Appeal at Common Law; and though that Bar was taken away by the Statute of Hen. VII. which let in the Appeal within the Year and Day, leſt Perſons ſhould procure themſelves to be fraudulently indicted and acquitted on faint Proſecutions; and as this Proſecution was far from being a faint one, the Appellees were within the Reaſon and Equity of that Plea; and the rather, for that Mrs. Stout, the Mother of the Deceaſed, who would proſecute the Appeal, was the principal Proſecutor on the Indictment, and did it with all imaginable Induſtry, aſſiſted by the united Intereſt of the Quakers, and a prejudiced Party in the Town of Hertford, diſobliged on the Score of Elections; and four Appeals have not been favoured ſince the Statute of Hen. VII. except in Caſes of Conviction, and Pardon obtained by Surprize, or after ſome freſh Diſcovery by additional Evidence, which was not pretended to in this Caſe.

The Caſe ſtated by Mrs. Stout.

In Anſwer to what Mr. Cowper and his Friends had advanced in Relation to the Appeal, Mrs. Mary Stout, the Mother of the Deceaſed, and her Party anſwered, That the ſaid Writ of Appeal being ſued out within the Year, ſhe cauſed it to be delivered to Boſtock Toller, the Under-Sheriff of the County of Hertford, that he might apprehend the Appellees mentioned in the Writ; and fearing he might be remiſs in it, ſhe ſent to him to know what he had done, Whether he had executed the ſame, or would return, the Parties were not to be found? To which Toller anſwered, Mrs. Stout is a very buſy, uneaſy Woman; but, however, when the Writ is out, I will make ſuch Return thereof as the Law directs.

That on the 13th of April the ſaid Mrs. Stout was admitted Guardian to the Appellant; and on the 15th, being the firſt Day after Eaſter Term, ſhe appeared perſonally in the Court of King's-Bench, in order to arraign the Appellees; but the Sheriff had not returned the Writ.

Whereupon the Court was moved next Day, in Behalf of Mrs. Stout, That a ſhort Day might be given the Sheriff, peremptorily to make his Return: Whereupon it was ſuggeſted, that no Writ of Appeal was left with Mr. Toller, whereby Mrs. Stout loſt the Benefit of her Motion, and was forced next Day to get an Affidavit of the Delivery of the Writ; and moved again for 1699. 11W. III. a Rule to compel him to appear and make a Return of the Writ; which Rule being ſerved upon Toller, he appeared, and acknowledged the Receipt of the the Writ; but made Oath he delivered the Writ into the Infant's Hand on the 16th of April, being the Day after the Writ was returnable, and three Days after Mrs. Stout was admitted Guardian to the Appellant.

Whereupon the Court ordered Toller to be examined upon Interrogatories, concerning the Delivery of the Writ; but Mrs. Stout was forced to be at the Charge of two or three Orders, before he would come to be examined: And then he was pleaſed to own the Receipt of the Writ of Appeal; and that he knew Mrs. Stout was Guardian, and yet delivered the Writ to the Infant and his Mother, (as related above).

In this Examination alſo, Toller acknowledged, That Mr. William Cowper, Brother of Spencer, ſent him a Letter, to know whether any Writ of Appeal was come to his Hands, againſt his Brother Spencer; and he (Toller) informed him, there was, and ſent him the Contents of the ſaid Writ: And, that he gave Spencer the like Information; whereby it appeared, there was a Correſpondence between Toller and the Cowper's: Of which the Court of King's-Bench were ſo ſenſible, that he was fined 200 Marks. But this giving Mrs. Stout no Satisfaction for the Blood of her Daughter, ſhe petitioned the Lord Keeper, as above related, for a new Writ: But the Matter being heard before him, and no poſitive Proof appearing then, that any of the Appellees were privy to the Deſtruction of the firſt Writ, it was not thought reaſonable to grant a new Writ; and Mrs. Stout's Petition was, chiefly for that Reaſon, rejected: But could ſhe have imagined, all the Appellees would have pretended Ignorance, as to the Deſtruction of the Writ; and that there was any Difference between the Writs being loſt by Accident or Deſign, ſhe could have informed the Court of a more particular Intelligence, concerning the Deſtruction of the Writ, and by whoſe Order it was done, and at whoſe Chamber it was burnt; which would ſufficiently evince, whether the Appellees were privy to the Deſtruction of it.

And, whereas it had been reported, that this Proſecution was merely vexatious, begun by a Body of Quakers, and eſpouſed by a Faction at Hertford, againſt the Cowper's; every one ought to conſider, if it was their own Caſe, to have an only Child murdered, and her Reputation rendered infamous to Poſterity; Whether Nature and Duty would not have obliged them to uſe all poſſible Means to diſcover the Cauſe thereof? And whether they would not think it hard to have their Endeavours reflected on, and their Diligence cenſured, as the Effect of Party-Malice?

It had been objected alſo, That the proſecuting this Writ, had been maliciouſly delayed, to keep the Appellees in an uneaſy Suſpence: To which Mrs. Stout anſwered, That ſhe ſhould have ſued out the Writ ſooner, but ſhe could not find out the proper Perſon to make Appellant, though the moſt diligent Search was made for near half a Year; but, the very next Day ſhe was prepared to make out his Pedigree, ſhe cauſed the Writ of Appeal to be ſued out; ſo that it was her Misfortune, not her Fault, that there was ſo long a Delay. 1699. 11W. III.

And though it was commonly urged, as a ſtrong Argument againſt bringing the Appellees to a ſecond Trial, that ſhe had no new Evidence againſt them; ſhe aſſured them, ſhe had more material Evidence than had been yet made publick; and ſhe believed the Appellees did not care to ſtand the Teſt of it: Or why ſhould there be ſo vigorous an Oppoſition againſt ſo plain an Act of Juſtice? If nothing further could be proved againſt them, as they inſinuated, it would have been much more for their Reputation, to have undergone a ſecond Trial, than to have meanly eluded and undermined the Courſe of Juſtice, by the Deſtruction of the Writ of Appeal.

Then Mrs. Stout's Friends proceed to make ſome Reflections on the Trial: And, firſt, it is obſerved, That none of the Phyſicians that appeared for Mr. Cowper, pretended to affirm, That a drowned Body would have no Water in it; they only ſaid, A very little would drown a Perſon; but in this Corps there was none at all.

And being asked, If Water would not have putrified the Parts in ſix Weeks Time, none of them directly denied it; but ſaid, The Stomach would be leſs putrified than the Lungs: But here neither Stomach or Lungs were putrified.

That the Difference made between a Perſon's being drowned by Accident and Deſign, was ridiculous; becauſe it was certain, with what Deſign ſoever a Man might go into the Water, before he was half dead, he would be deprived of his Senſes; and how he would govern himſelf then, might eaſily be determined.

And from theſe and other Reaſons, they conclude, ſhe was not drowned: They ſuppoſe rather, ſhe was knocked down, by a Blow on her Left Ear, from a large Settlement of Blood there; and after ſhe was down, they think it probable, ſhe was ſtrangled by the Gripe of a ſtrong Hand, from the Stagnation of Blood on both Sides of her Neck, under her Ears.

The Circumſtances that induced them to believe, ſhe was not acceſſary to her own Death, were, her being found without her Gown or Nightrail, which were probably torn off in the Scuffle: And when her Gown was found about a Week before the Trial, it appeared to be torn all to Rags, and her Nightrail was never found: 2. From her floating in the Water, ſo ſoon as no drowned Body ever did: 3. Becauſe her Belly was not ſwollen: 4. Becauſe no Water came out of her: 5. Becauſe her inward Parts were not putrified (though other Parts that had been injured were); which would have been, forty-ſix Days after her Death, if there had been any Water in them: 6. From the ſeveral Settlings of Blood, which was uſual in drowned Perſons: 8. From what was ſworn againſt Marſon, and the other two, at the Trial, as that one of them ſaid, She has turned me off; but a Friend of mine is even with her by this Time: Her Buſineſs is done; her Courting-Days are over, &c. And Marſon's pulling out Money, and ſwearing he would ſpend it all for Joy the Buſineſs was done: 9. From the Sentiments ments of the Grand Jury; who, after a nice Examination, were of Opinion, ſhe was murdered, as were ſeveral of the Petit Jury; but by whom they could not tell: 10. From Mr. Cowper's ſwearing before the Coroner, directly contrary to what he made his Defence at the Trial.

They are poſitive alſo, that the Letters produced in Court were not genuine, becauſe they were not at all ſuitable to her Character; and obſerve, That if the Witneſſes then in Court, had been examined to her Reputation, a great deal of that Dirt that had been thrown upon her, would have been wiped off. And what Reluctance ſoever Mr. Cowper pretended to expoſe her Weakneſs, and produce her Letters; he acknowledged, he had ſhewn thoſe Letters to Mr. Marſhall a repulſed Lover, and to his Brother, before her Death, and afterwards printed and publiſhed them.

And what made it very improbable ſhe was acceſſary to her own Death, was, That the very Evening before her Corps was found, ſhe deſired a young Gentlewoman of the Town to lie with her all Night; and when ſhe refuſed, engaged her however to dine with her the next Day, telling her what they ſhould have for Dinner.

That if the Deceaſed had been for ſeveral Years ſo fond of this Joſeph, it was much his Wife ſhould diſcover nothing of it; but importune her frequently to come to London, that ſhe might enjoy her dear Company: Nor was it probable, if the Deceaſed was ſo furiouſly in Love, ſhe would have rejected the Invitation; but would have choſen to have reſided in Town, where ſhe might have enjoyed him with greater Privacy.

As to there being no Proof at the Trial, of her Relations miſſing any of her Money; the Reaſon of this was, becauſe thoſe who could have atteſted it, and ſpeak materially on that Head, were Quakers, and were not ſuffered to give Evidence, becauſe they ſcrupled taking an Oath: But that, in Truth, her Relations wanted 1000 Pounds of her Original Fortune, beſides the Improvements ſhe had made of it: And they inſinuate, that ſhe truſted Mr. Cowper with a thouſand Pounds to put out for her ſeparate Uſe, in caſe ſhe married, which was never heard of: To which Mr. Cowper's Friends replied, That this was but a Say-ſo; and defied them to make any Manner of Proof of it.

Mr. Cowper's Reply.

Mr. Cowper's Friends alſo made a great Jeſt of that Piece of Evidence, which the Dimſdales gave, to prove Sarah Stout was a Virgin, namely, That they found the Uterus perfectly free and empty, and of the natural Figure and Magnitude uſually in Virgins: This they obſerve, cannot amount to a Proof, ſhe was a Virgin: All that could be inferred from it, was only, that ſhe had not conceived; and if it was poſſible for a Woman in Coitu, to miſs of Conception, the Woman might, notwithſtanding the Carnal Contact, retain the natural Figure uſually in Virgins; and all this implied no more than a bare Probability, that ſhe had not known Man: They never heard before, that the Figure and Magnitude of the Womb, were numbered amongſt the indubitable Marks of Virginity; and as to the State of the Vagina, the Myrtiform Caruncles, and Hymen, there was not a Word ſaid of them; and if there had, it would only have furniſhed Matter of Deriſion, the Body having been ſo long interred: And therefore, for any thing in the Surgeons Affidavit, ſhe might be no Virgin; though Charity might induce them to hope ſhe was.

1699. 11W.III.

Thus we find the reſpective Parties differing very widely in their Conjectures, concerning Sarah Stout's Death, and the Innocence of Spencer Cowper. Had I been upon his Jury, I muſt confeſs, I ſhould have acquitted him, of murdering her by his own Hands, or the Hands of his three Friends, Rogers, Stevens, and Marſon. I can never believe a Man of Mr. Cowper's Figure and Circumſtances in the World, would dare to communicate a Secret of this Nature to three People, and deſire them to be Actors in the Tragedy; which muſt have ruined his Character and Fortune in the World, if any of them had diſcovered the wicked Propoſal, though the Fact had never been committed: Neither can I imagine, that three Men in their Circumſtances, would ever have ſubmitted to become Cut-throats and Aſſaſſins, for all they could expect from him; and much leſs for ſo trifling a Reward, as they were ſuppoſed to have.

Remarks on the Trial of Spencer Cowper, &c.

On the other Hand, her being found floating in the River without her Gown, and no Water in the Corps, and her Gown afterwards found torn in Pieces, are ſtrong Circumſtances to induce one to think ſhe was not drowned, either by herſelf or others, but came by her Death ſome other Way: However, as neither Mr. Cowper or his three Friends, could be ſuppoſed to have been the immediate Authors of her Death, and no other Perſon was charged with it, the Jury could not do otherwiſe than find them Not guilty; eſpecially if we conſider, there was no Time when they could be ſuppoſed to commit the Fact, being all in their Lodgings at eleven at Night, the very Inſtant it muſt have been done, if done at all by them; much ſooner it could not be done, becauſe Mr. Cowper went from her Houſe at a Quarter before eleven, and was at his Inn when the Clock ſtruck eleven, ſo that there was but one Quarter of an Hour, in which it was poſſible they could act that Tragedy in; and conſidering the Diſtance of the Places, and the Buſineſs to be tranſacted, this to me ſeems impoſſible.

It has been objected indeed, That if Mr. Cowper had been innocent, he would not clandeſtinely have procured the Writ of Appeal to be deſtroyed, and ſo ſtrenuouſly have oppoſed the iſſuing out of another; but I am apt to think, any Man in the like Circumſtances, would have done the ſame, and have avoided a ſecond Trial, if he could; eſpecially conſidering the whole Body of Quakers ſupported and countenanced the Proſecution againſt him, and it was impoſſible to divine, how another Judge and Jury might have taken the Matter. The World, they knew, were divided in their Opinions; and if two or three reſolute Men, who were inclined to have thought him guilty, had been upon the next Jury, both his Life and Reputation would have been in a great deal of Danger, however satisfied the reſt of the Jury might be of his Innocence: And though the Intereſt of the Cowper's was conſiderable enough to have obtained a Pardon, where a Pardon would have availed them; yet in the Caſe of an Appeal, no Pardon can be granted; and, if it might, this would not have reſtored his Character, after a Conviction. As it was, Mr. Cowper does not ſeem to have ſuffered much in his Circumſtances by this foul Charge, for he became one of the moſt eminent Council at the Bar, was advanced to be Chief Juſtice of Cheſter, and afterwards conſtituted a Judge of the Common Pleas, in which Poſt he died in the Reign of King George II. few Lawyers obtaining a better Reputation in all Reſpects than he enjoyed, for the Space of thirty Years and upwards, after this unhappy Accident, (ſave in the Matter of Uriah the Hittite). Thus we ſee what Trouble and Hazard frequently attends Criminal Pleaſures! Though Men may perſuade themſelves, and the unfortunate Creatures they abuſe, that ſuch Liberties are allowed to Chriſtians as well as Mahometans; yet, as the Generality of Chriſtians will ſcarce ever be of that Mind, no Man will ever advance his Reputation by venturing on forbidden Embraces in a Chriſtian Country: Theſe will caſt a Blemiſh on all his Actions, how plauſible ſoever, and remain an eternal Blot upon his Memory.

Butler's Trial.

THIS being no more than an ordinary Trial for a Cheat, I ſhall but juſt mention the Caſe.

The Caſe.

The Indictment charges, That the ſaid Mary Butler, intending to put a Cheat upon Sir Robert Clayton, Knight and Alderman of London, counterfeited a Bond from Sir Robert for the Payment of 20,000 l. to her, after his Deceaſe; and that ſhe publiſhed the ſaid Writing as Sir Robert Clayton's Deed; of which ſhe was convicted, and ſentenced to pay a Fine of five hundred Pounds to the King, and to be impriſoned till ſhe paid it.

Proceedings in the Duke of Norfolk's Divorce; which were begun in the Year 1691——and continued in ſeveral Courts, to the Year 1700. 12 W. III.

1700. 12W.III.

Duke of Norfolk's Divorce.

THIS being no State Matter, I ſhall only give a ſhort Abſtract of the Caſe; and the rather becauſe theſe Proceedings are very defective in the Trials at large.

Proceedings before the Lords.

On the 7th of January, 1691. a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Lords, to diſſolve the Marriage of Henry Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marſhal of England, with the Lady Mary Mordant, and to enable him to marry again; for that the ſaid Lady had been guilty of Adultery.

Whereupon the Dutcheſs petitioned to be heard by her Counſel againſt the ſaid Bill, and that the Duke might be more particular in his Charge: And the Duke thereupon ſet forth, that ſhe had committed Adultery with Sir John Germaine, at Whitehall and Windſor, in the Months of June, July, and Auguſt, in the Year 1685; and during ſeveral other Months, at the Pariſh of St. Margaret's Weſtminſter, and at the Pariſh of Lambeth in Surry, in the Years 1690, and 1691.

The Dutcheſs, in her Anſwer, denied the Charge; and recriminated, That her Husband, the Duke, was guilty of Adultery, and had continued that Courſe of Life for ten Years; and therefore could, not by Law, ſue a Divorce againſt her for that Crime, if ſhe had been guilty of it.

The Peers afterwards, hearing the Counſel and Evidence on both Sides, and having debated the Matter among themſelves, threw out the Bill upon the ſecond reading.

An Action againſt Sir John Germaine.

The Duke afterwards, in the Year 1692, brought an Action againſt Sir John Germaine; and, in his Declaration, charges him with enticing away his Dutcheſs, and living in Adultery with her; which was tried in the Court of King's-Bench, in Michaelmas Term the ſame Year, and the Jury gave a Verdict for the Plaintiff; but no more than 100 Marks Damages, though the Duke had laid his Damages at 100,000 l. However, the Duke having now proved the Fact in a Court of Law, exhibited a Divorce, in the Houſe of Peers, 1699, in which he met with Succeſs: The Bill paſſed both Houſes, and received the Royal Aſſent.

This Act recites, That Henry Duke of Norfolk, and Earl Marſhal of England, did, ſome Years before, marry the Lady Mary Mordant; and that ſhe had, for divers Years, lived in Separation from him, and had unlawful Familiarity, and adulterous Converſation with Sir John Germaine, Bart. That ſhe was guilty of Adultery on her Part, and had broken the Bond of Matrimony: And foraſmuch as the 1696. 12W.III. Duke had no Iſſue, nor could hope for any but ſpurious Iſſue, to ſucceed him in Honour and Eſtate, unleſs the ſaid Marriage was declared void by Act of Parliament, and he was enabled to marry again, he prays, that the ſaid Bond of Matrimony be, and it is thereby enacted and declared to be, diſſolved, vacated, and made void, to all Intents and Purpoſes whatſoever; and that it ſhall be lawful for the ſaid Duke to contract Matrimony with any other Woman, or Women, as if the ſaid Lady Mary were naturally dead; and that all and every the Children, born in ſuch Matrimony, ſhall be deemed born in lawful Wedlock, and inherit the Honours and Eſtate of the ſaid Duke, according to the Courſe of Inheritances within this Realm. And it was enacted, That the ſaid Lady Mary ſhould be barred and excluded all Dower and Thirds in the ſaid Honours, Lands, and Hereditaments, of the ſaid Duke; and that, all Conveyances, Jointures, and Settlements made by his Grace, or his Anceſtors, for the Uſe and Benefit of the ſaid Lady Mary, or the Iſſue of her Body, ſhould be utterly void: And alſo, that all Limitations and Creations, of any Uſe, and Eſtate, Power, or Truſt, made by the Anceſtors of the ſaid Lady Mary, to or for the Uſe or Benefit of the ſaid Duke, his Heirs or Aſſigns, out of any of the Lands or Hereditaments of any of the Anceſtors of the ſaid Lady Mary, ſhould be void. 1700. 12W.III. And it was further enacted, That the ſaid Duke, his Heirs, Executors, or Adminiſtrators, ſhould, before the 25th of March, 1701, pay unto the ſaid Lady Mary, or her Aſſigns, the Sum of 10,000 l. which was her Marriage Portion; and, in Default of Payment thereof, the ſaid Lady Mary ſhould be entitled to ſuch Jointure, and other Advantages, as ſhe might have claimed by Virtue of her Marriage Settlement, dated the 13th Day of June, 1677; and by Virtue of the Agreements contained in certain Articles, dated the 28th of April, 1694; and alſo ſhould enjoy, during the joint Lives of the ſaid Duke and Dutcheſs, 500 l. per Annum, by Virtue of a Quadrupartite Indenture, made the 15th of June, 1694: And in ſuch Caſe, the ſaid Duke, his Heirs, &c. ſhould be diſcharged from the Payment of the ſaid 10,000 l.; but on Payment of the ſaid 10,000 l. the ſaid Lady Mary ſhould be wholly barred and excluded of her ſaid Jointure, and of all other Advantages out of the Real and Perſonal Eſtate of the ſaid Duke.

Remark. Notwithſtanding the Duke carried his Point, and obtained a Law on Purpoſe to divorce him from the Dutcheſs, and impower him to marry again, he never did marry, or leave any lawful Iſſue, which were made the principal Inducement for his obtaining it.

1701. 13W.III. Kidd's Trial for Murder.

The Trial of Captain WILLIAM KIDD, for Murder, at the Admiralty Seſſions, held at the Old-Baily, London, the 8th of May, 1701, 13 W. III.

1701. 13W.III.

THE Caſe was thus: Captain Kidd was Commander of the Ship called the Adventure-Galley, and William Moore, deceaſed, was Gunner of the ſaid Ship; and while Kidd was cruiſing upon the Coaſt of Malabar, in the Eaſt-Indies, he and his ſaid Gunner had ſome Diſcourſe about taking a Ship called, The Loyal Captain; and, among other Things, Kidd ſaid to the Gunner, How could you have put me into a Way, to take that Ship and be clear? The Gunner anſwering, He ſaid no ſuch Thing, Kidd replied, He was a louſy Dog: The Gunner ſaid, If I am ſo, you have made me ſo: You have ruined me, and a great many others. Whereupon Captain Kidd ſaid, Have I ruined you, you Dog? and taking up a Bucket, hooped with Iron, ſtruck the Gunner with it on the right Side of his Head, and broke his Skull, and the Gunner died the next Day; which being plainly proved by ſeveral Witneſſes, the Jury found him Guilty. The Court proceeded afterwards to try the Captain, and nine of his Crew, for Piracy, on five ſeveral Indictments. As the ſending out Captain Kidd on this Expedition, which was made one Ground of an Impeachment againſt ſeveral great Men in the Adminiſtration the ſame Year, I ſhall enlarge the more on theſe Trials of Captain Kidd and his Accomplices for Piracy, than I have done on ſome others of the like Nature.

The Evidence opened.

The

1701. 13W. III. Trials of Kidd, &c. for Piracy.

The Trial of Captain WILLIAM KIDD, NICHOLAS CHURCHILL, JAMES HOWE, ROBERT LAMLEY, WILLIAM JENKINS, GABRIEL LOFFE, HUGH PARROT, RICHARD BARLICORN, ABEL OWENS, and DARBY MULLINS, for Piracy, at the Admiralty Seſſions, held at the Old-Baily, London, on the 8th and 9th of May, 1701, 13 W. III.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges, That on the 30th of January, in the ninth Year of his preſent Majeſty King William, the Priſoners did on the High Seas, near Catſheen in the Eaſt-Indies, piratically ſeize, and rob a certain Ship called the Quedah Merchant, putting the Men on Board in Fear of their Lives, and taking the ſaid Ship, with her Apparel, Tackle, and Goods, and converting them to their own Uſe; againſt the King's Peace, &c.

The Priſoners being arraigned on this Indictment, and ſeverally pleading Not Guilty, Churchill, Howe, and Mullins, afterwards repreſented to the Court, that they ſurrendred themſelves on the King's Proclamation, offering a Pardon to all that came in upon it; and deſired, they might have the Benefit of that Proclamation. —— They added, that they had Notice of the Proclamation when they were at Guinea in South-America, and delivered themſelves up to Colonel Baſs, Governor of Eaſt-Jerſey, who was then in Court, and could atteſt the Truth of it.

Then the Proclamation was read, bearing Date the 8th of December, 1698, whereby a Pardon was offered to all ſuch Pirates as ſhould ſurrender themſelves, within the Times therein limited, to Capt. Thomas Warren (Commodore of a Squadron of Men of War, then ſent to the Eaſt-Indies for the Suppreſſion of Pirates); and to Iſrael Hayes, Peter Dellanoye, and Chriſtopher Pollard, and the Survivors of them; only Henry Avery, alias Bridgman, and Captain William Kidd, being excepted by the ſaid Proclamation.

The Court obſerved hereupon, that the Proclamation required them to ſurrender to certain Perſons by Name; and their ſurrendring to others could not entitle them to a Pardon, ſo as to prevent their being tried.

The Evidence opened.

Then Doctor Newton, Advocate of the Admiralty, proceeded to open the Evidence, and obſerved, That Captain Kidd, who had thus acted the Pirate himſelf, went from England in April 1696, with a Commiſſion dated the 26th of January preceding, to take and ſeize Pirates in the Indian Seas, which were then very much infeſted by them: That Kidd's Ship carried thirty Guns, and he had about eighty Men on board when he went from England; but touching at New-York in July 1696, and giving out that he was going to Madagaſcar, (the known Receptacle of Pirates) to free the Seas from thoſe Diſturbers of Mankind, ſo many Men came to ſerve under him that he ſoon encreaſed his Number to 155 Men; a Force ſufficient, if he had meant well, to have made him uſeful to the Publick: That calling in at ſeveral Places afterwards for Proviſions, and among others at Madagaſcar in July 97, he ſailed from thence to Babb's-Key, a ſmall Iſland at the Entrance of the Red-Sea, and a convenient Station for obſerving what Veſſels went from thence to India; and here, inſtead of taking Pirates, he became one himſelf; the greateſt, and the worſt of Pirates: Here he ſtaid three Weeks, in Expectation of the Mocca Fleet, to make his Fortune out of it: For whatever he had before pretended, this was his real Deſign; and now ſo poſſeſſed his Mind, that he could not refrain from declaring, and that often to his Men, that he ſhould make himſelf this Voyage, and ballaſt his Ship with Gold and Silver. After long Expectation, on the 14th of Auguſt, the Fleet, to the Number of fourteen Sail, came by; and he fell in with them, and fired ſeveral Guns at them; but finding they had an Engliſh and Dutch Convoy, his Deſign for that Time was fruſtrated.

Not diſcouraged, however, by this Diſappointment, he proceeded to the Coaſt of Malabar, in the Eaſt-Indies, where he knew the Trade was conſiderable, and expected his Advantage would be proportionable in diſturbing it: And there accordingly, for ſeveral Months together, he committed many great Piracies and Robberies, taking the Ships and Goods of the Indians, and others, at Sea, Moors and Chriſtians, and torturing cruelly their Perſons, to diſcover if any Thing had eſcaped his Hand; burning their Houſes, and killing, after a barbarous Manner, the Natives on the Shore, equally cruel, dreaded and hated both on the Land and at Sea.

Theſe Criminal Attempts and Actions had rendered his Name, (to the Diſgrace and the Prejudice of the Engliſh Nation) too well known, and deſervedly deteſted in thoſe remote Parts of the World; and he was now looked upon as an Arch-Pirate, and the Common Enemy of Mankind; and accordingly two Portugueſe Men of War went out in Purſuit of him; and one met with him, and fought him for ſeveral Hours; but Kidd's Fortune then reſerved him for another Place, and another Manner of Trial.

Amongſt the great Number of Veſſels he took on that Coaſt, was the Ship he now ſtands indicted for, the Quedah Merchant, being then on a Trading Voyage from Bengal to Suratt, the Commander Engliſh (Captain Wright,) the Owners American Merchants, and others: He had taken Moors before; but Moors and Chriſtians ſtians are all alike to Pirates; they diſtinguiſh not Nations and Religions.

Theſe on Board the Veſſel offered 30,000 Rupees for her Ranſom; but the Ship was too conſiderable to be parted with, even for ſo great a Sum: So Kidd ſold Goods out of her on the Neighbouring Coaſt, to the Value of 10 or 12,000 l. out of which he took whatever he could pretend to for Ammunition and Proviſions, with forty Shares for himſelf; and the Remainder was diſpoſed of amongſt the Crew, and particularly thoſe who are here indicted with him, who accompanied him; who aſſiſted him throughout in all his Piracies; and who, now too, ſhare the Spoils and the Guilt with him.

With this Ship and another, and the Remainder of the Goods not ſold on the Coaſt, he ſailed once more for Madagaſcar, where he arrived in the Beginning of May 98, and there again, what was left on Board was divided according to the ſame Proportions, and amongſt the ſame Perſons, as before; each Mariner having about three Bales to his Share.

It is not to be omitted, That at his Return to Madagaſcar, there came on Board him ſome Perſons from the Ship, The Reſolution, formerly the Mocca Frigate; (for the Piratical Seizing of which Veſſel there have been formerly Trials and Convictions in this Place) of which Captain Culliford, a notorious Pirate, now in Cuſtody, and againſt whom two Bills have been found for Piracy by the Grand Jury, was the Commander: They at firſt ſeemed to be afraid of Kidd; but without any Ground, as his former Actions had demonſtrated, and the Sequel ſhewed. They, who are hardened Pirates, and long inured to Villanies, could ſcarce think that any Man could ſo betray the Truſt and Confidence the Publick had placed in him, and ſaid, They heard he was come to take and hang them: But Captain Kidd aſſured them, That he had no ſuch Deſign; and that he had rather his Soul ſhould broil in Hell, than do them any Harm; bid them not be afraid, and ſwore he would be true to them. And here, indeed, he did not break his Word: This was his Way of being true to his Truſt, and making good the Ends of his Commiſſion, in acting with the greateſt Treachery, and the greateſt Falſeneſs, that ever Man did. And to make all that has been repreſented of him true, Captain Kidd and Captain Culliford went on Board, treated, and preſented each other; and inſtead of taking Culliford, as it was his Duty to have done, and his Force was ſufficient to have performed it, he gave him Money and Ammunition, two great Guns and Shot, and other Neceſſaries, to fit him out to Sea, that he might be in a Condition the better to take and ſeize other innocent Perſons.

His own Ship he now left, and went on Board the Quedah-Merchant; ſeveral of his Men then went from him; but not the Priſoners; they were all along Well-wiſhers and Aſſiſtants to him; fought for him, divided the Plunder with him, and are now come to be tried with him.

This, Gentlemen, is the Crime he is indicted for, Piracy; the growing Trouble, Diſturbance, and Miſchief of the Trading World, and the peaceable Part of Mankind; the Scandal and Reproach of the European Nations, and the Chriſtian Name, (I wiſh I could not ſay, that the Kidds and the Averys had not made it more particularly ſo of the Engliſh) amongſt Mahometans and Pagans, in the extremeſt Parts of the Earth; which turns not only to the Diſadvantage of the immediate Sufferers, but of all ſuch as traffick in thoſe Countries, whether Companies or ſingle Merchants, who are to ſuffer for the Misfortunes of others, with whom, it may be, they have no Dealings; and for the Villanies of ſuch whom they and all Mankind equally and juſtly deteſt and abhor.

This is the Perſon that ſtands indicted at that Bar, than whom no one in this Age has done more Miſchief, in this worſt kind of Miſchief; or has occaſioned greater Confuſion and Diſorder, attended with all the Circumſtances of Cruelty and Falſhood, and a Complication of all manner of Ill.

If, therefore, theſe Facts ſhall be proved upon him, you will then, Gentlemen, in finding him Guilty, do Juſtice to the injured World; the Engliſh Nation, (our Common Country) whoſe Intereſt and Welfare ſo much depend on the Encreaſe and Security of Trade; and, laſtly, to yourſelves, whom the Law has made Judges of the Fact.

The Evidence.

The King's Witneſſes being called, Robert Braddinham, the Surgeon on Board Kidd's Ship, was ſworn, and depoſed, That they ſet ſail from Plymouth in the Adventure-Galley, the Beginning of May, 1696, having about eighty Men on Board, and thirty Guns; and in their Way to New-York they took a French Bark: That having increaſed their Number of Men to 155, they ſailed from New-York to Madagaſcar, and from thence to Babb's-Key, an Iſland on the Mouth of the Red-Sea, where they waited a Fortnight, or three Weeks, for the Mocca Fleet, and attacked them as they came by; but finding they were under an Engliſh and Dutch Convoy, he left them, and ſailed towards the Coaſt of Malabar; and meeting with a Mooriſh Ship, commanded by Captain Parker, in his Way thither, he took the Captain for his Pilot, and a Portugueſe out of the ſame Ship for his Interpreter, with ſome Gold and Merchandiſe, and drubbed the Mariners with naked Cutlaſhes, to make them confeſs where their Money was. —That the Engliſh Factory ſending to demand Captain Parker, and the Interpreter, he kept them in the Hold, and denied he had any ſuch Perſons on Board: That he afterwards met with a Portugueſe Man of War, and fought him three or four Hours, and then they parted: After which they went on Shore on ſome Malabar Iſlands, for Wood and Water, where they burnt ſeveral Houſes, and plundered the People; and Kidd ordered one of the Natives to be tied to a Tree and ſhot, becauſe they had cut his Cooper's Throat; That Kidd afterwards took a Mooriſh Ship, which they carried to Madagaſcar, and took ſeveral Sorts of Goods out of a Mooriſh Ketch, and then turned her a Driſt: And that he alſo took ſeveral Cheſts of Opium, and Eaſt-India Goods, out of a Portugueſe Ship. Then he proceeded to give a more particular Account of the ſeiſing

of the Quedah Merchant, the Ship mentioned in the Indictment. He teſtified, That in the Month of January, 169⅞, Captain Kidd put up French Colours, and gave Chaſe to the ſaid Ship; and coming up with her, commanded the Maſter (one Wright, an Engliſhman) to come on board; and told him, he was his Priſoner: Then he commanded his Men to go on board the Quedah Merchant, and take Poſſeſſion of her; and he ſold and diſpoſed of as many of the Goods belonging to the ſaid Ship, on the Malabar Coaſt, as amounted to ſeven or eight thouſand Pounds: That, beſides Captain Wright, there were on Board the Quedah Merchant, two Dutchmen, a Frenchman, ſome Armenians, and Moors (Indian-Mahometans): And that the Armenians, to whom the Ship and Cargo belonged, offered Kidd twenty thouſand Rupees (Half-Crowns) for the Ranſom of the Ship and Goods; but Kidd ſaid, they were worth a great deal more, and carried them to Madagaſcar, where the Goods were ſhared among the Men; Captain Kidd reſerving forty Shares to himſelf.

That at Madagaſcar ſome Engliſhmen, who were formerly acquainted with Kidd, came to him from Culliford the Pirate, and ſaid, they heard he was come thither to take and hang them; but Kidd anſwered, He was as bad as they; went on Board Culliford in the Mocca Frigate, and ſwore to be true to thoſe Pirates, and aſſiſt them; and furniſhed them with Guns, and an Anchor to fit them out to Sea. — That the Adventure-Galley being leaky, Kidd left her at Madagaſcar, and went on Board the Quedah Merchant, in which Ship he ſailed afterwards.

Joſeph Palmer being ſworn, confirmed the Surgeon's Evidence, as to Kidd's ſailing from Plymouth to New York, and from thence to Madagaſcar, and Babb's-Key, at the Entrance of the Red-Sea, where he attacked the Mocca Fleet; and of his ſailing afterwards to the Malabar Coaſt, and taking ſeveral Prizes there, particularly the Quedah Merchant, and ſelling Part of her Cargo to the Banians on the Malabar Coaſt, and ſharing the Money, and the reſt of the Goods, with his Men, at Madagaſcar, whether they carried that Ship, and entered into a friendly Correſpondence with Captain Culliford, the Pirate, who commanded the Mocca Frigate.

Kidd's Defence.

Then Captain Kidd being ordered to enter upon his Defence, ſaid, He had a Commiſſion to take French Ships, and another to take Pirates; and that two of the Ships he took had French Paſſes; and that he called his Men upon Deck, to conſult what was to be done with them, appealing to Palmer, the laſt Witneſs, If he would not have given theſe Ships to the Owners again, if his Men had not all been againſt it? Palmer anſwered, That the Armenian, (who was in Court) offered twenty thouſand Rupees for the Ship, and he refuſed it: But the Armenians crying and wringing their Hands, the Captain ſaid, Theſe Armenians make ſuch a Noiſe for the Ship, I muſt ſay my Men will not part with her, though there were not a Quarter of the Men concerned in it.

Then both Captain Kidd's Commiſſions were read, at his Requeſt: By the firſt of which he was authoriſed to cruiſe upon the French, and make Repriſals for the Damages they had done the King's Subjects in the Ship called the Adventure Galley: Which Commiſſion was dated the 11th of December, 1695. 1701. 13 W. III.

By the ſecond Commiſſion, he was impowered to cruiſe in the Adventure Galley, againſt the Pirates in the Indies; and this Commiſſion is dated on the 26th of January, 169⅞.

The Court demanding, how he could excuſe himſelf by Virtue of theſe Commiſſions, Captain Kidd anſwered, The Commander of the Quedah Merchant had a French Commiſſion; and appealed to Palmer, the Witneſs, for the Truth of it; but Palmer anſwered, he never ſaw it: And the Court told him, he ſhould have got the Ship condemned, if ſhe had been French.

Then Captain Kidd called one Davis as a Witneſs for him, who teſtified, That Captain Kidd being at Amboyna, in the Eaſt-Indies, produced two Paſſes, which he ſaid were French Paſſes; but he (the Witneſs) could not tell whether they had any Relation to the Quedah Merchant that was taken.

Captain Kidd alſo appealed to Bradenham, the Witneſs, if he did not ſee the French Paſſes; but he anſwered, he only heard he had French Paſſes.

Mr. Say being called as a Witneſs for Kidd, ſaid, He heard Bradenham the Surgeon ſay, he had been with Captain Kidd at Madagaſcar, and he believed he had done nothing but what he could anſwer.

Captain Humphreys and Captain Bond being called to Kidd's Reputation, ſaid, He had done good Service, and acted with great Applauſe in the Weſt-Indies, in the Beginning of the laſt War: To which the Court anſwered, There was no doubt but the Miniſtry had a good Opinion of him in the Year 1695, when they procured him thoſe Commiſſions; but he was not then turned Pirate.

The reſt of the Priſoners being asked, What they had to ſay in their Defence? Robert Lamley anſwered, he was Servant to Mr. Owens; and Jenkins ſaid, he was Servant to Buller: Loffe ſaid, he went to ſerve his Majeſty, whoſe Commiſſion Captain Kidd had: The Court anſwered, he had Part of the Money and Goods that were taken, and he muſt believe, when Kidd did thoſe extravagant Things, he did not act according to his Commiſſion. The Defence of the other Priſoners.

Parrot alſo ſaid, He came on Board Captain Kidd at Madagaſcar, underſtanding he had the King's Commiſſion; and being told, he could not imagine he was acting according to his Commiſſion when he did theſe Things, he anſwered, he thought he was ſafe where the King's Commiſſion was.

Barlicorn ſaid in his Defence, That he was Servant to Captain Kidd: Abel Owens ſaid, he ſurrendered to a Juſtice of Peace in Southwark on his Majeſty's Proclamation; but was told that a Juſtice of Peace was not within the Proclamation, though that might recommend him to the King's Mercy.

Darby Mullins ſaid, He came in upon the King's Proclamation; and being told he had his Dividend of the Money and Goods, he anſwered, Kidd gave it him, and afterwards took it from him.

1701. 13 W. III.

The Lord Chief Baron's Directions to the Jury.

Then the Lord Chief Baron proceeded to direct the Jury, and ſaid: The Priſoners at the Bar, in Number ten, all ſtand indicted for Piracy, in felonioufly and piratically Seizing and Taking the Ship, called the Quedah Merchant, with the Apparel and Tackling thereof, to the Value of 400 l. and divers Goods mentioned in the Indictment, to the Value of 4,500 l. from the Mariners of the ſaid Ship, belonging to ſeveral Perſons unknown, (and having repeated the Evidence, the Chief Baron goes on, and ſays;

Now, Gentlemen, this muſt be obſerved: If this was a Capture on the High Seas, and theſe were the Goods of Perſons in Amity with the King, and had no French Paſs, then it is plain Piracy: And, if you believe the Witneſſes, here is a Taking of the Goods and Ship of Perſons in Amity, and converting them to their own Uſe: Such a Taking at Land as this would be Felony; and being at Sea, it will be Piracy: For this is a taking the Ship from the right Owners, and turning it to their own Uſe. So that you have Evidence as to the Seizing of the Ship, and dividing the Money riſing from the Goods ſold, and ſharing the Remainder, according to the Articles.

Now, what does Captain Kidd ſay to all this? He has told you, he acted purſuant to his Commiſſion; but that cannot be, unleſs he gives you Satisfaction that the Ship and Goods belonged to the French King, or his Subjects, or that the Ship had a French Paſs, otherwiſe neither of them will excuſe him from being a Pirate: For if he takes the Goods of Friends, he is a Pirate; he had no Authority for that: There is no Colour from either of his Commiſſions for him to take them. And as to the French Paſſes, there is nothing of that appears by any Proof; and, for ought I can ſee, none ſaw them but himſelf, if there were ever any. It is proved that the People that were Owners of the Goods, made him very large Offers to redeem the Ship, (20,000 Rupees, as I remember) but he would not accept their Propoſal; but ſaid, That is a ſmall Sum, the Cargo is worth a great deal more, or to that Effect: And further ſaid, he muſt anſwer theſe People, that his Men will not part with it. And a Frenchman was to be ſet up for a Mock-Buſineſs, as you have heard; and if the Witneſſes ſay true, they were ſaid by the Captain of the Ship to be, and were reputed to be, the Ship and Goods of Friends, and not of Enemies; and if they were ſo, and had no French Paſs, then is he, and thoſe that were concerned with him, guilty of Piratically taking this Ship, and of Piratically ſeizing the Goods in the Ship; and neither of his Commiſſions will juſtify ſuch an Action as this. If he had acted purſuant to his Commiſſion, he ought to have condemned the Ship and Goods, if they were in a French Intereſt, or ſailed under a French Paſs; but by his not condemning them, he ſeems to ſhew his Aim, Mind, and Intention, that he did not act in that Caſe by Virtue of his Commiſſion, but quite contrary to it; for he takes the Ship, and ſhares the Money and Goods, and is taken in that very Ship by my Lord Bellamont, and he had continued in that Ship till that Time; ſo that there is no Colour or Pretence appears, that he intended to bring this Ship to England, to be condemned, or to have condemned it in any of the Engliſh Plantations, having diſpoſed of the whole Cargo, as aforeſaid. Here I muſt leave it to you to conſider whether, according to the Evidence that appears, there is any Ground for him to ſay, he has acted by his Commiſſion in taking the Quedah Merchant, and Goods in her, or whether he has not acted contrary thereunto. 1701. 13 W. III.

Now for himſelf, he has called ſome Perſons here, to give an Account of his Reputation, and of his Services done in the Weſt-Indies; and one of them ſays, about ten or twelve Years ago he did good Service there. Why ſo he might, and might have, and it is very like he had ſuch a Reputation, when the King truſted him with theſe Commiſſions, elſe I believe he had, never had them; ſo that, whatever he might be ſo many Years ago, that is not a Matter to be inſiſted on now, but what he hath been ſince, and how he hath acted in this Matter charged againſt him: So that, Gentlemen, as to Mr. Kidd, I muſt leave it to you, whether he is guilty of Piracy or no; and if you believe him guilty upon the Evidence, you will find him ſo; if not, you will acquit him.

Now for the other Priſoners, it is proved they were all concerned in Taking and Sharing the Ship and Goods in the Indictment; yet their Circumſtances differ pretty much among themſelves. There are three of them that it has been made out to you, and owned by the King's Witneſſes, that they were Servants; Robert Lamley, William Jenkins, Richard Barlicorn. All theſe are made out to be Servants, and you have had the Indentures of two of them produced, and the King's Witneſſes prove them ſo, and they were admitted to be Servants. Now, Gentlemen, there muſt go an Intention of the Mind, and the Freedom of the Will, to the committing a Felony or Piracy. A Pirate is not to be underſtood to be under Conſtraint, but a free Agent; for in this Caſe the bare Act will not make him guilty, unleſs the Will make it ſo. Now, a Servant, it is true, if he go voluntarily, and have his Proportion, he muſt be accounted a Pirate; for then he acts upon his own Account, and not by Compulſion. And theſe Perſons, according to the Evidence, received their Part; but, whether they accounted to their Maſters for their Shares afterwards, yea or no, as they pretend, but make no Proof of it, I muſt leave that to you; and therefore there is a Conſideration to be had of them. For, if theſe Men did go under the Compulſion of their Maſters, to whom they were Servants, and not voluntarily, and upon their own Accounts, it may difference their Caſe from others, who went and acted willingly in this Matter, and upon their own Accounts. So that, as to thoſe that were Servants under the Command of their Maſters that were preſent with them, I muſt leave it to you, whether you will diſtinguiſh between them and the others, that were not Servants, but free Agents. It is true, a Servant is not bound to obey his Maſter but in lawful Things, which they ſay they thought this was; and that they knew not to the contrary, but that their Maſters

Three acquitted.

Masters acted according to the King's Commission; and therefore, their Case must be left to your Consideration, whether you think them, upon the whole Matter, guilty or no. If you believe them guilty, you will find them so, otherwise you will acquit them.

For the other Persons, some of them pretend they came in on his Majesty's Proclamation, and for that you must consider the Evidence, and take it altogether; and consider whether you are satisfied, by what they have said or proved, that they have brought themselves within the Benefit of the King's Favour by that Proclamation. You have heard it read, and observed the Qualifications and Directions by it, and the Terms upon which the Pardon was promised, which are not made out to you, to be complied with by them. They may apply another Way for the King's Mercy; this Court must proceed according to the Rules of Law and Justice. But then all of them insist on this; We were, say they, under the Captain, and acted under him as our Commander; and, Gentlemen, so far as they acted under his lawful Commands, and by Virtue and in Pursuance of his Commissions, it must be admitted they were justifiable, and ought to be justified: But how far forth that hath been, the Actions of the Captain, and their own, will best make it appear. It is not contested, but these Men knew, and were sensible of what was done and acted, and did take Part in it, and had the Benefit of what was taken, shared amongst them: And if the taking of this Ship and Goods were unlawful, then these Men can claim no Advantage by these Commissions, because they had no Authority by them to do what they did, but acted quite contrary to them: What had they to do to enter into such Articles and to act as they did? You must consider the Evidence given here according to the Rules of the Law, and if you are satisfied, that they have knowingly and wilfully been concerned or partaken with Captain Kidd, in taking this Ship, and divided the Goods, and that piratically and feloniously, then they will be guilty within this Indictment. It is worthy of Consideration, what appears upon the Evidence, that they met with one reputed to be a notorious Pirate, called Culliford; he was esteemed an Arch-Pirate, and known to be so; yet this Captain, Kidd, that was commissioned to take Pirates, instead of taking him, grows to such an Intimacy with him, that he said he would have his Soul fry in Hell before he would hurt him, or to that Effect; and so they made Presents one to another, and Captain Kidd left three of his Men with him. Whilst Men pursue their Commissions, they must be justified, but when they do Things not authorised, or never acted by them, it is as if there had been no Commission at all. I have distinguished the Evidence as well as my Memory serves me, and must leave it to you to determine, upon the whole Matter, who are guilty, and who not; and such as you are satisfied to be guilty, you will find so, and such as you are not satisfied to be guilty, you will acquit.

Then the Jury withdrew, and, after half an Hour's Recess, brought in the following Verdict, (viz.)

Three acquitted. That Lamley, Jenkins, and Barlicorn, the three Servants, were Not Guilty; and that Captain Kidd, and the other six were all Guilty.

1701. 13W.III.

Then all the ten were arraigned on four other Indictments; the first of which charged them with piratically seizing and robbing a Mooriſh Ship, on the 20th of September, in the ninth Year of the King, on the High-Sea, about fifty Leagues from Carwar in the East-Indies. Seven convicted. Second Indictment.

3. The third Indictment charged them with piratically taking another Mooriſh Ship on the 27th of November, near Callicut in the East-Indies. Third Indictment.

4. The Fourth charges them with taking a Mooriſh Ketch near Callicut, on the 28th of December; and Fourth Indictment.

5. The Fifth charges them with taking a Portugueſe Ship, near Callicut, on the 20th of January, in the same ninth Year of the King. Fifth Indictment.

The Witnesses were the same, at the Trials on these Indictments, as they were at the former, and gave much the same Evidence: And as the Prisoners were convicted already, and had little more to say in their Defence of these Facts, than they had insisted on before, it is perfectly unnecessary to go over the Evidence again: I shall only observe, therefore, That Lamley, Jenkins, and Barlicorn, the three Servants, were acquitted, and all the rest were convicted on two of the Indictments; and that on the fourth and fifth Indictments, Churchill, How, and Owens pleaded Guilty; And Kidd, Loffe, Parrot, and Mullins were found Guilty by the Jury upon the two last Indictments. The same Evidence on these four Indictments. Three acquitted, and seven convicted.

William Kidd, Nicholas Churchill, James How, Gabriel Loffe, Hugh Parrot, Abel Owens, and Darby Mullins; together with Robert Hickman and John Eldridge, who had been convicted of Piracy also, were afterwards called to Judgment, and Doctor Oxenden passed the following upon them, (viz.)

You shall be taken from the Place where you are, and be carried to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and there be severally hanged by your Necks until you be dead. Sentence passed on seven.

Whereupon William Kidd, and three of his Accomplices, who did not come in upon the Proclamation, were hanged at Execution Dock, and their Bodies left hanging upon Gibbets by the Thames Side, for a Terror to others. Four of the Pirates executed.

A certain Indian Prince, of the Great Mogul's Family, having been taken by European Pirates in the Indian Seas, as he was going on a Pilgrimage from India to Mecca, the East-India Company's Factors at Suratt were thereupon laid in Irons, and threatened to be severely dealt with: But upon representing that these People were Robbers, alike Enemies to them and to all Mankind; and applying to the Mogul's Officers, in such a Manner as seldom fails to mollify Courtiers of any Religion or Nation, the Company's Factors obtained their Liberty: However, apprehending they should be liable to the like Insults again, if the English Pirates in those Seas were not suppressed; they desired the Company to procure a Man of War to be sent thither for the Protection of the Merchants on that Side, and to destroy a Nest of Pirates, that lay in some obscure Creeks in Madagascar; and upon the Company's petitioning the Government for a Man of War, it was granted, and Captain Kidd pitched upon for that Service. Remarks on Kidd's Trial.

This

1701. 13W. III.

This was looked upon to be ſo gainful an Expedition, that ſome of the Miniſtry ingaged in it; as the Lord Somers, the Earl of Romney, the Earl of Orford, the Lord Bellamont, and other Perſons of Diſtinction, who laid down large Sums to fit out the Ship, and procured a Grant from the Crown, of all that Kidd ſhould take; who afterwards turning Pirate, their Enemies ſuggeſted, that he had ſecret Orders from thoſe great Men, who employed him for what he did, and was aſſured of Protection from them: Others ſaid, it was not becoming Miniſters of State, to ingage in ſuch Enterprizes; and hardly legal, to get a Grant of Spoils that ſhould be taken on the High Seas, before they were condemned as lawful Prize; concluding, that theſe Noblemen would never have engaged in ſuch an Enterprize, if there had not been ſome extraordinary Gains in View, more than could have been got, by taking a Pirate Ship or two: That as Kidd was bound to the Indian Seas, he had probably his Eye on the rich Ships which trade between Perſia and India, when he ſet Sail; and had given his Employers Expectations of bringing Home an immenſe Treaſure. 1701. 13W. III.

But whatever Kidd pretended, or theſe Noble Adventurers expected; certain it is, he made Prizes of ſeveral Merchant Ships in the Indian Seas, and divided the Spoils with his Crew, and returning afterwards to New England, was taken there by the Lord Bellamont, the Governor, and ſent to England, where he was condemned and executed for Murder and Piracy; while his Employers were ſeverely reflected on, and their Encouragement of him made the Occaſion (among other Things) of impeaching two of the ſaid Lords, (viz.) the Lord Somers and the Earl of Orford, as will appear by the following Proceedings.

The four impeached Lords.

Proceedings on the Impeachment of WILLIAM Earl of Portland, JOHN Lord Somers, EDWARD Earl of Orford, and CHARLES Lord Halifax, in the Year 1701. 1701. 13W.III.

The Occaſion of impeaching them.

A Treaty of Partition of the Spaniſh Monarchy, having been concluded on the 15th of March 1700, N. S. 4 O. S. between Great Britain and Holland on the one Part, and France on the other; whereby the Kingdom of Naples and Sicily, and the reſt of the Spaniſh Territories on the Coaſt of Italy, together with the Province of Guipuſcoa and the Dutchy of Lorrain, were allotted to France on the Death of the then King of Spain:

The Commons took the ſaid Treaty into their Conſideration in March following, and preſented an Addreſs to his Majeſty; wherein they repreſent the ill Conſequences of that Treaty of Partition, whereby ſuch large Territories of the King of Spain's Dominions were to be delivered up to the French King.

The Houſe of Peers alſo preſented an Addreſs to the King on the 20th of March, 1700-1. wherein they tell him, That they found to their great Sorrow, that this Treaty would be of very ill Conſequence to the Peace and Safety of Europe; for that beſides the Occaſion it might have given the late King of Spain, (who died juſt before) to have made his Will in Favour of the Duke of Anjou, if that Treaty had taken Effect; the Prejudice to his Majeſty and his Subjects, and indeed to all Europe, by the Addition of Sicily, Naples, Guipuſcoa, and Lorrain to France, had not only been very great, but contrary to the Pretence of the Treaty itſelf; which was to prevent any Umbrage that might have been taken by uniting ſo many States and Dominions under one Head: That by all the Informations they had had of this fatal Treaty, they could not find that the verbal Orders or Inſtructions (if any were given to his Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries) were ever conſidered in any of his Majeſty's Councils; or, That the Draught of that Treaty had ever been laid before his Majeſty at any Meeting of his Council; much leſs that it was adviſed or approved of by any Council or Committee of Council: Wherefore they thought themſelves bound in Duty to his Majeſty, and Juſtice to their Country, moſt humbly to beſeech him, that for the future, he would be pleaſed to require and admit, in all Matters of Importance, the Advice of his natural born Subjects, whoſe known Probity and Fortunes might make him and his People a juſt Aſſurance of their Fidelity to his Service; and that in order thereunto, he would be pleaſed to conſtitute a Council of ſuch Perſons, to whom his Majeſty might be pleaſed to impart all Affairs both at Home and Abroad, which might any Way concern him and his Dominions: For as Intereſt and natural Affection to their Country, would incline them to wiſh the Welfare and Proſperity of it, much more than others, who had no ſuch Ties upon them; and as their Experience and Knowledge of their Country would alſo render them more capable than Strangers, of adviſing his Majeſty in the true Intereſt of it; ſo they were confident, that after ſuch large and repeated Demonſtrations of his Subjects Duty and Affection, his Majeſty could not doubt of their Zeal in his Service, nor want the Knowledge of Perſons fit to be employed in all his moſt ſecret and arduous Affairs: And ſince it appeared the French King's accepting of the King of Spain's Will, was a manifeſt Violation of that Treaty, they humbly adviſed his Majeſty, in future Treaties with that Prince, to proceed with ſuch Caution as might carry a real Security.

The Earl of Portland charged with negotiating the Partition Treaty

Some few Days after the Earl of Portland was charged directly in the Houſe of Peers with negotiating the ſaid Treaty: To which his Lordſhip ſaid, by Way of Apology for himſelf, That the Earls of Pembroke, Jerſey, and Marlborough, and the Lords Somers, Lonſdale, and Halifax

1701. 13W. III.

Halifax were privy to that Negociation; and their Lordſhips did acknowledge they had ſeen a Draught of the ſaid Treaty; but ſaid, the Earl of Portland drew it up himſelf in French, and they had neither given or refuſed their Aſſent to it, for it was never communicated to the Privy Council.

The Commons alſo, in their Debates on this Treaty, reflected ſeverely on the huddling it up in the Dark; and Mr. Howe particularly ſaid, That the Partition Treaty was a Felonious Treaty; comparing it to the Diſtribution of other Men's Effects among Robbers and Highwaymen. And on the Firſt of April, 1701, the Houſe of Commons came to this Reſolution, That William Earl of Portland, by negociating and concluding the Treaty of Partition, which was deſtructive to the Trade of this Kingdom, and dangerous to the Peace of Europe, was guilty of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and ſhould be impeached thereupon: And Sir John Leveſon Gower, by Order of the Houſe, immediately went up to the Lord's Bar, and impeached the ſaid Earl; acquainting their Lordſhips, that the Commons would in due Time exhibit Articles againſt him.

Earl of Portland impeached.

The Commons afterwards being upon a Debate on the 14th of April, whether they ſhould impeach the Lord Somers for adviſing the ſaid Treaty of Partition; his Lordſhip deſired he might be heard, before the Houſe came to any Reſolution thereupon; and being admitted into the Houſe, he made an Apology for his Conduct in that Affair, containing much the ſame Matter contained in his Anſwer, (hereafter mentioned): But he being withdrawn, the Commons Reſolved, That John Lord Somers, by adviſing his Majeſty to conſent to the Treaty for the Partition of the Spaniſh Monarchy, whereby large Territories of the King of Spain's Dominions were to be delivered up to France, was guilty of a High Crime and Miſdemeanor: And Mr. Harcourt, by Command of the Houſe, impeached Lord Somers at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords; declaring, that the Commons would, in due Time, exhibit Articles againſt him.

Lord Somers impeached.

Two Letters produced by Lord Somers, in Defence of his Conduct.

The Lord Somers, at his Hearing before the Commons, delivered in the two following Letters, as a Juſtification of his Conduct.

The King's Letter to Lord Somers, concerning the Partition Treaty, dated at Loo, 15---25 Auguſt, 1698.

The King's Letter to him.

" I Imparted to you, before I left England, " that in France there was expreſſed to " my Lord Portland, ſome Inclination to come " to an Agreement with us, concerning the Succeſſion of the King of Spain; ſince which " Count Tallard has mentioned it to me, and " has made Propoſitions, the Particulars of " which my Lord Portland will write to Vernon; " to whom I have given Orders not to communicate them to any other beſides yourſelf, " and to leave to your Judgment to whom " elſe you would think proper to impart them; " to the End I might know your Opinion upon " ſo important an Affair, and which requires " the greateſt Secrecy. If it be fit this Negociation ſhould be carried on, there is no Time " to be loſt; and you will ſend me the full " Powers under the Great Seal, with the Names " in Blank, to treat with Count Tallard. I believe, that this may be done ſecretly, that " none but you and Vernon, and thoſe to whom " you ſhall have communicated it, may have " Knowledge of it; ſo that the Clerks, who " are to write the Warrant and the full Powers, " may not know what it is. According to all " Intelligence, the King of Spain cannot outlive the Month of October, and the leaſt Accident may carry him off every Day. I received yeſterday, your Letter of the Ninth: " Since my Lord Wharton cannot at this Time " leave England, I muſt think of ſome other to " ſend Ambaſſador into Spain; if you can think " of any one proper, let me know it, and be " always aſſured of my Frindſhip.

William Rex.

1701. 13W. III.

Tunbridge-Wells, 28*th of* Auguſt, 1698. O. S.

Sir,

Lord Somers's Anſwer to the King.

" HAVING your Majeſty's Commiſſion to try if the Waters would contribute to " the Re-eſtabliſhment of my Health, I was juſt " got to this Place, when I had the Honour of " your Commands; I thought the beſt Way of " executing them would be to communicate to " my Lord Orford, Mr. Montague, and the " Duke of Shrewſbury, (who, before I left London, had agreed upon a Meeting about that " Time) the Subject of my Lord Portland's " Letter; and at the ſame Time letting them " know, how ſtrictly your Majeſty required " that it ſhould remain an abſolute Secret.

" Since that Time, Mr. Montague, and Mr. " Secretary are come down hither; and upon " the whole Diſcourſe, three Things have principally occurred to be humbly ſuggeſted to " your Majeſty.

" Firſt, That the entertaining a Propoſal of " this Nature ſeems to be attended with very " many ill Conſequences, if the French did not " act a ſincere Part; but we were ſoon at Eaſe " as to any Apprehenſions of this Sort, being " fully aſſured your Majeſty would not act but " with the utmoſt Nicety, in an Affair wherein " the Glory and Safety of Europe were ſo highly concerned.

" The ſecond Thing conſidered, was, The " very ill Proſpect of what was like to happen " upon the Death of the King of Spain, in Caſe " nothing was done previouſly, towards the " providing againſt that Accident, which ſeemed probably to be very near; the King of " France having ſo great a Force, in ſuch a Readineſs, that he was in a Condition to take " Poſſeſſion of Spain, before any other Prince " could be able to make a Stand: Your Majeſty " is the beſt Judge, whether this be the Caſe, " who are ſo perfectly informed of the Circumſtances of Parts abroad.

" But ſo far as relates to England, it would " be want of Duty not to give your Majeſty " this clear Account, That there is a Deadneſs " and Want of Spirit in the Nation univerſally, " ſo as not at all to be diſpoſed to the Thought of " entering into a new War; that they ſeemed " to be tired out with Taxes, to a Degree beyond what was diſcerned, till it appeared upon the Occaſion of the late Elections. This " is the Truth of the Fact, upon which your " Majeſty will determine what Reſolutions are " proper to be taken.

" That which remained, was the Conſideration, What would be the Condition of Europe, if the Propoſal took Place: Of this we " thought ourſelves little capable of judging; " but it ſeemed that, if Sicily was in the French " Hands, they will be entirely Maſters of the " Levant Trade: That if they were poſſeſſed " of Final, and thoſe other Sea-Ports on that Side, " whereby Milan would be entirely ſhut out from " Relief, by Sea, or any other Commerce, that " Dutchy would be of little Signification in the " Hands of any Prince: And that if the King " of France had Poſſeſſion of that Part of Guipuſcoa, which is mentioned in the Propoſal, " beſides the Ports he would have in the Ocean, " it does ſeem he would have as eaſy a Way of " invading Spain on that Side, as he now has " on the Side of Catalonia.

" But it is not to be hoped, that France will " quit its Pretences to ſo great a Succeſſion with- " out conſiderable Advantages; and we are all " aſſured your Majeſty will reduce the Terms " as low as can be done, and make them, as " far as is poſſible in the preſent Circumſtances " of Things, ſuch as may be ſome Foundation " for the future Quiet of Chriſtendom, which all " your Subjects cannot but be convinced is your " true Aim. If it could be brought to paſs, " that England might be ſome Way a Gainer by " this Tranſaction, whether it were by the Elector of Bavaria (who is the Gainer by your " Majeſty's Interpoſition in this Treaty) his " coming to an Agreement to let us into ſome " Trade to the Spaniſh Plantations, or in any " other Manner, it would wonderfully endear " your Majeſty to your Engliſh Subjects.

" It does not appear, in Caſe this Negociation ſhould proceed, what is to be done on " your Part, in order to make it take Place; " whether any more be required, than that the " Engliſh and Dutch ſhould ſit ſtill, and France " itſelf ſee it executed: If it be ſo, what Security ought to be expected, that if, by our " being Neuters, the French be ſucceſsful, they " will confine themſelves to the Terms of the " Treaty, and not attempt to make further Advantages of their Succeſs.

" I humbly beg your Majeſty's Pardon, that " theſe Thoughts are ſo ill put together; theſe " Waters are known to diſcompoſe and diſturb " the Head, ſo as almoſt totally to diſable one " from writing: I ſhould be extremely troubled " if my Abſence from London has delayed the " Diſpatch of the Commiſſion one Day: You " will be pleaſed to obſerve, that two Perſons " (as the Commiſſion is drawn) muſt be named " in it; but the Powers may be executed by either of them: I ſuppoſe your Majeſty will " not think it proper to name Commiſſioners " that are not Engliſh, or Naturalized, in an " Affair of this Nature.

" I pray God give your Majeſty Honour and " Succeſs in all your Undertakings." I am, with the utmoſt Duty and Reſpect, Sir, Your Majeſty's moſt Dutiful, and moſt Obedient Subject and Servant, SOMERS.

" P. S. The Commiſſion is wrote by Mr. " Secretary, and I have had it ſealed in ſuch a " Manner, that no Creature has the leaſt " Knowledge of it, beſides the Perſons named.

1701. 13W. III.

The Commons alſo, on the ſame 15th of April, impeached Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Halifax, of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, ſeparately; Colonel Byerley carrying up the former Impeachment, and Mr. Bridges the latter. Lords Orford and Halifax impeached.

And they afterwards Reſolved on an Addreſs to his Majeſty, in which they declared the great Satisfaction they had received in their examining the Treaty of Partition; obſerving his Majeſty's Care in not entering on that Negociation without the Advice of his Engliſh Counſellors; and finding that John Lord Somers, on whoſe Judgment his Majeſty chiefly relied in that important Affair, did, in Concert with Edward Earl of Orford and Charles Lord Halifax, adviſe his Majeſty to enter into that Treaty, of ſuch dangerous Conſequence, without the Advice of his Council: That they might no longer be able to deceive his Majeſty, and abuſe his People, they deſired he would be pleaſed to remove the ſaid John Lord Somers, Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Halifax from his Council and Preſence for ever; as alſo William Earl of Portland, who tranſacted thoſe Treaties; and concluded with repeating their Aſſurances to ſtand by and ſupport his Majeſty, to the utmoſt of their Power. An Addreſs of the Commons to remove theſe four Lords.

To which his Majeſty anſwered, He ſhould employ none in his Service, but ſuch as were likely to improve that mutual Truſt and Confidence between them, which was ſo neceſſary at that Conjuncture for their own Security, and the Preſervation of their Allies. His Anſwer.

On the contrary, the Houſe of Lords, (in which the Courtiers had had a Majority for ſome Time), though they had themſelves ſaid very hard Things of the Partition Treaty, and the Manner of tranſacting it, in their Addreſs; yet, in Behalf of their favourite Brethren, they now preſented an Addreſs of another Strain; wherein they beſeech his Majeſty not to paſs any Cenſure on thoſe Lords, until they were tried upon the Impeachments the Commons had preferred againſt them. Thus Matters reſted till the Fifth of May, when the Lords ſent a Meſſage to the Commons, to remind them, that there were yet no Articles preferred againſt the impeached Lords: Thereupon the Commons, on the Ninth of the ſame Month, ſent up Articles againſt Edward Earl of Orford, in Maintenance of their Impeachment. An Addreſs of the Lords to the Contrary. Articles againſt Lord Somers.

Theſe Articles ſet forth, That the Earl, preferring his private Intereſt to the publick Good, had, during an expenſive War, procured ſeveral Grants from his Majeſty, of Lands and exorbitant Sums of Money: That, while he commanded the Royal Navy in the Streights, he received the Publick Money, and converted it to his private Uſe; and then procured a Privy Seal to diſcharge him of it: That he received conſiderable Sums from the King of Spain alſo, with great Quantities of Wine, Oil, and other Proviſion for the Fleet, which he converted to his own Uſe: That he ſold and diſpoſed of ſeveral Veſſels as Prizes, without Condemnation: That, preſiding in the Commiſſion of Articles againſt the Earl of Orford. Lord Somers's Anſwer.

of Lord High Admiral, he had rejected the Requeſt of the Eaſt-India Company for ſuppreſſing Pirates; and had procured a Commiſſion for William Kidd, who had committed Piracy, encouraged thereto by his Hopes of the Earl's Protection: That, while he commanded the Royal Navy, he loſt ſeveral Opportunities of deſtroying the Enemy's Ships; and that he adviſed the King to enter into the Treaty of Partition, which was prejudicial to the Nation; with ſome other Things of leſs Moment.

His Anſwer.

To which the Earl anſwered, That his Majeſty, in Conſideration of his Services for many Years, had voluntarily made him a reverſionary Grant, of the Value of about 10,000 l. That he had legally paſſed his Accounts for all Monies he had received on Account of the Publick: That whatever he received of the King of Spain for the Fleet, was duly diſtributed among the Seamen: That he conſtantly gave Orders for proceeding againſt the Prizes that were taken according to Law: That he never diſcouraged the Eaſt-India Company's Requeſt for the ſuppreſſing of Pirates: That Kidd's Commiſſion was granted according to Law, and intended for the Publick Good; and, if he had committed Piracy, he was never incouraged in it by the Earl: That he had not neglected his Duty againſt the Enemy; and, conſidering his Services againſt the French Fleet, he did not expect to be charged therewith: And denies that he adviſed his Majeſty to enter into the Partition Treaty; averring, that he objected to it, and gave his Opinion againſt the ſame.

Articles againſt Lord Somers.

The Commons alſo, on the nineteenth of May, ſent up Articles againſt the Lord Somers; wherein they charge him with adviſing the Partition Treaties, and paſſing both the Powers to treat, and the Treaties themſelves, under the Great Seal, without the Knowledge of the Council, or the other Lords Juſtices, leaving one intire Blank Sheet, with ſeveral other Blanks, to be filled up, as well in the Commiſſion and Powers for negociating the ſaid Treaties, as in the Treaties themſelves; neither did he inroll them in Chancery, as the Law required: That he paſſed many unreaſonable Grants under the Broad Seal; and adviſed and procured divers Grants of the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland: That, beſides the Fees and Perquiſites of his Office, he procured a Penſion of 4000 l. per Annum, and ſeveral other unreaſonable Grants, for his own Benefit, in which his Majeſty was deceived: That he had procured a Commiſſion for William Kidd, a Perſon of ill Fame, who had turned Pirate; and procured a Grant for himſelf and ſome others, in feigned Names, of ſuch Veſſels and Goods as he ſhould take: That he had made illegal and unwarrantable Orders, while Chancellor; with ſome other Matters of leſs Moment.

Lord Somers's Anſwer.

To which he anſwered, That he had, according to his Duty, given the King his Opinion freely on the Partition Treaties, and had his Majeſty's Letters for his Warrant in ſetting the Great Seal to the ſaid Commiſſions and Treaties: That it was not incumbent upon him, as Lord Chancellor, to ſee the ſaid Commiſſions or Treaties inrolled; but the Care of it belonged to the Prothonotary of the Court of Chancery: That he never paſſed any Grants without ſufficient Warrants; and that more conſiderable Grants had paſſed in the Times of his Predeceſſors: That the Annual Penſion of 4000 l. per Annum, had been allowed to other Chancellors: That he never begged any Grant; but what he had received, was given him voluntarily by his Majeſty, in Conſideration of his Services: That the Commiſſion to Captain Kidd was then thought neceſſary for the Preſervation of Trade and Navigation. He acknowledges, that Samuel Newton's Name, in the Grant of the Veſſels and Goods that ſhould be taken by Kidd, was uſed in Truſt for him (the Lord Somers); but that Kidd having abuſed his Commiſſion, and turned Pirate, his Employers had loſt their Expences, inſtead of making any Gains by ſending him out.

1701. 13 W. III.

Articles againſt Lord Halifax.

The Articles againſt Charles Lord Halifax, ſet forth, That, whereas the Commons had thought it reaſonable to apply the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland, to the Uſe of the Publick, he had procured a Grant of ſeveral Sums, forfeited to the Crown in that Kingdom, amounting to 13,000 l. That he had procured ſeveral Grants alſo in England; particularly a Grant of 14,000 l. to be raiſed out of ſcrubbed Beech, Birch, Holly, &c. growing in his Majeſty's Foreſts; under Colour whereof, he had cut down, and ſold for his own Benefit, ſapling Oaks, and many Tuns of well-grown Timber: That he procured ſeveral Offices and Places in the Treaſury and Exchequer, which he enjoyed at the ſame Time, though they were manifeſtly inconſiſtent, and ought to have been a Check on each other: And, laſtly, that he adviſed the Partition Treaties.

Lord Halifax's Anſwer.

To this, the Lord Halifax anſwered, That he did accept a Grant of Debts, &c. forfeited to the Crown in Ireland, and amounting to 13,000 l. as he lawfully might; but that they had been taken away from him by the late Act of Reſumption, and he had not made clear of them above 400 l. That he had alſo accepted of the Grants mentioned in England; and particularly 2000 l. per Annum for ſeven Years, to be raiſed by the Fall of ſcrubbed Beech, Birch, &c. and if any Abuſe had been in cutting the Wood, he was not anſwerable for the ſame, it being done by the Direction of his Majeſty's Surveyor-General, and other Officers. He does not deny his enjoying the ſaid Places in the Treaſury and the Exchequer; but ſays it was but for a little while: He deſigned, from the Beginning, to lay ſome of them down, and had actually relinquiſhed ſome of them. He ſays, he never adviſed the Partition Treaties, or was conſulted thereupon; but when the Matter was diſcourſed of at Tunbridge-Wells, he made ſeveral Objections to the ſame.

A Meſſage from the Lords.

The Lords, by a Meſſage the 24th of May, put the Commons in Mind of replying to the Earl of Orford's Anſwer, That a Day might be appointed for his Trial; and of exhibiting Articles againſt the Earl of Portland.

The Commons Anſwer.

To which the Commons anſwered, That they deferred bringing up the Replication againſt the Earl of Orford, becauſe they thought fit to begin with the Trial of the Lord Somers; and to the other Part of the Lords Meſſage, putting them in Mind of ſending up Articles of Impeachment againſt the Earl of Portland, &c. they held it to be unparliamentary, they, as Proſecutors, tors, being the proper Judges, where Articles of Impeachment ought to be brought up.

1701. 13 W. III.

Another Meſſage from the Lords.

Then the Lords ſent a Meſſage to the Commons, acquainting them, That they had appointed the ninth of June, for the Trial of the Earl of Orford; and that the Commons might reply, if they thought fit: They alſo put them in Mind again, That no Articles were exhibited againſt the Earl of Portland; which, after an Impeachment had ſo long depended, they obſerved, was a Hardſhip, and not agreeable to the uſual Method of Parliament.

The Commons Anſwer.

To which the Commons replied, That it was their undoubted Right, when ſeveral Perſons ſtood impeached, to bring to Trial ſuch of them, in the firſt Place, as they ſaw fit; and that no Day ought to be appointed by their Lordſhips for the Trial, without ſome previous Signification to their Lordſhips from the Commons, of their being ready to proceed therein; and therefore the Commons could not agree to the Day appointed by their Lordſhips, for the Trial of the Earl of Orford: And as to that Part of their Meſſage, relating to the ſending up Articles againſt the Earl of Portland, they thought their Lordſhips, by the frequent Repetition of it, intended to introduce Diſputes, to the Delay of Juſtice, and in Breach of that good Correſpondence which ought to be obſerved between the two Houſes.

The Lords, in a ſubſequent Meſſage, put the Commons in Mind of replying to the Lord Somers; and aſſerted, That the Right of limiting a convenient Time for the Trial, was lodged in them.

Differences ariſe between the two Houſes, concerning the Trials of the four Lords.

The Commons afterwards, at a Conference, propoſed the appointing a Committee of both Houſes, to conſider of the moſt proper Ways and Methods of proceeding on Impeachments: But the Lords, by another Meſſage, inſiſted on their Right of appointing the Day of Trial, without any previous Signification from the Commons, of their being ready; and complain that the Commons ſhould charge them with delaying Juſtice.

The Commons, on the other hand, inſiſted on the nominating a Committee of both Houſes, to adjuſt the neceſſary Preliminaries to the Trials; as whether the impeached Lords ſhould appear at their Trials, at their Lordſhips Bar, as Criminals? And whether they ſhould ſit as Judges at each other's Trials, or vote in their own Caſes; as they found by their Lordſhips Journals they had been admitted to do.

The Lords appoint a Day for the Trial of Lord Somers;

Still the Lords refuſed to appoint any ſuch Committee, to conſider of the Ways and Methods of Impeachments, and appointed Friday, the 13th of June, for the Trial of the Lord Somers: But the Commons refuſed to appear at any Trial, till the Preliminaries were ſettled.

and declare their Reſolutions, as to the Order of the Trial.

The Lords afterwards ſent the following Reſolutions to the Commons, (viz.) 1ſt, That no Lord of Parliament, impeached for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and coming to his Trial, ſhall be without the Bar. 2dly, That no Lord, impeached of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, can be precluded from voting on any Occaſion, except in his own Trial: And, that the Commons ſhould not pretend they were ſtreightened for Time, the Lords ordered the Trial of the Lord Somers to be put off to the 17th Inſtant; and agreed to a free Conference with the Commons.

1701. 13 W. III.

A Conference between the two Houſes thereon.

At this Conference, the Lord Haverſham ſaid, The Lords had ſo high an Opinion of the Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, that they hoped Juſtice ſhould never be made uſe of, as a Maſk for any Deſign: That it was a Demonſtration, the Commons thought the Lords innocent, becauſe there were ſeveral other Lords ingaged in the ſame Things, whom they did not accuſe, but left them at the Head of Affairs, near the King's Perſon, to do any Miſchief, if they were inclined to it; when they were both alike guilty, and concerned in the ſame Facts.

The Commons reſent an Expreſſion of Lord Haverſham's.

Theſe Expreſſions were highly reſented by Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, and the Managers for the Commons, who took them to be ſuch an Aſperſion on the Honour of that Houſe, that they immediately withdrew from the Conference. As they withdrew, the Lord Steward ſaid, He hoped they would think, that Lord had any Authority from the Houſe of Lords to uſe any ſuch Expreſſions towards the Commons.

However the Managers being returned to their Houſe, it was Reſolved, That John Lord Haverſham had, at a free Conference, uttered moſt ſcandalous Reproaches and falſe Expreſſions, highly reflecting upon the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, and tending to the making a Breach in the good Correſpondence between the Lords and Commons, and to the interrupting the Publick Juſtice of the Nation, by delaying the Proceedings on Impeachments: And Reſolved, That John Lord Haverſham be charged before the Lords for the Words ſpoken at the ſaid Conference; and that the Lords be deſired to proceed in Juſtice againſt him, and to inflict ſuch Puniſhment upon the ſaid Lord, as ſo high an Offence againſt the Commons does deſerve.

Demand Juſtice againſt Lord Haverſham.

The Lords afterwards deſired, that the free Conference might be renewed, in order to ſet all Matters right: But the Commons Reſolved, That it was not conſiſtent with their Honour to renew the free Conference, till Juſtice was done them on the Lord Haverſham.

Rules to be obſerved at the Trial of a Peer.

The Lords, on the 16th of June, ſent the following Rules to be obſerved at the Trial of the Lord Somers the next Day, viz.

That the whole Impeachment is to be read, and then the Anſwer; which being done, the Lord Keeper is to tell the Commons, that now they may go on with their Evidence.

Then the Lord Keeper is to declare, that the Court is proceeding to hear the Evidence, and deſire the Peers to give Attention.

If any of the Peers, or Members of the Houſe of Commons that manage the Evidence, or the Lord impeached, do deſire to have any Queſtion asked, they muſt deſire the Lord Keeper to ask the ſame.

If any Doubt doth ariſe at the Trial, no Debate is to be in the Court, but the Queſtion ſuſpended to be debated in this Houſe.

The Members of the Houſe of Commons to be there before the Peers come.

None to be covered at the Trial, but the Peers.

That ſuch Peers, at the Trial of the impeached Lord, who, at the Inſtance of the ſaid Lord, or of the Commons, ſhall be admitted Witneſſes,

1701. 13 W. III.

Witneſſes, are to be ſworn at the Clerk's Table, and the Lord Keeper to adminiſter the Oath, and to deliver their Evidence in their own Places.

Thoſe Witneſſes that are Commoners are to be ſworn at the Bar by the Clerk, and are to deliver their Evidence there.

The impeached Lord may croſs-examine Witneſſes, viva voce.

Lord Haverſham juſtifies his Expreſſions.

The ſame Day the Commons received the Lord Haverſham's Anſwer to their Charge; in which he juſtified the Expreſſions he had uſed at the late Conference between the two Houſes; and ſtill aſſerted, that the Commons had ſhewn themſelves partial, and even unjuſt, in proceeding againſt the impeached Lords, while they ſuffered the Earl of Jerſey, Mr. Secretary Vernon, Sir Joſeph Williamſon, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Stephen Fox, and Mr. Pelham, who were engaged in the ſame Tranſactions, to remain unmoleſted.

The Commons Reaſons for not appearing at the Trial of the Lord Somers.

On the other Hand, the Commons gave ſeveral Reaſons why they could not appear at the Trial of the Lord Somers, the principal whereof were; Firſt, That the Lords had not agreed to a Committee of both Houſes for ſettling the Preliminaries. Secondly, That they never could appear as Proſecutors before their Lordſhips, till they had given them Satisfaction that Lords impeached of the ſaid Crimes, ſhould not ſit as Judges at each other's Trials for thoſe Crimes. Thirdly, Becauſe the Commons had received no Reparation for the great Indignity offered them at a free Conference by the Lord Haverſham.

The Peers acquit Lord Somers.

The Lords, however proceeded to the Trial of the Lord Somers the 17th Inſtant, in Weſtminſter-Hall; that is, they cauſed the Articles againſt him and his Anſwer to be read; and the Commons not having replied, and conſequently no Iſſue joined, the Lords proceeded to put the following Queſtion; That John Lord Somers be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment againſt him, exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, and all Things therein contained; and that the ſaid Impeachment be diſmiſſed: Which was reſolved in the Affirmative, in the Abſence of the Commons.

The Lords Anſwer to the Commons Reaſons for not appearing at the Trial.

On the 20th of June, the Lords ſent an Anſwer to the Commons Reaſons for not appearing at the Trial of the impeached Lords; wherein their Lordſhips ſay, That they acknowledge that the Houſe of Commons have a Right of doing Juſtice upon theſe Impeachments, by bringing them to a Trial, and condemning or acquitting the Parties in a reaſonable Time: That there never was a Committee of both Houſes yielded to by the Lords, in caſe of an Impeachment for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; and they ſhould make no new Precedent on this Occaſion: And as to the Pretence the Commons made to delay the Trials, on Account of ſome Expreſſions that fell from my Lord Haverſham, their Lordſhips anſwer, They had omitted nothing which might give the Commons all reaſonable Satisfaction in that Matter; and obſerved further, that the Buſineſs had no Relation to the Trial of the impeached Lords, and therefore could not imagine why the Commons ſhould make Satisfaction and Reparation againſt the Lord Haverſham, a neceſſary Condition for going on with the Trials.

The Commons Reſolve, That the Lords had refuſed them Juſtice.

The Commons, on the contrary, came to a Reſolution on the ſame 20th of June, That the Lords had refuſed Juſtice to the Commons, upon the Impeachment againſt the Lord Somers, by denying a Committee of both Houſes to ſettle the Preliminaries, and afterwards proceeding to a pretended Trial of the ſaid Lord, which could tend only to protect him from Juſtice, by Colour of an illegal Acquittal; againſt which Proceeding the Commons did ſolemnly proteſt, as being repugnant to the Rules of Juſtice, and therefore null and void: That the Houſe of Lords, by the pretended Trial of John Lord Somers, had endeavoured to overturn the Right of Impeachments lodged in the Houſe of Commons by the ancient Conſtitution of this Kingdom, for the Safety and Protection of the Commons againſt the Power of great Men, and had made an Invaſion on the Liberties of the Subject, by laying a Foundation of Impunity for the greateſt Offenders: That all the ill Conſequences which might attend the Delay of the Supplies given by the Commons, for preſerving the publick Peace, and maintaining the Balance of Europe, by ſupporting our Allies againſt the Power of France, were to be imputed to thoſe, who, to procure an Indemnity for their own enormous Crimes, had uſed their utmoſt Endeavours to make a Breach between the two Houſes.

In anſwer to this Proteſt, the Lords ſent the Commons a Meſſage that Day; acquainting them, that the Commons not appearing to maintain their Articles againſt the Lord Somers, they had acquitted him of the Articles of Impeachment, and diſmiſſed the ſame; and that they had appointed Monday next for the Trial of the Earl of Orford: That from the Commons ſtill preſſing for a Committee of both Houſes, their Lordſhips inferred, that they never deſigned the bringing any of their Impeachments to a Trial: And as to the Lord Haverſham, his Anſwer was before the Commons, and the Lords reſolved to do Juſtice in that Matter.

The Earl of Orford's Trial appointed.

The Commons on the other hand Ordered, That no Member ſhould preſume to appear at the pretended Trial of the Earl of Orford, on Pain of incurring the utmoſt Diſpleaſure of the Houſe.

Warm Reſolutions of the Lords.

On Monday the 23d of June, the Lords Reſolved, That the Reſolutions of the Commons, of the 20th Inſtant, contained moſt unjuſt Reflections on the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, and were contrived to cover their affected and unreaſonable Delays in proſecuting the impeached Lords, and did manifeſtly tend to the Deſtruction of the Judicature of the Lords; to the rendering Trials and Impeachments impracticable for the future; to the ſubverting the Conſtitution of the Engliſh Government; and therefore, whatever ill Conſequences might ariſe from the ſo long deferring the Supplies of this Year's Service, they were to be attributed to the fatal Council of the putting off the Meeting of a Parliament ſo long, and to the unneceſſary Delays of the Houſe of Commons.

1701. 13 W. III. Earl of Orford acquitted.

The ſame Day the Lords proceeded to acquit the Earl of Orford, as they had done the Lord Somers; and on the 24th of June, the laſt Day of the Seſſion, they made the following Orders, viz.

The Charge againſt the Lord Haverſham, and the other Impeachments diſmiſſed.

" The Houſe of Commons not having proſecuted their Charge, which they brought up " againſt John Lord Haverſham, for Words " ſpoken by him, at a free Conference the 13th " Inſtant; The ſaid Charge is hereby diſmiſſed.

" The Earl of Portland being impeached by " the Houſe of Commons of high Crimes and " Miſdemeanors, the 1ſt Day of April laſt; The " Impeachment is hereby diſmiſſed, there being no Articles exhibited againſt him.

" The Houſe of Commons having impeached " Charles Lord Halifax of High Crimes and Miſ- " demeanors, on the 15th Day of April laſt, and " on the 14th Day of this Inſtant June exhi- " bited Articles againſt him; to which he hav- " ing anſwered, and no further Proſecution " thereupon: The ſaid Impeachment and Artic- " les, are hereby diſmiſſed." At the ſame Time they diſmiſſed an Impeachment, that had been preferred againſt the Duke of Leeds by a former Parliament.

Remarks on the Proceedings againſt the four Lords.

It ſeems to have been agreed, both by the Lords and Commons, in this Diſpute, that the Partition Treaty was of pernicious Conſequence, and that the tranſacting it in a private Manner, without communicating it to the Council, was a High Miſdemeanor in thoſe that adviſed and tranſacted it: But whether the Commons ſuſpected that the Lords, who were generally in the Intereſt of the Old Miniſtry, would not paſs any Cenſure on the impeached Lords, or what other Reaſon influenced their Conduct, is uncertain. The Commons ſeem to have been a little dilatory in their Proceedings, and might deſign the Lords ſhould have lain under an Impeachment, during the Receſs of the Parliament. There might poſſibly be ſomething of Party alſo in the Caſe: The impeached Lords were the Whig-Leaders, and had long reigned at Court, without Controul; and the Tories who ſucceeded them at this Time, had a View, perhaps, to the preventing their Return to their Poſts, as well as to the bringing them to Juſtice for negotiating the Partition Treaty, and for the other Miſdemeanors mentioned in the Articles: There are few Proſecutions of this kind, but there is a great deal of private Pique, Intereſt, and Reſentment, uſually mixed with the Proſecutors Views of publick Good. Though this Difference may be obſerved between the one Party and the other, that when the one procure a Change of the Miniſtry, and get their Rivals removed, they ſeldom proceed Capitally againſt their Adverſaries, as the others have conſtantly done on every Turn in their Favour.

I ſhall conclude with obſerving, that both Lords and Commons ſeemed to reſent it, that the Kingdom was ſo much under the Influence of Dutch Councils, and that ſuch exorbitant Grants were made to ſome Favourites of that Nation; and this probably gave a Riſe to theſe Impeachments: For it appears that in the Year 1695, King William made a Grant to the Earl of Portland, of the Manors of Denbigh, Broomfield, and Yale, being five Parts in Six of a whole County, Part of the Demeſnes of the Prince of Wales: This Grant the Gentlemen of Wales oppoſed very ſtrenuouſly; firſt before the Lords of the Treaſury, and afterwards in Parliament. 1701. 13 W. III.

They repreſented, That the Welch were never ſubject to any but God and the King: That thoſe Lordſhips were unalienable: That they belonged to the Prince of Wales, when there was one; and the Rents now ſupported the Government there, the Salaries of the Judges, and other Officers of the Crown, being paid out of them: They ſaid, the Grant was too great for any Foreign Subject to have; and the People in the Country were too great to be ſubject to a Foreigner: That if ſuch large Grants were frequently made, there would be nothing left for the King, or his Succeſſors, to ſubſiſt on: They could not conceive, how the Glory and Grandeur of England could be upheld by a poor landleſs Crown, and a miſerable neceſſitous People: That they were not Engliſh, but Foreign Politicians, that adviſed the King to theſe Grants: That the Kings of England always reigned beſt, when they had the Affections of their Engliſh Subjects; of which they were ſecure, when the People were ſenſible the King was intirely in their Intereſt, and loved the Engliſh Soil as well as the People's Money. To which Mr. Price, then a Member of the Commons, and afterwards a Judge of great Fame, in a Speech upon this Occaſion in the Houſe, added, " We " are in a Confederacy of War, and ſome of " thoſe Confederates our Enemies in Trade, " though planted among us; ſome of them " are of the King's Council, ſome in the Ar- " my; and the common Traders have poſſeſſed " themſelves of the Out-skirts of this great " City: We find ſome or other of them Natu- " ralized, and others made Denizens: Every " Parliament, we find, endeavours for a " general Naturalization, and that warmly " ſollicited from Court: We ſee our good " Coin all gone, and our Confederates openly " coining baſe Money of Dutch Allay for us: " We ſee moſt Places of Power and Profit, " given to Foreigners: We ſee our Confede- " rates in Conjunction with the Scots, to ruin " our Engliſh Trade: We ſee the Revenues of " the Crown daily given away to one or other, " who make Sale of them, and tranſmit their " Eſtates elſewhere: We do not find any of " them buy Lands or Eſtates among us; but " what they can get from us, they ſecure in " their own Country: How can we hope for " happy Days in England, when this great " Lord, and other Foreigners, (though na- " turalized) are in the Engliſh, and alſo in the " Dutch Councils? If theſe Strangers (though " Confederates) ſhould be in different Inte- " reſts, (as they evidently are, in Point of " Trade) to which Intereſt is it to be ſuppo- " ſed theſe great Foreign Counſellors and Fa- " vourites would adhere? So that I foreſee, " when we are reduced to extreme Poverty, " (as we are now very near it) we are to be " ſupplanted by our Neighbours, and become a " Colony to the Dutch. We ought to conſider " we are Engliſhmen; and, like good Patriots, " ſtand by our Country, and not ſuffer it to " become Tributary to Strangers. We have " re-

"rejoiced, that we have beat out of this Country Popery and Slavery, and do now with as great Joy entertain Socinianism and Poverty; and yet we see our Properties daily given away, and our Liberties must follow". He desired, however, Redress rather than Punishment; and therefore neither moved for the Impeachment or Banishment of this Noble Lord; only begged, he might have no Power over them, nor they any Dependance upon him: But moved for an Address to his Majesty, to stop the Grant that was passing to the Earl of Portland, of the Lordships of Denbigh, Broomfield, and Yale, and other Lands in the Principality of Wales, and that the same be not granted, but by Consent of Parliament.

Whereupon an Address was immediately drawn up, by the unanimous Consent of the House, and presented to his Majesty the 22d of January, desiring he would put a Stop to his Grant to the Earl of Portland: To which his Majesty answered, I have a Kindness for my Lord Portland, which he has deserved of me, by his long and faithful Services; but I should not have given him these Lands, if I had imagined the House of Commons could have been concerned. I will therefore recall the Grant, and find some other Way of shewing my Favour to him.

And accordingly, in May 1696, the following Grant was made to the Lord Portland, in Recompence for the Revenues of the Principality of Wales.

1. A Grant of the Manor of Grantham, in Com' Lincoln.

2. Of the Honour of Penrith, in Com' Cumberland.

3. Of the Manor of Drakelow, in Com' Derb'.

4. Of the Manor of Terrington, in Com' Norfolk.

4. Of the Manors of Partington, Bristol, Garth, Hornsey, Thwing, Burnesly, and Seven, in Com' Ebor'.

All Parcel of the antient Revenue of the Crown of England: And of the Manor of Pevensey, in Com' Sussex.

Parcel of the Dutchy of Lancaster, and of the Lands and Hereditaments thereto belonging, to the said Earl, and his Heirs.

As of his Majesty's Manor of East-Greenwich, in Com' Kent, under the Rent of 4 l. 13 s. 4 d.

There was also granted to the said Earl all the little Remainder of the Fee-Farm Rents, worth, to be sold, 24,000 l. Given, out of mere Bounty, 23,000 l.

The Lord Portland had also a Grant out of the forfeited Estates in Ireland, of 135,820 Acres. To the Earl of Albemarle was granted, 108,633 Acres. To the Earl of Athlone, 26,480 Acres. To the Earl of Galway, 36,148 Acres. All these Noblemen being Foreigners.

And to the Lady Elizabeth Villars, a She-Favourite of King William's, was granted 95,649 Acres, being the Private Estate of his Father King James II. and valued at 25,995 l. per Ann.

Such were the Grants that put the House of Commons out of Humour with the Court; and was one Occasion of the aboveSaid Impeachment, and of the Change of the Ministry.

1701. 13W.III. Colonel Bayard's Trial.

The Trial of Colonel NICHOLAS BAYARD, of the Province of New York, America, for High-Treason, committed there, before William Atwood, Abraham de Peyster, and Robert Waters, Esquires, constituted Commissioners for the Trial of the said NICHOLAS BAYARD, and others, for High-Treason, by John Nanfan, Esq; Lieutenant-Governor, and Commander in Chief, of the Province of New York, the 19th of February, 1701: 13 W. III.

1701. 13W.III.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged, That the said Colonel Nicholas Bayard, on the 10th of December, in the 13th of his present Majesty, in the Dock-Ward of the said City and County of New-York, and divers other Days and Times, did compass, imagine, and contrive, to alter and subvert his Majesty's Government of New-York: And to that End did use many indirect Practices, to stir up a Mutiny, and procure a Desertion of his Majesty's Soldiers in the Garrison of Fort-William-Henry, near the said City of New York; and did draw in great Numbers of the said Soldiers, and others, to sign false and scandalous Libels against his said Majesty's Government, and signed the same himself: And, amongst other Things, reflecting on the Administration, had suggested in the said Libels, That his Majesty's Subjects of that Province had been oppressed, and the Government rendered cheap and vile in the Eyes of the People; and that the present General Assembly of that Province was not a lawful Assembly; by which malicious Slanders in the said Libels, he had incited his Majesty's Subjects of that Province to disown the present Authority, and cast off their Obedience to his Majesty; against the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

Mr.

1701. 13 W. III.

Mr. Attorney General, being of Opinion there was no Treaſon in the Charge, refuſed to appear and proſecute the Priſoner: Whereupon Mr. Solicitor managed the Proſecution againſt the Colonel, who complained, that the Bill was found againſt him but by eleven of the Grand-Jury, and not one of them was of Engliſh Extraction, but all Dutch: But the Court ordered a Minute to be made, that the Indictment was found by more than Twelve.

Objections to the Grand Jury,

Then the Petty Jury was called and ſworn; of whom the Priſoner obſerved, one of them was an Alien; two others were not Freeholders; and all the reſt of Dutch Extraction, and ignorant of the Engliſh Language.

and Petty Jury.

The Evidence being called, Samuel Clows was ſworn, and teſtified, That Colonel Bayard ſhewed him three Addreſſes; the firſt to the Lord Cornbury, to congratulate his Arrival in that Government: The ſecond was to the King, and the third Addreſs to the Houſe of Commons, or the Parliament of England; and in one of the laſt, ſpeaking of the Lord Bellamont's Adminiſtration, it was ſaid, that the hotteſt and moſt ignorant of the People were put into Places of Truſt: That the late General Aſſembly having choſen a Speaker they were informed was an Alien, It was moved, it might be enquired into; which Motion being rejected, ten, or one half, of the Repreſentatives, left the Houſe. However, the Reſidue proceeded to make Acts: By one of which, they gave a Sum of Money to the Lieutenant Governor, to tempt him to paſs their Acts; and another Sum to the Chief Juſtice of the Province, to find Law and Form for their Proceedings: And that theſe Practices tended to the rendering the Government vile and cheap in the Eyes of the People.

The Evidence.

Then ſeveral Soldiers, and others, teſtified, that they were deſired to ſign the ſaid Addreſſes; and ſome ſigned them, and others did not: The Addreſſes lay at the Coffee-Houſe, and there might be 200 Hands to them. One Witneſs depoſed, that it was Colonel Bayard left the ſaid Addreſſes at the Coffee-Houſe; and another ſaid, he ſaw the Colonel there; and he ſaid, it was for the Good of the Country: But none of them teſtified the Colonel deſired them to ſign the Addreſſes.

Upon this Evidence Mr. Solicitor obſerved, that the Libels ſet forth in the Indictment were proved; and thereby the Peace of the Government had been diſturbed.

The Priſoner's Defence by his Counſel.

Then the Priſoner's Counſel entered upon his Defence, and ſaid, that the Indictment did not charge him directly with any Fact, except his ſigning the ſaid Addreſſes, which they had denominated Libels: They had not ſo much as alledged, that the Peace of the Government was diſturbed; or that any Mutiny had been cauſed among the Soldiers; or that any of his Majeſty's Subjects had caſt off their Obedience to his Majeſty's Government: Only inſinuated, he had endeavoured to diſturb the Peace: And ſhould it be admitted, the ſigning of thoſe Addreſſes was any Crime, the Evidence was very lame; for it did not appear that the Addreſſes, ſigned at the Coffee-Houſe, were the ſame that Colonel Bayard promoted: But they inſiſted further, That the Subject had a Right to petition the King; and, if that was admitted, it could be no Crime to perſuade Men to ſign ſuch Petitions and Addreſſes. 1701. 13 W. III.

To which Judge Atwood anſwered for himſelf and his Brethren; If it was no Crime to petition the King, It was a Crime for them to petition the Houſe of Commons; for the King governed by his Prerogative in the Plantations.

The Priſoner's Counſel anſwered, That it was every Day's Practice, as appeared from the Votes, where they would find a Multitude of Addreſſes, Petitions, and Complaints, from the Plantations: That if the Subjects of the Plantations might not petition their King, or the Legiſlature, when they were grieved, their Condition was no better than that of Slaves: And the late Statute to check the exorbitant Actions of Governors in the Plantations, and make them accountable for their Adminiſtration in England, would be rendered ineffectual, if ever it ſhould be determined that the Subject had no Right to petition.

That the Act of Aſſembly, on which the Indictment was founded, could make no new Treaſons; and, indeed, that Act did no more than recognize the King and Queen, and declare, That whoever ſhould, by Force of Arms or otherwiſe, diſturb their Government, ſhould be deemed Rebels and Traitors; which they would have been, if that Act had never been made. Had theſe Addreſſes or Petitions been made to the French King, indeed, they might have been Treaſon; but, as it was, there was no Colour for conſtruing them to be treaſonable: That the Jury were not only to conſider, whether the Facts laid in the Indictment were proved, but whether there was any Treaſon in them? for otherwiſe, the moſt innocent Action might be called Treaſon in the Indictment, and made a Pretence for cutting off the Subject: But the Jury in theſe and other Capital Caſes, where Judges of the Law as well as of the Fact; as where one is indicted for Murder, and pleads Not Guilty generally, the Jury may bring him in guilty of Murder, Manſlaughter, or Miſadventure, according to the Nature of the Crime, and the Puniſhment the Law has appropriated to it; and are not to find a Fact Murder, or Treaſon, for being called ſo in the Indictment, if it does not come within the Deſcription the Law makes of thoſe Crimes reſpectively. Then the Priſoner having called the Miniſter of New York, and ſeveral other Perſons of Credit, to his Reputation, who teſtified, that he was a Gentleman of a good Character, and well-affected to the Government, Judge Atwood proceeded to direct the Jury, informing them, That the Priſoner was not indicted on the 25th of Edw. III. but upon an Act of Aſſembly of that Province, confirmed by his Majeſty, who might enact what Offences ſhould be adjudged High Treaſon, as well as the Parliament of England; and by this Act, it was made High Treaſon to diſturb the Peace and Quiet of the Government eſtabliſhed there: That the ſigning theſe Libels were Overt-Acts of ſuch a Diſturbance; and the drawing in Soldiers to ſign Complaints againſt their Officers and Superiors, was Treaſon at Common Law, and directed the Jury to find the Priſoner guilty.

Judge Atwood's Directions to the Jury.

Then

1701. 13 W. III.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourned to the ninth of March, when the Jury came into Court again, and ſaid, They were divided about the Evidence that had been given; and therefore could give no Verdict: Whereupon Judge Atwood declared, he had received ſeveral Letters from the Jury during their Receſs, and anſwered them; and took this Opportunity to inform the Jury, If they doubted, whether the Facts which had been proved were Treaſon, they might, however, find the Priſoner guilty; for he could afterwards move in Arreſt of Judgment, and be relieved, as to Matter of Law.

His ſcandalous Practice with them, and tyrannical Maxims.

The Priſoner's Counſel anſwered, That it ſeemed very hard, he ſhould thus give the Jury a Handle to find the Priſoner guilty, whether they believed him guilty of High Treaſon or not; and this only in Expectation of his being relieved upon a Motion in Arreſt of Judgment; and again inſiſted, that they were in this Caſe Judges of the Law as well as of the Fact; and, if they gave up this Point, they would enſlave themſelves and their Poſterity, and be for ever debarred of all Acceſs to their Prince, which would render their Condition worſe than that of the Negroes in their Service.

The Counſel's Reply to the Court.

Then the Court adjourning again till the Afternoon, the Jury brought in their Verdict upon this ſecond Receſs, that the Priſoner was Guilty.

The Colonel, by wicked Arts, convicted.

The next Day the Priſoner's Counſel moved in Arreſt of Judgment, That there was not any one Overt-Act, alledged in the Indictment, proved by two Witneſſes, as the Statute of 7 W. III. required: To which Judge Atwood anſwered, That the Jury were ſole Judges of the Evidence; and if there was any Defect in it, that was now ſupplied by the Verdict.

The Court over-ruled the Colonel's Exceptions.

Then the Colonel's Counſel objected, That the Facts laid in the Indictment were not Treaſon; for the Words in the Act of Aſſembly, on which it was founded, were, If any Perſon ſhall endeavour by Force of Arms, or otherwiſe, to diſturb the Peace and Quiet of the Government, they ſhall be deemed Rebels and Traitors: And, if the Word otherwiſe, as Mr. Solicitor inſinuated, would bring the Priſoner within the Danger of that Act, then every Breach of the Peace, every Quarrel, or trifling Battery, might be conſtrued High-Treaſon; but in Truth, their Aſſemblies in the Plantations could not make or declare any new Species of Treaſon, which was not comprehended in 25 Edw. III. or ſome ſubſequent Statute.

The Counſel alſo objecting, that two of the Jury were Aliens, the Court anſwered, this might have been a good Cauſe of Challenge before the Jurors were ſworn; but it was now too late to make that Exception: And, in ſhort, over-ruled every other Exception, how material ſoever; and declared that they were not ſufficient to arreſt Judgment upon. Whereupon Sentence was pronounced upon Colonel Bayard, as a Traitor; as it was alſo upon Alderman Hutchins, who had been tried and condemned for the like pretended Treaſon; but it ſeems they were afterwards reprieved; and I do not find that either of them were ever executed.

Remarks on Colonel Bayard's Trial.

From this Trial we may obſerve, what Tyrants ſome of our Plantation Governors are. They copy after, or rather improve upon, their Maſters: And if any Man dares to oppoſe their Avarice or Ambition, a Plot is frequently trumped up, and a Charge of High-Treaſon brought, to confound and deſtroy the beſt of the King's Subjects. They make or interpret the moſt innocent Actions to be Treaſon; and never want Judges and Lawyers to countenance their Oppreſſions, who ſhare the Plunder of the unhappy Sufferers with them: But this Proſecution, if it be fairly related, exceeds any Thing we ever met with on this Side the Atlantick Ocean: They do not only make petitioning the King or Parliament of England Treaſon, but they break through all the Rules of Right Reaſon, and Juſtice, to get Men convicted. Beſides many other arbitrary Stretches, we find their pious Chief Juſtice Atwood directing the Jury, That, whether the Facts were High-Treaſon or not, they might ſafely find the Priſoner guilty of High-Treaſon; and, by his own Confeſſion, he wrote to and tampered with the Petty Jury, when they were withdrawn to conſider of their Verdict. But, if this be Law in the Weſt-Indies, I am ſure it is not ſo in England; and the Priſoner's Counſel bravely maintained, that they could conſtitute no new Treaſons, or Methods of Trial, but what were agreeable to the Laws of England: If this be ſo, there is no doubt but Colonel Bayard had great Injuſtice done him; and it is amazing to me, that Atwood was not made an Example of in England, who gave it out for Law, That it was High-Treaſon to prefer a Petition to the Parliament of England, when they found themſelves oppreſſed by their Governors.

1701. 13 W. III.

But if the Engliſh in our Plantations have a Right to be governed by the Laws of England, and ſuch By-Laws as are made there that are not inconſiſtent with the Laws of England, and ſometimes meet with an honeſt Governor, who ſees the Laws duly executed, what is the Condition of our poor Negroe Slaves in that Part of the World, who muſt be looked upon however as Subjects, and ought to be under the Protection of the Laws and Government of England? How are theſe unfortunate Wretches, far from being the better for our admirable Laws and Conſtitution? No ſort of Cruelty or Oppreſſion, but what is exerciſed upon them without Controul. Though Racks and Tortures have long been baniſhed this happy Iſland, yet are the poor Negroes in our Dominions tortured without Mercy; and this under a Pretence, that they are of a Nature different from their Maſters, and are not to be governed by gentler Methods, which is certainly a falſe and barbarous Notion; for all Mankind in general are alike, and entitled to be treated with Humanity, though there are every where ſome froward Tempers: The Tyrants that exerciſe theſe Cruelties, deſerve the Name of Savages much more than the Negroe Servants that are unfortunately fallen into their Hands: But I ſhall have Occaſion to enlarge upon this Topick in my other Work, and therefore ſhall make no further Reflections on theſe Barbarities here; but conclude my Remarks on this Trial, with my Wiſhes, that either the Court, or Parliament of Great Britain, may one Day caſt a favourable Eye on our Plantations, and make 1701. 13W. III. some Provision, that the Subject there may have some Benefit from our excellent Laws and Constitution, and not be perpetually harrassed and oppressed by rapacious Governors, and necessitous Lawyers, sent thither to repair their shattered Fortunes, by fleecing and plundering our Colonies, since these are, at this Day, (or would be, if they were encouraged), the principal Foundations of our Wealth and Grandeur: And that our Negroe Servants there, if it is not thought fit to suffer them to be Christians, and to treat them as such, may, however, be treated with Humanity, and as if they were of the same Species, though they differ from us in Complexion.

Fuller's Trial.

The Trial of WILLIAM FULLER, for making and publishing certain false and scandalous Libels, in the Court of King's-Bench, on the 20th of May, 1702. 1 Annæ.

1702. 1 Annæ.

The Information against him.

AN Information was preferred against the said William Fuller, by Mr. Attorney, which set forth, That the Defendant, being an Impostor, and Common Lyar, and maliciously intending the late King William and his Subjects to delude and deceive, and Discords between the said late King, the Peers, and other great Officers and Subjects of the King to excite, and to bring them into Hatred and Contempt of the said late King: And in order fraudulently to obtain great Sums of Money from the said late King, he, the said William Fuller, did maliciously write, print, and publish a certain scandalous and defamatory Libel, entitled, Original Letters of the late King James, to his greatest Friends in England, with the Depositions of Thomas Jones and Thomas Widdrington Esquires, proving the the Corruption lately practised to ruin this Nation. And the Information further sets forth, That the Defendant did frame and publish another false and scandalous Libel, entitled, Twenty six Depositions of Persons of Quality and Worth; wherein Jones is said to have made Oath, that he distributed 180000*l.* among King William's Ministers, and Members of Parliament, in order to corrupt them.

Mr. Attorney opens the Evidence.

Mr. Attorney, Sir Edward Northey, in opening the Evidence against the Defendant, observed, That he had been some Time setting up for an Evidence, pretending to discover a secret Correspondence between the late King James and several Persons here in England. He made an Offer of some such Discovery about ten Years ago; and he then applied himself to the House of Commons, and they gave him Time to produce his Witnesses; but after all, he could produce none; and the House ordered him to be prosecuted as a Cheat and Impostor; and he was prosecuted accordingly, convicted, and set in the Pillory. Now, some Time last Winter, he did apply himself to some of the late King's Ministers, and pretended he would produce Thomas Jones and Thomas Widdrington, to make considerable Discoveries. They heard him; but he could never produce these Men before them; and afterwards, having no Encouragement from them, he took on him to publish these two Books, mentioned in the Information, whereof he stands now accused. He afterwards applied himself to the House of Lords; and they heard what he had to say, and gave him Time to produce his Witnesses; but he could not do it; and thereupon the Lords were pleased to direct this Prosecution. Then he applied himself to the House of Commons, and they gave him Time likewise to produce his Witnesses; but he could produce none; whereupon they voted him a Cheat, a false Accuser, and an incorrigible Rogue. My Lord, these Books were published with a very malicious Design; and not doubt he had other People, who do not now appear, to support him in it; and I doubt not but he would have set up Witnesses to have sworn whatever he would have them, if he had met with any Encouragement. He has the Impudence to put in the Frontispiece of his Books, Published by Command; but being asked in the House of Peers, By whose Command? He said, it was by his own Command: And he has published in the Books, that he would produce Witnesses to prove the distributing of 180,000*l.* to Persons in Places of Trust, and to produce Receipts for the same; and he hath an Opportunity now of doing it.

The King's Counsel also observed, That this was the Man that had applied himself to the Parliament, and to so many Ministers of State, pretending to make Discoveries in Relation to the Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales.

He confesses the Libels.

Then the Evidence being called, to prove that Fuller handed these Libels to the Press, he acknowledged, he caused both of them to be printed and published: And said, he could make it appear that what was related in those Books was true; and he would produce Jones to prove it, if his Lordship would give him his Warrant to indemnify him, without which he durst not appear.

The Court answered, He had made the same Pretence before the Lords and Commons, charging a great many Persons with corresponding with France, and affirming, that Jones would prove it by undeniable Demonstration, that he had distributed more than 180,000*l.* by the French King's Orders, to several Persons employed in the Government, but produced no Manner of Proof of this.

Fuller said, He had been summoned before the Lords and Commons, indeed, but they would would not grant him their Warrant to bring up Jones, and indemnify him; nor could he produce him here without his Lordſhip's Warrant.

Then the Chief Juſtice obſerved to the Jury, That he had acknowledged the printing theſe Books, and that he had no manner of Proof of what he advanced in them: And thereupon the Jury, without going from the Bar, found him GUILTY; and he was ſentenced to ſtand three Times in the Pillory; to be ſent to the Houſe of Correction, there to be whipped, and kept to hard Labour for five Months; to pay a Fine of one thouſand Marks, and remain in Priſon till it was paid: And being ſet in the Pillory accordingly, he was ſeverely pelted by the Mob.

He is convicted.

His Sentence.

1702. 1 Annæ.

This Man equalled the celebrated Titus Oates in Impudence, and had as much Cunning and Knavery in his Conſtitution, but did not meet with equal Succeſs, wanting thoſe glorious Patriots his Brother in Iniquity met with, to ſupport his Evidence: He was, however, more fortunate than Titus in one Reſpect; namely, to be believed in his Narrative of the Warming-Pan Plot, by that Right Reverend and Illuſtrious Writer, Biſhop Burnet.

Trial of Colonel Kirby, &c.

A State of the Caſe.

ADMIRAL Bembow commanding a Squadron of Men of War in the Weſt-Indies, for the Protection of our Trade, and underſtanding that Du Caſſe was expected with a French Squadron at Hiſpaniola, placed himſelf off St. Martha, in a Station where it was moſt likely to intercept him; and, according to his Expectations, on the 19th of Auguſt, Du Caſſe appeared in View, with ten Sail of French and Spaniards, viz. four ſeventy-gun Ships, one of forty Guns, and the other five ſmall Ships: Admiral Bembow having ſeven Men of War under his Command, of pretty good Force, engaged the Enemy in the Bredah, and was pretty well ſeconded by Captain Vincent in The Falmouth, and Captain Walton in The Ruſſel: But the reſt of his Captains refuſing to Fight, and the Admiral being wounded, he was obliged to diſcontinue the Fight, and return to Jamaica, where he cauſed the Captains that abandoned him, to be tried at a Court-Martial, for Cowardice and Breach of Orders.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes for the Queen againſt the ſaid Colonel Richard Kirby, were the Honourable John Bembow, Eſq; Admiral, two Captains, eight Lieutenants, five Maſters, and five inferior Officers, who teſtified, That the Signal of Battel being given on the the 15th of Auguſt, at Three in the Afternoon, and the ſaid Colonel Kirby having the Van, he appeared ſo backward to engage, that the Admiral was forced to ſend his Boat on Board him, and command him to make more Sail, and get abreaſt of the Enemy's Van: That the Fight began about Four, and that Kirby did not fire above three Broadſides, and then luffed up out of the Line, and out of Gun-ſhot, leaving the Admiral engaged with two French Ships till it was dark.

That the 20th, at Day-light, the Admiral, and The Ruby, George Walton Commander, were within Shot of all the Enemy's Ships, but Colonel Kirby was three or four Miles a-ſtern: Then the Admiral made a new Line, and took the Van himſelf, with a Command to the ſaid Kirby, to keep his Line, which he promiſed to do; but did not, keeping two or three Miles a-ſtern.

That the 21ſt, at Day-light, the Admiral was on the Quarter of the 2d Ship of the Enemy, and The Ruby on the Broad-ſide very near; and the Ruby was ſo much diſabled, that ſhe was forced to be towed off: That this Action laſted two Hours, during which Time Kirby lay a-broadſide of the ſtern-moſt Ship, and the Admiral commanded him twice to ply his Broadſides, but he fired not a Gun; and threatened to run the Boatſwain through with his Sword, when he repeated the Admiral's Orders to him: And that, had the ſaid Kirby and Conſtable done their Duty, they muſt have taken or deſtroyed the ſaid French Ships.

That the Admiral continued the Chaſe all Night; and that the 22d in the Morning, Kirby, with the reſt of the Ships (except The Falmouth) was three or four Miles a-ſtern, and never came up, as if they had a Deſign to ſacrifice the Admiral to the Enemy: That by this Means, a Flemiſh Ship, in Monſieur Du Caſſe's Company, on Board which were all the French and Spaniſh new Governors, and other Officers, made her Eſcape.

That

1702. 1 Annæ.

That the 23d, the Admiral and The Falmouth continued the Purſuit, but Kirby and the reſt were three or four Miles a-ſtern.

That the 24th, about Two in the Morning, the Admiral and The Falmouth came up with the Stern-moſt of the Enemy, but Kirby and the reſt were three or four Miles a-ſtern: That afterwards Kirby, being pretty near the ſaid ſtern-moſt Ship of the Enemy, fired above twelve Guns at her, but, fearing a Return from her, ran away, although ſhe was near diſabled, and the other Ships followed him: That the other three French Ships, ſeeing the Cowardice of the Engliſh, although they were three or four Miles Diſtance, bore down upon the Admiral, and reſcued the ſaid diſabled Ship: That this Day the Admiral's Leg was broke, who, notwithſtanding, commanded the Fight to be vigorouſly continued, and ſent to all the Captains to keep their Line, and behave themſelves like Engliſhmen: That upon this Kirby came on Board the Admiral, and diſſuaded him from fighting, and drew up a Paper of his Reaſons for not fighting, which he procured the reſt of the Captains to ſign; and that, during the Fight, he dodged behind the Mizen-Maſt, and diſcouraged his Men; and that he amended the Maſter's Journal of the Fight according to his own Inclinations.

Kirby's Defence.

Colonel Kirby denied the whole Charge, except his ſigning the aboveſaid Writing, and brought ſeveral Witneſſes to his Behaviour during the Action; but they ſaid little to the Purpoſe. And Colonel Kirby being aſked, Why he did not fire at the Enemy's ſtern-moſt Ship, which lay point-blank with him the 21ſt of Auguſt? he replied, Becauſe they did not fire at him, for that they had a Reſpect for him: Which Words he repeated three ſeveral Times during his Trial.

Upon due Conſideration of the Premiſes, and of the great Advantages the Engliſh had in Number of Ships, being ſeven to four, and of Guns 122 more than the Enemy; the Court was of Opinion, that he fell under the 11th, 12th, 14th, and 20th Articles of War; and adjudged accordingly, that he be ſhot to Death; but further decreed, that his Execution ſhould be reſpited till Her Majeſty's Pleaſure were known.

Condemned to be ſhot.

The Witneſſes againſt Captain Conſtable teſtified, that he never kept his firſt or ſecond Line of Battel, but acted in all Things as Colonel Kirby had done, to the Diſſervice of Her Majeſty, &c. and that he was drunk during the Fight.

Conſtable's Defence.

He called ſeveral Witneſſes to his Behaviour, who all declared, he kept the Quarter-Deck during the Engagement, and encouraged his Men to fight: That the Meſſage ſent him by the Admiral, was miſunderſtood by himſelf and ſeveral of his Men; and he prayed the Mercy of the Court.

The Court were of Opinion, that Captain John Conſtable fell under the 12th, 14th, and 20th Articles of War, and adjudged him to be immediately caſhiered, and rendered incapable of ſerving Her Majeſty, and be impriſoned during Her Majeſty's Pleaſure, and ſent to England in the firſt Ship. 1702. 1 Annæ.

The Witneſſes againſt Captain Wade depoſed, That he never kept the Line of Battel, fired all his Shot in vain, not reaching half Way to the Enemy; that his Officers telling him of it, he commanded them to fire, ſaying, the Admiral would not believe they fought, if they did not continue the Fire: That his Ship received but one Shot; and that he was drunk during the greateſt Part of the Action: That he ſigned the aforeſaid Paper, &c. and during the Fight, arraigned the Courage and Conduct of the Admiral.

He denied the Charge, called ſome Witneſſes, who ſaid little in his Behalf; and then begged the Mercy of the Court. Wade's Defence.

The Court was of Opinion, that the ſaid Cooper Wade fell under the 11th, 12th, 14th, and 20th Articles of War, and adjudged him to be ſhot to Death; but reſpited his Execution till Her Majeſty's Pleaſure was known. Condemned to be ſhot.

Captain Samuel Vincent, Commander of the Falmouth, and Captain Chriſtopher Fogg, Commander of The Bredah (the Admiral), were tried for ſigning the aboveſaid Paper againſt fighting; and ſaid, in their Defence, That being deſerted in each Day's Engagement by the reſt of the Fleet, they had Reaſon to apprehend their being taken by the Enemy: And Admiral Bembow coming into Court, declared, that during the ſix Days Fight, the ſaid Captain Fogg behaved himſelf with great Courage and Conduct; and that Captain Vincent behaved himſelf valiantly, and deſired Leave to come to the Admiral's Aſſiſtance, then engaged with the Enemy, and deſerted by all the reſt of the ſaid Ships; which he did to the Relief of the ſaid Admiral, who otherwiſe had fallen into the Hands of Monſieur Du Caſſe. The Defence of Vincent and Fogg.

The Court being of Opinion, that the ſigning of the aforeſaid Paper brought them under the Cenſure of the 20th Article of War, adjudged Captain Samuel Vincent and Captain Chriſtopher Fogg to be ſuſpended; but the Execution thereof was reſpited till his Royal Highneſs Prince George of Denmark, Lord High Admiral of England, &c. his Pleaſure be known.

Mr. Solicitor opens the Evidence.

Captain Thomas Hudſon, Commander of The Pendennis, died on Board his ſaid Ship, in the Harbour of Port-Royal, in Jamaica.

Admiral Bembow died of the Wounds he received in this Engagement at Jamaica, on the Fourth of November; and the Queen did him that Juſtice to order the Captains, Kirby and Wade, who ſacrificed him to the Enemy, to be ſhot to Death; and they were executed accordingly on Ship-board, in Plymouth Harbour, not being ſuffered to ſet their Feet on Shore in England again, after they had ſo ſhamefully deſerted their Admiral, and diſhonoured their Country: But thus it will ever be, where Men are preferred for Money and Friendſhip, and not for their Merit. Admiral Bembow dies of his Wounds. Kirby and Wade executed.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged, That Mrs. Pleasant Rawlins, being a Virgin, and Grandaughter and Heir of William Rawlins, Senior, deceased, and Daughter and Heir of William Rawlins, Junior, deceased; and being above the Age of sixteen Years, and under the Age of Eighteen; and having an Estate in Moveables, and in Lands and Tenements, viz. in Money, Goods, and Chattels, to the Value of 2000 l. and Lands and Tenements of the Value of 20 l. per Annum, to the Heirs of her Body, the Prisoners Haagen Swendsen, &c. (together with one Thomas Holt) did, on the 6th Day of November, 1702, at the Parish of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, for the Lucre of the Estate and Substance of the said Pleasant Rawlins, unlawfully, feloniously, and violently, and against the Will of the said Pleasant Rawlins, take and carry her away, with an Intent to marry her to the said Haagen Swendsen; who being a Man of a dishoneſt Conversation, and of none, or a very little Estate or Substance, did then, and there, by the Help and Procurement of the said other Prisoners, feloniously marry the said Pleasant Rawlins, and carnally know her: And that the said Thomas Holt, the Day and Year aforesaid, did knowingly and feloniously receive the said Pleasant Rawlins and Haagen Swendsen, and did incite, aid, and abet the said Haagen Swendsen to lie with the said Pleasant Rawlins, and carnally know her, to the Displeasure of Almighty God, the Disparagement of the said Pleasant Rawlins, the Grief of her Friends, against the Queen's Peace, &c.

Swendsen being a Foreigner, a Jury was sworn, one half whereof were Foreigners.

Mr. Solicitor opens the Evidence.

Then Mr. Solicitor-General opened the Evidence, and said, That it was formerly reckoned a less Crime to steal a Fortune of ten thousand Pounds, than to steal the Value of a Shilling of her Money or Goods; but, in the third Year of Henry VII. to cure this Defect in the Law, a Statute was made, whereby the taking away a Woman, having Lands or Goods, or being an Heir apparent, contrary to her Will, and afterwards marrying her, was made Felony; and upon this Law the present Indictment is grounded.

Pleasant Rawlins was the Daughter of Mr. William Rawlins, who having left her a considerable Estate, appointed George Bright and William Busby her Guardians. Mr. Bright being dead, the other Guardian, Mr. Busby, for the better Education of Mrs. Rawlins, placed her under the Care of his Sister, Sabina Busby: Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins have lodged, about three Years last past, at the House of the Widow Nightingale. Haagen Swendsen, with Mrs. Baynton, lodged at Mrs. Blake's in Holbourn, and there they first projected and contrived how they might make a Prey of this young Gentlewoman. The first Step they took towards executing this Design, was, to get Lodgings at Mrs. Nightingale's House for Mrs. Baynton; for which Purpose she was to pass for a Country Gentlewoman, of a plentiful Fortune: One Mrs. St. John was sent to Mrs. Nightingale to take Lodgings for Mrs. Baynton, commending her to be a very good Woman, and that having the Misfortune of a Law-Suit, and being obliged for that Reason to attend it in Town, 'twas her greatest Care to lodge in so reputable a House as Mrs. Nightingale's was: Under this Pretence Lodgings were there taken for her. At her first coming, she was forced to put on a Disguise; she seemed to live a virtuous Life, that she might ingratiate herself into the Favour of the Family, as often as she had an Opportunity of conversing with any of them: She pretended she had a Brother of a good Estate, one of the best Men in the World; and she hoped he would shortly come to Town, that she might see him. In a little Time after, came this Swendsen (being nothing related to her), and appeared as her Brother, and frequently visited her under Pretence of that Relation. But Mrs. Baynton was too well known in Town to continue long undiscovered: Notice was soon given to Mrs. Busby, of the vicious Life Mrs. Baynton had led, and that she was not fit to be in the same House with her. Mrs. Baynton having discovered this, and finding she had no Time to bring about her Designs by Frauds and Wiles, and that no other Way was left but open Force, the Prisoner at the Bar and she took Measures accordingly; and, in Order thereto, 'twas agreed, that a Writ should be taken out against Mrs. Rawlins: Mrs. Baynton contrives to get Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Busby into a Coach, and, at a Place appointed, a Signal was given, and the Writ executed; and Mrs. Busby, Mrs. Rawlins, and Mrs. Baynton were all carried in a Coach to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane, where particular Care was taken to separate Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins, because, unless they did that, they could not hope to accomplish their Designs: Mrs. Busby was by Force kept at that Tavern, without any Process against her, till the Marriage was over; but Mrs. Rawlins was forcibly carried to Hartwell's, the Bailiff's, House. Mrs. Baynton pretended to be much concerned for Mrs. Rawlins, and went in all Haste to call some of her Friends to be Bail for her. Some Time after Mrs. Rawlins had got to Hartwell's, in comes Mrs. Baynton, pretending that, by mere Accident, she had discovered her being there, hearing her Name as she was passing by the Door; that she had been in Search, but could find no Help, and that her last Hopes was her dear Brother Swendsen, and she doubted not but he would bail her. He, by Agreement, had been placed near the Bailiffs, and ſo was ſoon found, and brought thither, and was very ready to aſſiſt her. In order to her Diſcharge, the Priſoner, the Bailiff, and Mrs. Baynton, carry Mrs. Rawlins to another Tavern, where they had a Parſon ready for their Purpoſe; and there this young Gentlewoman, through divers Artifices, was conſtrained to marry him.

The Evidence.

The Evidence for the King, being called, Mr. William Busby, Guardian to Mrs. Rawlins, was ſworn, and teſtified, That ſhe was the Daughter of William Rawlins, deceaſed; who left his Eſtate to Dr. Bright and this Witneſs, to be ſold for the Payment of his Debts and Legacies, and gave the Surpluſage to his Daughter, which amounted to about 2000 Pounds; and ſhe had alſo an Eſtate in Lands, of the Value of twenty Pounds a Year; and that ſhe was at this Time near eighteen Years of Age, and unmarried.

Mrs. Nightingale depoſed, That Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins, and Mrs. Busby, had lodged at her Houſe three Years; and that Mrs. St. John came to inquire for Lodgings at her Houſe, for a Country Lady, (which afterwards proved to be Mrs. Baynton, the Priſoner): That ſhe (the Witneſs) enquired of her Character, and was informed, Mrs. Baynton was of a very good Family; whereupon ſhe conſented ſhe ſhould come and board at her Houſe, with her Maid, who happened to be a Neighbour's Daughter: That Mrs. Baynton afterwards introduced Mr. Swendſen, as her Brother; and deſired he might dine at her Houſe, which ſhe agreed he ſhould, at the Rate of Twelve-pence a Meal: But it was not long before they perceived an extraordinary Familiarity between Mrs. Baynton and Mr. Swendſen, more than was uſual between Brother and Siſter, and ſhe gave Notice of it to the Family, deſigning to have given Mrs. Baynton Warning; but ſhe prevented her, by ſaying, her Affairs permitted her going into the Country, and ſhe deſigned to return thither when her Month was up: She did not go however, pretending a Fellow was come to Town, that intended to put a Cheat upon her, and ſhe muſt ſtay a Week longer, to take out a Statute againſt him.

Mrs. Busby teſtified, That her Brother Busby, being one of Mrs. Rawlins's Guardians, put her under the Care of her Husband; who dying about three Years ago, ſhe and Mrs. Rawlins went and boarded with Mrs. Nightingale, where they had continued ever ſince: And that Mrs. Baynton, coming to lodge there lately, introduced Mr. Swendſen into their Company, who went for her Siſter's Husband: And Mrs. Nightingale agreed, that he might dine there at Twelve-pence a Meal, and he dined there accordingly, nine or ten Times; but at length, obſerving an extraordinary Familiarity between Mrs. Baynton and Swendſen, they began to ſuſpect her Virtue.——That Mrs. Baynton knowing it was their Cuſtom to go to Oxenden Chapel every Friday Morning, ſaid, ſhe was going to Golden-Square, and would take them in her Coach, and ſet them down near the Chapel; and accordingly they accepted of her Offer, and went with her in the Coach; but being come to Dartmouth-Street, they heard ſome body bid the Coach ſtop; and immediately Hartwell, the Bailiff, crowded into the Coach, and laying hold of Mrs. Rawlins, ſaid, his Concern was with that Lady and the Witneſs, and carried them all to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane: That ſhe intreated him to carry them to Fleet-Street, where ſhe had Friends; but he was angry, and would not hear of it; and Mrs. Baynton left them, and pretended ſhe would go ſee for her Friends: Whereupon ſhe and Mrs. Rawlins were in a great Conſternation; and ſhe (the Witneſs) took Mrs. Rawlins by the Arm, and ſaid, She would live and die with her; but the Bailiffs forced them aſunder, and carried her (the Witneſs) to another Room; and as ſhe was going, ſhe put her Head out of a Window, and cried, Murder! which brought ſome of the Neighbours in; but the Bailiffs telling them, it was an Arreſt, they would not meddle in it; however, a little Boy offering to go of an Errand for her, ſhe ſent for two Gentlemen, who came to her; and after a little Time, the Bailiffs left her (the Witneſs) with the Gentlemen, without taking any Bail; and ſhe never ſaw Mrs. Rawlins again, till the next Day at Noon.

Mrs. Berkley teſtified, That ſhe demanding of Mr. Swendſen, when he was apprehended, If that wicked Woman, Mrs. Baynton, was his Siſter? He anſwered, No; but he had gained his End, in making her a Tool to his dear Wife: He would gratify her for what ſhe had done, and put her away on Monday, and ſee her no more.

Blake depoſed, That Mr. Swendſen and Mrs. Baynton lodged at his Houſe in Red-Lion-Street, ſix or ſeven Months: That he had known Mrs. Baynton theſe twelve Years; ſhe was no Country Lady, but worked for her Living, and went from his Houſe five or ſix Weeks before this Matter happened, and he never ſaw any Harm by her.

Wakeman, the Bailiff's Follower being ſworn, teſtified, That Hartwell took him and Spurr to Stretton-Grounds, where they ſtopped a Coach, and Hartwell went into the Coach, and arreſted the Lady; and then they drove to the Star and Garter in Drury-Lane, and from thence ſhe was carried to Hartwell's Houſe: That one Mr. Holt took this Witneſs from Hartwell's Houſe to the Five Bells in Witch-Street, where he ſaw Mr. Swendſen, the Priſoner; and Holt made him drink, and enquired after the Lady they had arreſted: That returning to Hartwell's Houſe again, he was told, the Lady was carried to the Vine-Tavern in Holbourn, whither he went, and ſaw Mr. Swendſen there; and the Lady was looking out of a Window over-againſt the Tavern; he did not ſee her at that Tavern: And, it being demanded, If they had any Proceſs againſt Mrs. Busby, he anſwered, None at all.

Swendſen's Defence.

Mrs. Rawlins's Evidence.

Then Mrs. Pleaſant Rawlins was ſworn, and gave the following Evidence.

I was in a Coach, going to Oxenden Chapel with Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Baynton, and three Bailiffs came about the Coach, and carried us to the Star and Garter Tavern in Drury-Lane; they forced me up Stairs into a back Room, but we got into a forward Room; we had not been been there long, before they pretended Mrs. Busby and me; Mrs. Baynton was gone for our Friends, as ſhe pretended: I was in a very great Fright; and Mrs. Busby ſaying, We will die together, they took me by Force from her; Hartwell ſwore a great Oath, and thruſt me down Stairs, and forced me out of a back Door into an Alley. When he went to put me into a Coach, I cried out Murder! then he threatened to put me into Newgate. He carried me to his own Houſe, where Mrs. Baynton came in, pretending, ſhe heard my Name as ſhe was going by; ſhe ſaid, ſhe would ſend for her Brother, who ſhould bail me. He came, and we went to the Vine-Tavern in Holbourn, where I was an Hour or two before I heard any thing of Marrying; but after we had dined, ſhe begged of me to have her Brother; and ſaid, If I did not marry him, I ſhould be ruined: I deſired my Friends might be ſent for; but they would not admit of it. She asked me to let her ſee the Ring off my Finger; which I refuſing, ſhe forced it from me, and ſaid, ſhe would go and get a Wedding Ring made by it. When they brought the Ring, they ſaid to me, Will you be married or no? I ſaid, I would not, without the Conſent of my Friends: They ſaid, if I did not, I ſhould be ruined for ever; and they brought a Parſon and a Clark up Stairs: The Parſon ſaying, I hear there is a Couple to be married, asked no Queſtions, but told me, If I did not marry this Gentleman, I ſhould be ſent to Newgate: So, with many Threats and Perſwaſions, they at laſt prevailed with me to marry; I was forced to marry him out of Fear, not of going to Newgate, but of being murdered. It was about Three in the Afternoon when I was married, and, about Candle-Light, they carried me to Blake's Houſe, in Red-Lion-Fields: They thruſt me up Stairs, and ordered to have a Bed ſheeted. Mrs. Baynton bid me undreſs, and go to Bed: I ſaid, I would not: Then ſhe ſaid, ſhe would pluck the Clothes off my Back; and, at length, ſhe forced me to go to Bed: It was Saturday Morning before I was releaſed; then ſome of my Friends came to the Place where I was.

The Lord Chief Juſtice demanding of Swendſen, What Anſwer he gave to this Evidence? He ſaid, He was very much unprepared, having had ſo little Time allowed him, and deſired Counſel: The Court anſwered, He could not have Counſel; and as for Time, he had been told, If he could have ſhewn any Cauſe, his Trial ſhould have been put off: Then he begged very importunately, that his Wife (Mrs. Rawlins) might ſtand by herſelf; intimating, ſhe would be prompted what to ſay by the Company about her: The Counſel anſwered, He did this on Purpoſe to frighten her; however, the Court at length conſented ſhe ſhould remove to another Place: After which,

Swendſen's Defence.

Swendſen ſaid, The firſt Time he was at Mrs. Nightingale's, he was deſired by Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Baynton to make a Bowl of Punch; which he did; and they were very merry over it: Then he invited them to go on Board a Ship; which they all did, and, in a ſhort Time, became very well acquainted, inſomuch, that they invited him the Week following to partake of a Treat; accordingly he went, and met one Mr. Pugh there, who, at that Time, courted Mrs. Rawlins; but the little Time he (the Priſoner) was acquainted with her, he diſcerned ſhe had a Kindneſs for him, as he had for her: That he thereupon told her, he could not be eaſy while ſhe ſuffered Pugh to kiſs her; ſhe bid him be eaſy, and ſaid, it ſhould be remedied.

1702. 1 Annæ.

Here Mrs. Rawlins denied ſhe ever ſaid any ſuch Words: Then Swendſen demanded, If ſhe did not ſay, ſhe would not eat a Bit, if he did not ſit by her? This ſhe alſo denied; whereupon he demanded, If ſhe did not give him ſome Encouragement? She anſwered, She knew of no ſuch Thing.

Then the Chief Juſtice told her, She ought to ſpeak the Truth, becauſe his Life depended on it; and asked her, If ſhe ever did admit his Courtſhip in order to marry him: She anſwered, She remembered no ſuch Thing, ſhe did not know ſhe ſhewed him any more Kindneſs than the reſt of the Family did; nor was ever in his Company alone.

Then the Priſoner ſaid, That once after Dinner, ſhe heaped peeled Walnuts upon his Plate, till the Company took Notice of it: That at other Times ſhe kiſſed him, and ſqueezed him by the Hand; and when he talked of marrying her, ſeemed very well pleaſed: But ſhe denied all this, and ſaid, ſhe never was with him alone: And Mrs. Busby declared, She ſaw nothing of all this. Then he called a Picture-Drawer, to give an Account of ſome amorous Converſation between them, when they came to his Houſe to ſee Mrs. Baynton's Picture that was drawing; but the Painter could teſtify nothing of that Nature: Whereupon the Chief Juſtice told him, He was in a great deal of Danger, if he could produce no better Witneſſes.

The Priſoner proteſted, he knew nothing of the Arreſt, directly or indirectly, till he ſaw her in the Bailiff's Houſe: And, that ſhe married him with as much Freedom as a Woman could.

Then the Chief Juſtice bid her give an Account, how ſhe was carried from the Bailiff's Houſe.

Mrs. Rawlins anſwered, When I was at Hartwell's, the Bailiff's Houſe, Mrs. Baynton pretended to come by accidentally, and that ſhe heard my Voice; and came in, and ſaid, How do you do, Mrs. Rawlins? You know how I do, ſaid I. She pretended to help me, and propoſed to go to her Brother to bail me; and he came, and I was carried from thence in a Coach to the Vine-Tavern, and Swendſen went in the Coach with her.

The Priſoner's Witneſſes.

The Priſoner then called the Parſon that married them, for a Witneſs, who depoſed, That a Gentleman fetched him and his Clark from the Fleet, to the Vine-Tavern in Holbourn; and being introduced to the Priſoner, he asked him, What he was to do? And he anſwered, to marry him to that young Gentlewoman: That he read the Licenſe, and found it a true Licenſe; and asking the Lady her Name, found it to be the ſame with that in the Licenſe: Then he asked her, If ſhe was willing to be married? and ſhe ſaid, ſhe was willing; and another Gentlewoman was with her, that ſaid ſhe was her Siſter: Whereupon he ſaid, If you conſent, and your Siſter is willing, here is a Licenſe,

1702. 1 Annæ.

Licenſe, and I believe there is no Danger in marrying you. The Chief Juſtice demanded, If the Licenſe directed the Marriage ſhould be performed in a Tavern? and if he took the Queen's Duty? He anſwered, No; but he returned their Names to the Superviſors; he never married any in a Tavern before, and would never do it again; and acknowledged, he ſtaid and dined with the new-married Couple.

Then he called Mr. Cotchet and Mrs. Cotchet of the Vine-Tavern, as Witneſſes; and being aſked by the Chief Juſtice, If they heard any Noiſe, or ſaw any Violence uſed to the young Woman, they ſaid, they obſerved none: That they were ſhewn a lower Room when they came in, but choſe to go up Stairs; and ſoon after Mr. Holt, the Vintner, came down and went out; and that Hartwell, the Bailiff, told them, it was an Arreſt, and that the Parſon was to be Bail for the Lady; but afterwards they ſaid, there was a Wedding above, and they admired at it, that there ſhould be a Wedding and Bailiffs there: And after all was over, the Gentleman and the Lady went out at the Back-door, and took Coach, and the Lady did not ſeem diſcontented.

Sarah Walker, the Cook at the Vine, depoſed, That when the young Gentlewoman came in, ſhe heard there was to be a Wedding, and ſhe went up Stairs to receive Directions for the Supper, and the young Lady ſat at one End of the Room, and ſeemed very melancholy; and when ſhe aſked her what Sauce ſhe would have, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would eat nothing at all; but when ſhe went away, ſhe did not ſeem melancholy.

Blake, the Man's Daughter where ſhe was put to Bed, depoſed, That they came to their Houſe about three or four o'Clock in the Afternoon, and went to Bed about two Hours after, and roſe again at ſeven in the Evening, and went away; and that ſhe helped to undreſs her when ſhe went to Bed, the Lady deſiring ſhe might wait on her; and that Mr. Swendſen told her, the young Lady was his Wife.

Blake himſelf being called as a Witneſs, and aſked what he knew of Mrs. Baynton, anſwered, that he had known her twelve Years, and it was reported ſhe was married to Mr. Baynton, who died about four Years ſince; but confeſſed ſhe lay in at his Houſe about four Months ago. And being aſked, Why, when he knew ſhe was ſuch a Woman, and brought a Gentlewoman to his Houſe, and ordered a Bed to be made, he would admit of it? Blake anſwered, he did not know it was a clandeſtine Thing.

The Conſtable, who apprehended Swendſen, teſtified, That he had a Warrant to take up the Men that ran away with the young Gentlewoman, and he went with ſome Gentlemen to Mr. Blake's Houſe, in Red-Lion-Street, where he found Mr. Swendſen and the Lady; and one of the Gentlemen (her Friend) aſked her, If ſhe was married? She anſwered, Yes, there is my Huſband, and ſeemed very much ſatisfied: Whereupon he wiſhed her Joy, and ſaid, if ſhe pleaſed to go with him to the Recorder's, there was her Guardian to approve what ſhe had done; but ſhe would go to the next Juſtice of Peace.

Here the Priſoner obſerved, that ſhe ſaid to the Conſtable, I am very well content with the Marriage, and this is the Ring that married us. Mrs. Rawlins anſwered, ſhe did not know but ſhe might ſay ſo, for ſhe was not in her Senſes, and did not know what ſhe ſaid: And the Court demanding, If ſhe had been in Bed then? ſhe anſwered, Yes, they had been in Bed about an Hour; that Mrs. Baynton threatened her, and ſaid, ſhe muſt own him for her Husband, or they were all ruined. 1702. 1 Annæ.

Then Juſtice Baber teſtified, That on Friday, the 6th Inſtant, the Priſoner, the Lady, and another came to his Houſe, in York-Buildings, and the Priſoner in particular deſired he would adminiſter a voluntary Oath to her, whether ſhe was married to him; but he did not think he had any Thing to do to give ſuch an Oath, and therefore did not tender it, and perceived ſhe was in great Diſorder; that they came to him in a Coach, and had then no Officer with them; and that ſhe did ſay, voluntarily, ſhe was married with her own Conſent.

Bulkley, the Priſoner's Barber, depoſed, That he and the young Lady called at his Door, in York-Buildings, in a Coach, on the the 7th of November, and the Priſoner told him he was married, and that was his Wife; and he wiſhing them much Joy and Happineſs: She anſwered, ſhe did not queſtion it, ſince what ſhe had done was with her own voluntary Conſent.

Hudſon, Blake's Man, teſtified, That Mr. Swendſen came with the Lady to their Houſe on Saturday Morning; and Mr. Swendſen ſaid, That was his dear Wife; and ſhe ſaid, This is my dear Husband; and took him about the Neck and kiſſed him.

Mr. Green depoſed, That he was with them before the Recorder, and the Lady owned, ſhe was married to the Gentleman by her own Conſent, without Force or Compulſion; and the Recorder anſwered, he was afraid ſhe was drawn in by that Spark, a Bully of the Town; and Mr. Swendſen and the Witneſs being ſent out, he did not know what ſhe ſaid afterwards.

Then the Priſoner called ſeveral to his Reputation. One ſaid, he had dealt with him for 3000 l. Another ſaid, he had a good Character in Norway, and ſeveral Ships were conſigned to him; and a third ſaid, he knew him, and he was eſteemed worth 10,000 Dollars in Norway, and held to be a very honeſt Man. See the Conviction, Sentence, and Execution, after Mrs. Baynton's Trial.

Here Mr. Solicitor General obſerved, That the Priſoner had given no Anſwer to the principal Part of their Evidence, namely, the Force; for if the taking and detaining Mrs. Rawlins was by Force, as the Witneſſes teſtified, and if ſhe was married while ſhe was under that Force, no ſubſequent Act or Conſent of hers could leſſen the Offence, if the Jury ſhould give Credit to the Priſoner's Evidence, and believe her Conſent was real.

She had confeſſed, indeed, that after ſhe had been hurried from Tavern to Tavern, ſhe did declare he was her Husband, and that ſhe conſented to the Marriage; but what afterwards happened plainly ſhewed it was through Fear, and nothing elſe: Had ſhe really conſented to the Marriage, why was ſhe carried to the Juſtice of Peace, to take an Oath, that ſhe was married by her own voluntary Conſent? While the Priſoner held held her by the Hand before the Recorder, ſhe confeſſed ſhe married with her free Conſent; but as ſoon as the Priſoner was withdrawn ſhe burſt out into a Flood of Tears, and declared ſhe was married by Conſtraint: He obſerved alſo from the Licenſe, that the whole Matter was of the Priſoner's contriving, for the Licenſe bore Date three Weeks before the Time of the Marriage, which ſhewed how long they had waited for an Opportunity to accompliſh this Deſign; and when he took out the Licenſe he made Oath her Age was Twenty-five, and his own Thirty-five. Then the Queen's Counſel called a Witneſs, to teſtify what the Lady ſaid before the Recorder; who depoſed, That while Mr. Swendſen held her by the Hand ſhe owned the Marriage, but when he was withdrawn ſhe threw herſelf upon him (the Witneſs), and deſired him to ſtand by her, for ſhe was undone; and giving much the ſame Evidence ſhe had done in Court, ſhe ſaid what ſhe had done was all by Force, and out of Fear.

Then Mr. Taylor teſtified, That when the Priſoner took out the Licenſe, he made Oath the Lady was Twenty-five; and that the Licenſe was dated the Day he took it out.

The Chief Juſtice then ſummed up the Evidence, and gave the following Directions to the Jury.

1. You are to know, that if ſhe was taken away by Force, and afterwards married, though by her Conſent, yet is he guilty of Felony: For it is the Taking away by Force that makes the Crime, if there be a Marriage, though by her Conſent.

2. In the next Place it is to be obſerved, that ſhe was taken away by Force, and a Stratagem was uſed to give an Opportunity thereunto, and the Arreſt was but a Colour.

3. You may conſider upon the Evidence, how far the Priſoner was concerned in the firſt Force. It is true, he was not at the Arreſt, and did not appear until ſhe was brought to Hartwell's Houſe; and under that Pretence of Bailing her, ſhe was carried to the Vine-Tavern, where there was a Parſon ready, and the Marriage was had in ſuch a Manner as you have heard: Now it is left to you to determine, whether the Marriage was not the End of the Arreſt? And if ſo, how it could be poſſible for ſuch a Force to be committed to effect the Priſoner's Deſign, and he not be privy to it?

4. If it can be imagined he was not privy to the colourable Arreſt, yet ſhe was under a Force when he came to her at Hartwell's Houſe, and from thence ſhe was carried by Force into the Vine-Tavern, where ſhe was married: That is a forcible Taking by him at Hartwell's Houſe: And though, when ſhe was at the Vine-Tavern, ſhe did expreſs her Conſent to be married; yet it appears, even then, ſhe was under a Force, and had no Power to help herſelf: She was alſo under a Force when ſhe was carried to Blake's, and put to Bed: Nay, when ſhe was carried to the Juſtice of Peace, even then ſhe was under a Force; and all that ſhe ſaid was not freely, but out of Fear: Such a Force would avoid any Bond, for ſhe was under Impriſonment. But, however, if the firſt Taking was by Force, and ſhe had conſented to the Marriage, the Offence is the ſame; it is Felony.

After the Charge Mr. Swendſen deſired his Wife might be aſked, Whether ſhe did not, upon her Knees, ſwear ſhe went away from him as good a Maid as ſhe came to him.

1702. 1 Annæ.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, That was a Queſtion need not be aſked, ſince the Marriage was ſo plainly proved: This was ſufficient to bring him within the Statute, though the Marriage was never conſummated.

Baynton's Trial.

After the Trial of Haagen Swendſen, Sarah Baynton, John Hartwell, and John Spurr, were ſet to the Bar, and a Jury charged with them; being indicted for aiding and aſſiſting the ſaid Haagen Swendſen, to bring about and accompliſh the ſaid forcible Marriage with Mrs. PleaſantRawlins. (The Indictment will be found in the preceeding Trial.)

In opening the Indictment and the Evidence, Mr. Solicitor obſerved, That the Law, to ſhew how odious ſuch Offences were, and to deter all Perſons whatever from committing them, had made no Difference between the Principals and Acceſſaries; the Abetters, Procurers, and Contrivers were declared and adjudged Principal Felons.

The Evidence.

The Evidence being called, Mrs. Busby depoſed, as ſhe had done at the former Trial, That Mrs. Rawlins's Father left her about 2000*l.* and her Grandfather 20*l. per Annum* in Lands.

Mrs. Nightingale teſtified, That Mrs. Busby and Mrs. Rawlins had lodged at her Houſe three Years, when Mrs. Baynton came under the Character of a Country Gentlewoman, and took Lodgings at her Houſe, and introduced Swendſen as her Brother. (As in Swendſen's Trial).

Mrs. Busby alſo teſtified, That ſhe and Mrs. Rawlins were arreſted in a Coach, and carried to the Star and Garter in Drury-Lane, (as at the former Trial): And the Court demanding, if Mrs. Baynton and Hartwell were at the Tavern with them, ſhe anſwered, Mrs. Baynton was there, and pretended to go for Friends to bail them; but did not come again while ſhe was there. That Hartwell forced the young Lady from her at the Tavern; and when ſhe put her Head out of the Window, and cried after her, Spurr ſaid, What have you got by your Bawling? We are better known here than you are. This was the firſt Notice ſhe took of Spurr, but ſhe underſtood he rode behind the Coach that brought them thither, and that he was left to keep her, when Mrs. Rawlins was forced away from her.

Wakeman, the Bailiff's Follower, depoſed, That Hartwell employed him in this Arreſt, and told him the Writ was againſt Mrs. Rawlins: That Spurr ſtopped the Coach, and Hartwell ordered it to drive to the Star and Garter Tavern; and when they were there, Hartwell came to the young Lady, and ſaid, You muſt go to my Houſe; and ſhe ſaid, O Lord, don't part us: But he forced her away, put her into a Coach, and carried her thither; and from Hartwell's Houſe ſhe was carried to the Vine-Tavern in Holbourn. The Court demanding, if they had any Writ againſt Mrs. Busby, Wakeman anſwered, No; and That againſt Mrs. Rawlins was but for 20*l.* though Hartwell ſaid, it was for 200*l.* And that when he went away, he left Spurr and Hartwell at the Vine-Tavern.

Then Mrs. Rawlins teſtified, That ſhe was arreſted on the 6th of November, as ſhe was going in a Coach to Oxenden Chapel, and carried to the Star and Garter Tavern; where Hartwell forced her from Mrs. Busby, carried her to his own Houſe, and from thence to the Vine-Tavern in Holbourn, as ſhe had done at the Trial of Swendſen.

Hartwell demanding of Mrs. Rawlins, which of them was Hartwell; ſhe anſwered, that his Name was Hartwell; and that he took her about the Middle, forced her away, and drove her down Stairs; and when ſhe cried out Murder, he ſaid, if ſhe did not hold her Tongue he would ſend her to Newgate that Minute: And having her at his Houſe in Witch-Street, Mrs. Baynton came in, pretending ſhe heard her Name as ſhe paſſed by, and ſaid ſhe would ſend for her Brother to bail her; whereupon ſhe went out, and returned with her Brother Swendſen in half a Quarter of an Hour: After which, Mrs. Baynton, her Brother, and Hartwell, carried her in a Coach to the Vine-Tavern in Holbourn, and Holt was there for the other Bail: They were willing to take him, but were very ſcrupulous about Swendſen's being Bail; and told her, in ſhort, ſhe muſt marry Swendſen, and that would put an End to it. Mrs. Baynton ſaid, if ſhe did not marry her Brother, ſhe muſt go to Newgate: That ſhe deſired her Friends might be ſent for, but they would not permit it; and when ſhe refuſed to let Mrs. Baynton have her Ring off her Finger, ſhe forced it from her, and ſaid, ſhe would go and get a Wedding-Ring made by it. That Holt brought in the Parſon and Clerk, and the Parſon asked no Queſtions, but told her, if ſhe did not marry that Gentleman ſhe ſhould be ſent to Newgate; and with many Threats ſhe was at length prevailed on to marry Swendſen; but ſhe did it not out of Fear of going to Newgate, but of being murdered. That ſhe did not ſtay at the Vine a quarter of an Hour after ſhe was married, but Swendſen and Mrs. Baynton carried her to Blake's Houſe in Holbourn, where Baynton and Blake's Daughter undreſſed her, and ſhe was in Bed there an Hour or two. The Court demanding, if ſhe ſaw Hartwell at the Vine-Tavern before ſhe was married; ſhe ſaid, Yes; Hartwell ſaid, he would conſider with Mrs. Baynton about the Bail, and they all went out and left her alone, and Mrs. Baynton returned, and told here they refuſed the Bail.

Baynton's Defence.

Mrs. Baynton, being directed to enter upon her Defence, demanded of Mrs. Rawlins, If ſhe did not ſay, when the Family was at Church, ſhe wiſhed Mr. Swendſen was there? and Mrs. Rawlins anſwering, ſhe did not remember ſhe ſaid ſo; Mrs. Baynton aſked her, If ſhe did not come to her Bed-ſide, and kiſs and hug her, and talk with Pleaſure of Mr. Swendſen? Mrs. Rawlins anſwered, may-be ſhe might do ſo; but ſhe did not ſpeak it with a Deſign to have him.

Mrs. Baynton demanded, If ſhe did not ſay, ſhe had a great deal of ill Uſage, and that ſhe lived more like a Servant than any thing elſe? Mrs. Rawlins anſwered, ſhe did not know but ſhe might: And the Chief Juſtice demanding, Why ſhe did ſo? ſhe anſwered, ſhe could give no Account of it.

The Chief Juſtice then aſked her, If ſhe bid Mrs. Baynton tell Swendſen, that ſhe knew a Gentlewoman at her own Diſpoſal, that would make him a very good Wife? Mrs. Rawlins anſwered, ſhe might ſay ſhe wiſhed her Brother a very good Wife, but ſhe did not ſpeak it with a Deſign to marry her Brother; but was reſolved to take Advice of her Friends.

The Court then demanded, If ſhe ever told Mrs. Baynton ſhe wiſhed herſelf Mr. Swendſen's Wife? She anſwered, ſhe could not tell whether ſhe did or not: But being aſked, if ſhe told Mrs. Baynton that, notwithſtanding what ſhe ſaid of Mr. Swendſen, ſhe would never marry without the Conſent of her Friends? She anſwered, ſhe often ſaid, ſhe would never marry without their Conſent.

It being demanded, If there had been any Courtſhip carried on between Mr. Swendſen and her? She ſaid, no more Courtſhip to her than to all the Family: Being aſked, if ſhe did not ſay ſhe would have no body but Swendſen? She denied ſhe ever ſaid ſo. Then Mrs. Baynton deſired ſhe might be asked, Whether ſhe conſented to be taken away, directly or indirectly? Mrs. Rawlins replied, it was all without her Knowledge; ſhe never conſented to it.

Being asked, if ſhe did not ſend back Mr. Pugh's Letter, and deſire him to come no more, for ſhe would have nothing to ſay to him? She anſwered, ſhe did ſend back his Letters, but did not remember ſhe ſaid any thing to Mrs. Baynton about it.

The Court asking, Why ſhe ſent his Letters back? She ſaid, It was not upon Mr. Swendſen's Account; but upon ſome unhandſome Things they had heard of him: And Mrs. Busby ſaid, They were ſent back by their Advice.

The Chief Juſtice again ſolemnly demanded of her, by the Oath ſhe had taken, If ſhe conſented to her being taken away after the Manner ſhe was, or gave any Encouragement to Mr. Swendſen? She anſwered, No; ſhe did not know ſhe gave him any Manner of Encouragement.

Then Mrs. Baynton called her Maid Betty, for a Witneſs, if Mrs. Rawlins did not ask her ſeveral Times of Mr. Swendſen, and wiſh he would come and dine with them? And Betty anſwered, She never heard her but once.

Swendſen's Jury come into Court, and propoſe ſome Doubts,

Here Swendſen's Jury returned into Court, and Johnſon, a Dane, who was one of the Jury, ſaid, they did not find any Evidence, that Mr. Swendſen was privy to the Arreſt. The Chief Juſtice anſwered, Did not he go to Hartwell's Houſe, and from thence, while ſhe was under a Force, went with her to the Vine-Tavern, where he married her? Did not he take Advantage of the Force, and was that Force to any other Purpoſe but to compel her to marry him? There was no Cauſe of Action, either againſt Mrs. Rawlins or Mrs. Busby. And Johnſon ſtill objecting, there was no Violence uſed by Swendſen; the Court anſwered, if he was preſent when Violence was uſed, then was Violence uſed by him: It appeared very evident ſhe was under a Force before ſhe was married, when ſhe was married, all Night after, and the next Day, when ſhe was at the Recorder's.

Johnſon replied, He did not believe Mr. Swenſden employed the Bailiffs: To which the Court anſwered, If he did not ſet them to work, yet his Act afterwards made it as bad as if he had actually imployed the Bailiffs: Whereupon Johnſon ſaid, he agreed with the reſt; and the Foreman ſaid, They were now all agreed in their Verdict, that Swendſen was GUILTY.

Swendſen convicted.

Then Mrs. Baynton proceeded in her Defence, and ſaid to Mrs. Rawlins, Did not you undreſs undreſs yourſelf at Mrs. Blake's? She anſwered, You undreſſed me: And being asked, If ſhe did not ſay to Mr. Swendſen, when ſhe was in Bed, Come to Bed, my dear Husband, you muſt love no body in the World but me; and that ſhe loved him above all Men in the World? She anſwered, No, Mrs. Baynton, I did not; I have taken an Oath this Day, and I ſaid no ſuch Things.

Mrs. Baynton ſaid, That Mrs. Rawlins would have written Letters to Mr. Swendſen; but ſhe would not let her, and always acted as a Friend to her.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, If ſhe had no Deſign but for her Good, why did ſhe go to lodge at Mrs. Nightingale's, under Pretence ſhe had a Law-Suit? and why did ſhe carry her out in the Coach in order to be arreſted? Mrs. Baynton replied, She had carried her out in a Coach, and ſet her down ſeveral Times. And then ſhe demanded of Mrs. Rawlins, If ſhe did not ſeveral Times deſire to ſit next to Swendſen when they were at Cards, and ſent for Walnuts and Apples to treat him? To which ſhe ſaid, She did indeed ſend for Walnuts and Apples; but not to pleaſure Mr. Swendſen.

The Court demanding of Baynton, Why ſhe ſaid Mr. Swendſon was her Brother? She ſaid, He was her Brother by Adoption: And asked Mrs. Rawlins, if ſhe did not give Mr. Swendſen ſo much Encouragement as to kiſs him, and go between his Legs? Mrs. Rawlins thereupon ſaid, She took it upon her Oath, ſhe never did ſo: And being asked, If ſhe did not love him? She ſaid, No; not well enough to make him her Husband.

Then the Court asked Mrs. Baynton, How ſhe lived, and if ſhe had not a Child about four Months ago? She anſwered, She was married, and could prove it; but ſhe did not think it proper, for ſome Reaſons: And as to getting her Living, ſhe had a Siſter in Barbadoes that was very kind to her.

Then the Chief Juſtice demanded of Hartwell, Who ordered him to take out the Writ againſt Mrs. Rawlins, at the Suit of Jones? Hartwell anſwered, It was Mr. Holt, who kept the Mitre Tavern at Weſtminſter; and being at Mr. Holt's Houſe, Mrs. Baynton came in, and gave him Money for the Writ; and he ſent Spurr, his Follower, for it: That when he carried them to the Star and Garter Tavern, Mrs. Baynton bid him take Care of his Priſoner, Mrs. Rawlins, and take her with him to his Houſe, or he would loſe his Money; and thereupon he carried her to his Houſe, and having Buſineſs elſewhere, he left her with his Wife; and when he came Home again, he found Mr. Swendſen and Mrs. Baynton there, drinking a Pint of Sack: And they told him, if he would go to the Tavern, the Buſineſs ſhould be made up; and they went in a Coach to the Vine-Tavern, where the Matter was made an End of; but he knew of no Writ againſt Mrs. Busby. Then he called a Witneſs, who teſtified, That Mrs. Baynton confeſſed before the Recorder, ſhe imployed Hartwell to ſue out the Writ againſt Mrs. Rawlins, and gave him Money; but Hartwell ſaid, His principal Witneſs, Mr. Holt, was fled: And asking Mrs. Rawlins, if ſhe was not free to go to the Vine-Tavern? She anſwered, She did not deny, but ſhe went freely thither; nor was there any Rudeneſs offered her then.

Hartwell's Defence.

It being demanded of Spurr, What he had to ſay? He anſwered, He knew nothing more of the Matter, than that Hartwell gave him the Money to take out the Marſhal's-Court Writ, and he was imployed by him.

Spurr's Defence.

Then the Chief Juſtice having ſummed up the Evidence, ſaid, If Hartwell was imployed in this Deſign, in order to take Mrs. Rawlins into Cuſtody, to carry on this Marriage, and was privy to it, then he was equally guilty; but if he did only act as a Bailiff, and did not know the Deſign, then he was not guilty. But his arreſting Mrs. Busby, againſt whom he had no Proceſs, and taking Mrs. Rawlins from Mrs. Busby to his own Houſe, and from thence carrying her to the Vine-Tavern; his pretending that the Warrant was for 120*l.* when as in Truth it was but for twenty Pounds; and his pretending that the Parſon was to be the Bail, though he was not preſent in the Room where the Marriage was, but hard by; yet he was in the ſame Houſe, which is all one, if he knew what Deſign was on Foot: Theſe are the Things you are to conſider of. As for Mrs. Baynton, ſhe pretended ſhe was a Widow, and you hear how ſhe proves it; and when ſhe is taxed with having a Child, then ſhe ſaith ſhe has a Huſband; and when ſhe is asked about him, ſhe will give no Account, nor how ſhe ſupports herſelf. She ſaid indeed, ſhe paid every body their own; and that ſhe has no Difference with any body whatſoever. She pretended ſhe was Mrs. Rawlins's Friend in what ſhe did; but it is plain, by what ſhe owns herſelf, that ſhe imployed Hartwell, and paid him for the Writ: And her pretending to ſet them down at Oxenden Chapel, there it was her Deſign to bring them under that Force to effect this Marriage. I muſt leave it to you to conſider, whether from the Beginning to the End, ſhe was not an Actreſs and a Manager of this whole Buſineſs. She hath been asked, how Mr. Swendſen came to be her Brother? 1ſt. ſhe ſays, he was her deceaſed Siſter's Husband: Then being asked, who was that Siſter? She ſaid, He was an Adopted Siſter's Husband. It was very extraordinary for her to go to Mr. Hartwell's Houſe to the young Gentlewoman, and pretend ſhe came by Chance, and heard her Name. I muſt leave it to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to conſider of the whole Matter: And as for Spurr, he was an Under-Officer, a Bailiff's Follower, and might be ignorant of the Buſineſs. You have not Evidence enough to make it appear, that he was privy to this Deſign, and therefore you are to acquit him: But as to Mrs. Baynton and Hartwell, if they were privy to this Deſign of forcibly taking away of Mrs. Rawlins with an Intent to marry her to Mr. Swendſen, as it is plain he was an Actor, and ſhe an Abettor in the Force; then, Gentlemen, you are to find them guilty: If you are not ſatisfied, you are to acquit them.

The Jury being withdrawn, after half an Hour's Receſs, returned into Court with their Verdict, That Sarah Baynton was GUILTY; but Hartwell and Spurr were Not Guilty. Whereupon the Chief Juſtice told Hartwell, he had met met with a very merciful Jury, and adviſed him to take care for the future.

The Priſoners, Haagen Swendſen, and Sarah Baynton, were called to Judgment on the 28th of November; and it being demanded of Swendſen, What he had to ſay, why Sentence of Death ſhould not paſs upon him? He inſiſted, That Mrs. Rawlins had varied in her Evidence, and confeſſed ſeveral Things in Mrs. Baynton's Trial, that ſhe denied in his. Mrs. Baynton made the like Obſervation; and added, That ſhe was with Child: To which my Lord Chief Juſtice replied, That was no Plea againſt Judgment.

Then Mr. Juſtice Powell obſerved, How great a Crime this Fortune-ſtealing was; how much worſe than any other Kind of Robbery: And that though Swendſen was not at the firſt taking, yet there were ſtrong Preſumptions to conclude him privy, and conſenting to it; and particularly his having a Licenſe prepared for the Marriage: That ſuppoſing he was not privy to the Arreſt at firſt, yet knowing of the Force, and being preſent afterwards, when ſhe was threatened to be ſent to Newgate, if ſhe did not marry him, and taking Advantage of her being under theſe Menaces; this was, in Law, a forcible Taking. Then he paſſed Sentence of Death on Mr. Swendſen and Mrs. Baynton: After which Swendſen acknowledged the Arreſt to be all his own Contrivance, and not Mrs. Baynton's: And Mrs. Baynton declaring ſhe was with Child, a Jury of Matrons were impannelled, and brought her in quick with Child; whereupon Execution was reſpited till after her Delivery: And her Friends afterwards obtained her Pardon; but Swendſen was executed at Tyburn in Purſuance of his Sentence.

Swendſen and Baynton condemned.

Baynton pardoned.

Swendſen's Execution and dying Words.

The Execution of Haagen Swendſen, on the 9th of December, 1702.

Haagen Swendſen, being brought to the Place of Execution, referred himſelf to the following Paper; which he left with the two Divines who attended him.

" I Do believe the World will expect I ſhould " ſay ſomething for their Satisfaction. " That I had a Deſign to have Mrs. Rawlins " for my Wife, is moſt true. I was told of her " by a Neighbour and Friend of hers; and then " made a further Enquiry, and found her Qua- " lity ſuch, as I might, without any Excep- " tions, preſume to, her Father being the Son " of a Tradeſman: The next was, how to get " into her Acquaintance; and not knowing " how to be introduced, I prevailed with, and " perſuaded Mrs. Baynton to take a Lodging in " the ſame Houſe with Mrs. Rawlins; by " which Means, I found eaſy Acceſs to my " Wiſhes, and was as welcome to the Family " as if I had been one of themſelves. I had " their Company on Board a Ship, where I " gave them an Entertainment; and was invit- " ed to dine with them; and, by Degrees, I " poſſeſſed myſelf of Mrs. Rawlins's Affection " ſo far, that ſhe ſeemed uneaſy without me, " and frequently importuned for my ſpeedy " Return, and obliged me to ſit next to her at " Table, ſaying, That if I did not, ſhe would " not eat; and treated me with many private " Careſſes; by which Lovers, who have not " frequent Opportunity of ſpeaking, do, by " Signs and Tokens, expreſs themſelves.

" I do declare, I had as good Reception as " a Lover could wiſh for, and all the Encour- " agement imaginable; inſomuch, that nothing " ſeemed diſagreeable to my Intentions, but all " Things did promiſe to facilitate my Deſign " with Succeſs, ſhe herſelf having told me, " that ſhe was at her own Diſpoſal, and would " marry to pleaſe herſelf.

" My Familiarity with Mrs. Rawlins, before " my Marriage, was ſo great, that there was " no Room left for me to practiſe Violence " upon her; though I muſt ſay, I was impa- " tient of Delays, and wiſhed for an Oppor- " tunity to accompliſh my Deſire.

" But as for the unhappy Contrivance of the " arreſting Mrs. Rawlins, I had no Share in it, " but was perſuaded to conſent to it, by Mr. " Holt and his Wife; and when the Intrigue " was brought to Perfection, I complied, and " laid hold of the Opportunity, in order to " marry Mrs. Rawlins, which, with little Dif- " ficulty, and leſs Perſuaſion, I accompliſhed; " ſo having, without any Force or Violence, " declared to the Miniſter, that ſhe was at her " own Diſpoſal, and free to marry me, which " the Miniſter declared in open Court at my " Trial.

" After we had been in Bed, comes in one Mr. " Bennet, a Conſtable, with ſome of Mrs. Raw- " lins's Relations, who required me to go with " them before a Juſtice of Peace: Finding they " had no Warrant, I refuſed to give Obedience " to their Commands, which created ſome Diſ- " pute; and my Wife, hearing the Noiſe, " came out of the Bed-Chamber, deſiring me " to be quiet, and let her ſpeak to them; which " accordingly ſhe did, in theſe expreſs Words " following; viz. Couſin, I have married this " Gentleman with my own free Conſent; he is " my Husband, and this is my Wedding-Ring, " ſhewing the Ring on her Finger: As for Mr. " Busby, I will give him under my Hand, he " ſhall come into no Trouble; and what would " you have more?

" Then ſaid they, If it be ſo, then God bleſs " you both together, and drank a Flask of Wine " or two with me, and then departed: They " were no ſooner gone, but I asked her, Whe- " ther ſhe would be willing to appear, and de- " clare what ſhe had ſaid to her Friends to a Juſ- " tice of Peace? and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would, with all " her Heart. Then we went to Mr. Juſtice " Baber, in York-Buildings, and ſhe declared " the ſame to him; he told her he would take " Notice of her Face, and bid her ſtick to that.

" The next Day, about eleven of the Clock, " there came a Conſtable with a Warrant, and " carried us before the Recorder, unto whom ſhe " ſaid the ſame Thing over and over. Then ſaid " the Recorder, Alas! Child, they made you " drunk, and you did not know what you did: " To which ſhe anſwered, That there were a great " many there preſent, that knew her Life and " Converſation, that ſhe did not uſe to be " drunk: And when the Recorder could not " prevail with her, he conceived that my being perſonally with her, obliged her to ſtand ſo firm to her Marriage: He then ordered me to be pulled away by Force from her, at which ſhe fell a weeping; how ſhe afterwards was lectured by her Friends, was ſufficiently atteſted by my Proſecution, Trial, and Sentence; and after I was committed to Newgate, I was removed by a Habeas Corpus to the Queen's-Bench Bar, there to be arraigned, and pleaded Not guilty to the Indictment. I pleaded for longer Time to prepare for my Trial, but was allowed but four Days; when I was brought to my Trial, I moved for a Counſel to plead my Cauſe, as being a Stranger, and not acquainted with the Laws of England. My Life being thus at Stake, a powerful Intereſt againſt me, and the Court not for me, rendered my Caſe both deſpicable and deplorable: And as for ſome of my Evidence, I do verily believe they were bribed by the adverſe Party, others taken off by ſiniſter Art, and ſome hindered by Force from appearing in Court for me; as for Mr. Juſtice Baber, he ſhewed himſelf but coldly in giving his Teſtimony, and ſaid, That my Wife did confeſs before him, that ſhe was married by her own free Conſent; but at the ſame Time added, That ſhe ſeemed very much diſordered. As for that Gentleman I forgive him, and ſhall leave God to be Judge between him and me.

It is to be noted, That my Wife did not deny in open Court, that ſhe had made the Declaration aforeſaid of her Marriage to Mr. Bennet, the Conſtable, and others, that Night we were married, but ſaid, She did not know what ſhe did when ſhe ſaid ſo; and many other Things ſhe poſitively upon Oath denied at my Trial, which makes me have Pity upon her poor Soul, conſidering ſhe confeſſed many Things at Mrs. Baynton's Trial, which ſhe denied upon Oath at mine. The World may ſee what it is to be a Stranger and unacquainted with the Laws; nay, I myſelf heard my Wife openly confeſs in Court, in Mrs. Baynton's Trial, That there was a young Lady in the World, who was at her own Diſpoſal that wiſhed me a good Wife; and at laſt confeſſed She herſelf was the Perſon.

Among my many Misfortunes, I was repreſented by my Wife's Friends, to the Court, to be a Sharper and a Bully; but I called in and produced ſeveral Gentlemen of Repute, to give an Account of my Life and Converſation, who have accordingly atteſted the Honeſty of my Principles by my Practice.

It is further obſervable, how my Jury diſagreed about my Verdict: There was one of them, Mr. Eraſmus Johnſon, a Perſon to me altogether a Stranger; for I declare in the Preſence of Almighty God, that I do not remember to have been in his Company three Times in my Life, except in Church: This Mr. Johnſon alledged, That none of the Evidence did prove, or ſwear, that I had any Hand in the Arreſt, nor uſed any Force or Violence to the Gentlewoman, but ſhe confeſſed the Marriage, which was proved by ſeveral Witneſſes; which rendered my Caſe ſo hard, that the ſaid Mr. Johnſon inſiſted upon it to have me diſcharged, according to the Dictates of his Conſcience; but at laſt he was over-ruled.

Since my Conviction, I have uſed all the Means I could to procure my Pardon; but finding little or no Probability of it, I am now going to beg for Entrance at the Gate of Mercy in Heaven, which I beſeech God to open for me.

I expected my Trial ſhould be publiſhed, that the World might ſee my Treatment, what I have done, and what I have left undone in my Caſe; but I am informed it may not be printed. I have ſaid this, only to do myſelf Juſtice, although I could ſay a great deal more of Moment to the Purpoſe; but my Time being ſo very ſhort and precious, I muſt employ that little Time to the ſaving of my moſt precious Part, my Soul.

I humbly beſeech Mankind to believe me, and that what I have ſaid or ſhall ſay, are the Words of a dying Man: This is not the Time for me to equivocate, nor to go out of the World with a Lie in my Mouth. I do therefore declare, and call the Great Omnipotent God of Heaven to my Witneſs, That I have aſſerted nothing, to the beſt of my Knowledge, but the whole Truth, nor uttered a Syllable out of Malice or Bitterneſs of Heart, againſt any Perſon whatſoever; but ſo far from it, I do frankly forgive all my Enemies, and beſeech God to put it into their Hearts to repent of their Sins.

As for my Wife, I am ſo much in Charity with her, that I cannot believe the Severity extended to me, did altogether proceed from herſelf; but her conſenting to ſpill my Blood, makes the Guilt her own: God of his great Mercy give her a true Senſe of her Crimes, that the heavy Judgment, hanging over her Head, may not deſcend upon her.

As for Mrs. Baynton, who is likewiſe under Sentence of Death for the ſame Account with myſelf, as I have in the Court, ſo do I now again poſitively declare, She had no Hand in the Intrigue of my Marriage, any more than what ſhe did by my ſpecial Direction and Perſuaſion; for Mrs. Baynton was wholly a Stranger to Mrs. Rawlins, until the unhappy Contrivance of my Marriage made them acquainted: Neither did I know Mrs. Baynton till June laſt paſt, though ſome have been pleaſed to ſay, I kept her company for three Years, and have had two Children by her; all which I declare is a wrong Notion, and nothing of Truth in it. The only Load I have on my Conſcience, is her Death, of which I am the unhappy Inſtrument; I beſeech God in his Mercy to move the Queen's Clemency to ſpare her Life, that her Blood may not riſe in Judgment againſt me.

As for myſelf, I am now going to ſuffer an ignominious Death, for a Crime which my own Conſcience doth not accuſe me of, but the Rigour of the Law have made it my unpardonable Crime; and as I forgive all Mankind, ſo I beg Forgiveneſs of thoſe, whom, through Inadvertency or otherwiſe, I have injured or offended, beſeeching God of his great Mercy, to vouchſafe them Forgiveneſs whenſoever they ſhall ask it.

My great Comfort is, that I have reconciled my ſelf with my God, and that I die in my natural Senſes; and that ſhort Time I have had ſince my Trial, I truſt in my Saviour I have not miſpent.

And now, O Lord God, of thy infinite Goodneſs, hear my Petition, pardon my Offences, and forgive me my Sins: Forgive mine Enemies, and lay not my Blood to their Charge; but grant that a ſincere Repentance may waſh away their Guilt.

I am now going out of this Vale of Calamity and Sin to my eternal Repoſe, where, through the Merits of my Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, I hope to ſee God in his Glory: And ſo I conclude, O Lord, receive my Soul into thy boundleſs Mercy, for the Merits of my Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

Remarks on Swendſen's Trial.

As to the Points of Law relating to Fortune-ſtealing, theſe were ſo fully diſcuſſed by the Court and the Counſel at the Trial, that there is no Room to add any Thing upon that Head: I ſhall therefore only make ſome Obſervations on the Fact. And, in the firſt Place, it appears evident to me, that both Mrs. Rawlins and Mrs. Busby, who had the Care of her, did approve of Mr. Swendſen's Courtſhip, or, at leaſt, were not at all averſe to it, in the Light they viewed him. Had he been a Gentleman of an Eſtate, as Mrs. Baynton repreſented him to them, he would have found no Difficulty in obtaining her for his Wife. This, Mrs. Rawlins ſeems to have acknowledged at the Trial; but added (I believe very truly), that ſhe never deſired to marry him without the Conſent of her Friends (and conſequently ſuch a Settlement as was anſwerable to her Fortune). Neither ſhe nor they had any Thoughts of her matching with a Bankrupt: This he was fully convinced of; and this put him upon the Stratagem of an Arreſt: And he preſumed he had ſuch a Share in her Affections, that, when the Thing was once done, ſhe would have been ſatisfied, and never have proſecuted him for the Violence: And I am very ready to believe, ſhe never would have made any Stir about it, but have ſubmitted to remain his Wife, if her Friends had not incited her to proſecute him; for ſhe told them, when they found her at Blake's, that ſhe was married by her own Conſent, and was ſatisfied and pleaſed with her Husband, and thereupon they wiſhed them Joy, and went about their Buſineſs, leaving them together all Night. 1702. 1 Annæ.

Very probably the Lady reflected that this was the moſt prudent Courſe ſhe could take, now the Buſineſs was done; eſpecially ſince ſhe was married to a Man ſhe had no Averſion to. However, it is plain, he was the Author of the Force put upon her, and married her while ſhe was under that Force, by his own Confeſſion; and conſequently her ſubſequent Conſent could not wipe of his Guilt, or render him innocent in the Eye of the Law.

Some may obſerve, perhaps, that Mr. Swendſen, when he received Sentence, acknowledged the Arreſt to be his own Contrivance, but in his Dying Speech ſays, It was the Contrivance of Holt and his Wife; which ſeems to be a Contradiction: But it is evident he meant no more in his Dying Speech but that his Friend Holt, and his Wife, firſt mentioned the Project, which he afterwards came into, and conſented to put it in Execution: For he adds, in his Speech, I complied, and laid hold of the Opportunity, when the Intrigue was brought to Perfection.

The Trial of RICHARD HATHAWAY, as a Cheat and Impoſtor, at Surry Aſſizes, on the 24th of March 1702. 2 Annæ. 1702. 2 Annæ.

The Information.

THE Information charged that the Defendant, Richard Hathaway, of Southwark, in the County of Surry, Labourer, being a Perſon of evil Fame, and an Impoſtor, and maliciouſly contriving to take away the Life of Sarah Morduck (the Wife of Edward Morduck, of Southwark aforeſaid, Waterman) an honeſt pious Woman, and not a Witch, or uſing Witchcraft, Inchantment, Charm or Sorcery; did, on the 11th Day of February, in the 12th Year of the late King William, at Southwark aforeſaid, in the Preſence and Hearing of divers Perſons, falſely, deviliſhly, and knowingly, and, as a falſe Impoſtor, pretend and affirm, that he was bewitched by the ſaid Sarah, and that by Reaſon thereof he could not eat, but had faſted ten Weeks ſucceſſively; and pretended alſo that he was affected with divers Diſeaſes, and that by drawing Blood from the ſaid Sarah, by ſcratching, he ſhould be freed from his ſaid pretended Bewitching: And that the Defendant did thereupon ſcratch the ſaid Sarah, and draw Blood from her; and thereupon falſely affirm, That by drawing the ſaid Blood, he was freed from the ſaid Diſeaſes: Whereas, in Truth and Fact, he never was bewitched, nor had faſted as aforeſaid, and knew himſelf not to be bewitched by the ſaid Sarah; in Contempt of the ſaid late King and his Laws, and againſt the Peace, &c.

The Evidence opened by Mr. Broderick.

In opening the Evidence, Mr. Broderick, of Counſel for the Queen, ſaid, The diſcovering and puniſhing ſuch a Cheat as this, is highly neceſſary, not only for the vindicating the Publick Juſtice of the Nation, but for the Sake of Religion it ſelf, which ſuffers by nothing more than by the countenancing of indirect Practices made uſe of upon a Pretence of of maintaining and ſupporting it's Credit. Religion has in itſelf ſuch Genuine and Native Truth, as muſt work Conviction upon the Underſtanding of all Perſons who allow themſelves Leiſure to conſider it without Prejudice: But when Tricks and little Arts are carried on for a Time, and attain a general Credit, and appear afterwards to be what are called pious Frauds, they do far more Miſchief than all the Good propoſed by ſuch Practices can make Amends for. For when Men, who are Sceptically inclined, find that the Generality of Mankind run away with Stories of this Nature, and thoſe Facts afterwards prove undeniably falſe, they carry their Doubts on much too far and are apt to conclude, that they cannot ſecurely rely upon the Relation of others, and even on the general Conſent of Mankind, for the Certainty of any Fact whatſoever. It is therefore the Duty of all Perſons that are concerned for Religion in general, to endeavour to detect ſuch Practices, which weaken one of its moſt ſolid Foundations.

And my Lord, we conceive this Proſecution very neceſſary, in order to the vindicating the Juſtice of the Nation. Here was a Woman that underwent a ſolemn Trial, and upon a full Hearing was acquitted; yet afterwards, notwithſtanding the thorough Examination of the Fact, and ſuch an Evidence given, as convinced every unprejudiced Hearer, of the Innocence of the Defendant, and the Malice and Hypocriſy of the Accuſer; ſuch a Spirit did reign, that it was repreſented, that the Defendant had hard Meaſure; and not only the Jury, but the Court too, were reflected on: Nay, it went ſo far, that after the Innocence of the Woman appeared by her Acquittal, a Magiſtrate (whoſe Name the Witneſſes will diſcloſe in their Evidence) gave publick Countenance to this Impoſtor (for by that Name I will venture to call him), and ſo far gave Credit to him, that when the poor Woman was abuſed by the Rabble, and, her Life being in Danger, ſhe made Application to that Magiſtrate for Protection; he, inſtead of affording it to her, encouraged her Proſecutors, as if ſhe had really been guilty of the Witchcraft laid to her Charge; and conſiderable Collections were made for this Man, to ſupport his Spirits under the Diſappointment he met with, in her being acquitted.

This Proſecution was neceſſary too, upon the Account of the poor Woman, who, unleſs ſome Check be put to the unruly Proceedings of unthinking People, is not yet ſafe in her Houſe, but in Danger to be torn in Pieces: And it was thought moſt proper, that this Matter ſhould be thoroughly examined in this Place, where the Scene of his counterfeiting, for the moſt part, did lie; that prepoſſeſſed People might be Ear Witneſſes of the Fairneſs of the Proceeding, and that all Perſons might have an Opportunity, if they thought fit, of offering any Thing, fit to be offered, in his Defence.

My Lord, we need not trouble the Court with Evidence tending to prove, that the accuſed Perſon is not guilty of Witchcraft: She is acquitted of that, and it ought not to be ſuffered to be made a Diſpute. But our Evidence will go beyond that, not only that there was no Colour or Foundation for the Charge on her of being a Witch; but that the Defendant did maliciouſly, without any Ground, and contrary to his own Knowledge, charge her with the having bewitched him: And I think, our Evidence, all through, will prove this Matter fully upon him, that he was not bewitched, nay, that he did not believe himſelf to be ſo, yet charged and proſecuted her.

The firſt Part of his pretended Witchcraft ſhewed it ſelf, by his vomiting Pins: How that Buſineſs was managed, and how he was detected in it, the Witneſſes will declare. And though we are not obliged to endeavour the giving an Account of what it was that induced him firſt to undertake this Impoſture, I think it will appear by the Evidence, that he had ſome Aim and Proſpect of Gain to himſelf; for upon his firſt pretending to vomit Pins, we ſhall prove he had prepared, a Narrative of his own being bewitched, and he himſelf carried it to a Printer, that ſo he might bring a Concourſe of People to him: But the Printer being a Man of ſome Underſtanding, looked on him to be a Cheat, and would not meddle with the Copy. He practiſed this Trick of vomiting Pins ſeveral Times; but pretending to it once, before one who did not take every Thing upon Truſt, but was curious enough to obſerve nicely and ſearch him; after ſome Reſiſtance ſeveral Rows of Pins were found in his Pocket.

The next Diſcovery of this Impoſture, was, the Affair wherein Dr. Martin was concerned; who brought two Women to him: The Doctor put an innocent Deceit upon him, but it was in order to diſcloſe a vile Impoſtor. When the Woman was brought to him to be ſcratched, being conſcious to himſelf how little real Effect the barbarous Experiment would have upon him, the whole Company obſerved, that he felt three or four Times from her Hand to her Elbow before he ſcratched, that he might be ſure it was a Woman's Hand; and when he had ſcratched and felt Blood, his Eyes were opened, though it was the wrong Woman.

Another Inſtance of his acting a Part, with a Deſign to impoſe upon the World, was, when he was carried from the King's-Bench to Mr. Kenſey's. It was neceſſarily to be imagined, that, if he eat or drank nothing, nothing would come from him, either by Stool or Urine: He conſidered this, and for fear it ſhould be taken Notice of, that he diſcharged himſelf after ſo long a Faſt as he pretended, having Occaſion to make Water, he found the Lid of a Box, and making Water in it, put it out of Sight, on the Bed's Teſter; and the firſt Diſcovery of his counterfeiting at Mr. Kenſey's was, by the dropping of that Water on the Cloaths of the Bed. After he had been two Days there (during which Time he really did not eat) Mr. Kenſey, not knowing but that his Complexion might incline him to ſuch a Sullenneſs, as to ſtarve himſelf rather than directly confeſs his Cheat, having firſt examined his Mouth and Throat, and finding nothing there but as it was in all other Men, and that he had not only all other Organs, but that of ſwallowing, without any Obſtruction, as other People had, thereupon he framed this Deſign: He took Occaſion to pretend a Quarrel with the Maid-Servant who lived in his Houſe, within the Hearing of the Defendant, and told her ſhe was as very a Hypocrite as this Fellow; and after warm Words on both Sides, and a ſeeming Reſolution by her, that ſhe would quit her Service, the Maſter went away leaving the Maid and the Defendant together: She, to inſinuate herſelf into the Defendant, ſaid, Her Maſter was an odd Kind of a Man, a dangerous Man, therefore ſhe would not have the Defendant take any thing from him; and ſaid, She would take Care to ſupply him whilſt he ſtaid in the Houſe. Then his Stomach came to him very readily, and he was ſo far from being unable to drink, that he drank Brandy and other Liquors to Exceſs, and this for ſeveral Days: But ſtill thoſe in the Houſe being wary, thought it might be pretended by People, who were very willing to believe him, that this happened by the Charm's being diſſolved, and that he was unable to eat before; and therefore it was thought adviſeable to bring in ſeveral Perſons of Reputation, who ſhould obſerve him through a Hole fit for the Purpoſe; who, after they had ſeen him eat, examined how long he had been a Faſter? And he made Signs, That he had faſted twelve Weeks, and clung up his Belly as a Proof of his Emptineſs, according to his common Practice, though he had in their Sight, juſt before, eaten a plentiful Meal. So that, Gentlemen, it it evident, that what he did, was done maliciouſly, and with a Deſign to deceive and impoſe upon the World. After this, there being ſufficient Proof of the Impoſture, it was thought fit to bring him before a Court of Juſtice, thereupon this Information was exhibited againſt him; and if we prove it, I doubt not but you, Gentlemen of the Jury, will do that Right to the Government and to Religion, as to find him guilty of it, that he may be brought to the Puniſhment that ſuch a Crime deſerves.

Dr. Martin's Evidence.

Then the King's Witneſſes were called, and firſt Dr. Martin, the Miniſter of the Pariſh, was ſworn, and teſtified, That on Sunday the 9th of February, 1701, there was ſuch a Tumult in the Church, that his Curate, who read Prayers, could not be heard; and upon his enquiring into the Matter, the Sexton informed him, There was a Witch in the Church, and brought one Sarah Morduck to him into the Veſtry. The Woman cried, and ſaid, She had given no Occaſion for this Scandal; however, he adviſed her to remain in the Veſtry; becauſe the Congregation were ſo diſturbed, that they would all go out of Church if ſhe ſtaid in it: That, after Sermon, he (the Witneſs), returning to the Veſtry, found the Sexton had let the Woman out, for Fear ſhe ſhould have been torn in Pieces: That after Church-time many of the Pariſhioners applied themſelves to him (the Doctor), to attend Richard Hathaway, whom they ſuppoſed to be bewitched; and going accordingly the next Day, Hathaway's Maſter (a Blackſmith) told him his Servant was blind and ſpeechleſs, but was, however, ſenſible, and knew the Voices of his Friends: Whereupon he (the Doctor) went into the Room, and deſired Hathaway, if he knew him, to hold up his Hand; and he did ſo, and took the Doctor's Hand and kiſſed it; and asking him, If he ſhould pray by him in the Prayers of the Church? He held up his Hand again, and prayed with him, and Hathaway ſeemed much affected with it: Then he (the Doctor) went out, and diſcourſed his Maſter concerning the Occaſion of his Illneſs; and he ſaid, He thought Sarah Morduck had bewitched him, for he ſcratched her and found Good by it: Whereupon he (the Doctor) went thither again the next Day, taking Sarah Morduck and Herne her Brother, with him; and he told Hathaway he heard he had received Benefit by ſcratching Sarach Morduck, and deſired him to hold up his Hand, if he thought he ſhould be the better for ſcratching her again; and he held up his Hand, whereupon he (the Doctor) introduced another Woman, named Johnſon, and Hathaway ſcratched her, taking her for Sarah Morduck; and immediately his Eyes were opened; but being told of his Miſtake, Hathaway was much caſt down, and ſeveral People preſent were ſatisfied he was a Counterfeit. That he (the Doctor) going to the Houſe again ſome Hours after, found a great Mob there; and Hathaway's Maſter and Miſtreſs met him, and ſaid, What have you done? You have ruined me and my Family: You have given it out to be a Cheat; and now he is in a worſe Condition than before. And he (the Doctor) was informed the next Day, That Sarah Morduck had been dragged to the Houſe after he went away, and Hathaway had ſcratched her; after which, he pretended he had recovered his Sight perfectly, and eat and drank, and walked about: Whereupon he (the Doctor) ſent for him to his Houſe, and talking with him, Hathaway demanded, If he did not think he was bewitched? and he anſwering He believed he was not, Hathaway replied, He might as well not believe what he ſaid in the Pulpit; and that he might ſay to the Doctor, as our Saviour ſaid to the Jews, Though you ſee Miracles, you will not believe. Whereupon, the Doctor bid him go about his Buſineſs.

That laſt Eaſter he (the Doctor) was ſent for to Sir Thomas Lane's, where he found Hathaway eating very heartily, and was told, He had drawn Blood of Sarah Morduck, before Sir Thomas Lane, which had brought him to himſelf: That going into the Room, where Sir Thomas was, he found Sir Owen Buckingham, and Dr. Hamilton, to whom he related what had happened on his going to ſee Hathaway; but Hathaway pretended he did not remember he was with him: And when Welling, his Maſter, acknowledged he was there, and that Hathaway was in his Senſes at that Time, Sir Thomas Lane ſaid, He had a violent Fit afterwards, which made him forget the Doctor's being there: And Sir Owen Buckingham ſeemed to be of Opinion alſo, That Hathaway was really bewitched.

That a little afterwards he (the Doctor) was ſubpœna'd to the Aſſizes, to be a Witneſs at the Trial of Sarah Morduck, who was indicted dicted for a Witch; and, before the Aſſizes, Bills were put up in ſeveral Churches of the following Tenour, A poor Man, being afflicted by an evil Woman, deſires the Prayers of this Congregation. That the Woman being acquitted, at Guilford Aſſizes, he imagined all People had been ſatisfied with the Juſtice done there; but when he came home, he was abuſed by many People, who told him, The Blood of that innocent Man lay at his Door: The Woman had been hanged, if he had not ſaved her: The Judgments of God would fall on him.

Here the Counſel for Hathaway objecting, That what other People did was not Evidence againſt him, the Chief Juſtice anſwered, If there was Evidence that Hathaway had been guilty of Deceit, and a Deſign to deceive the People, would they not allow it to be given in Evidence, that the People had been deceived?

Then Dr. Martin went on and ſaid, It was reported he had been bribed; that he had received ſeveral Guineas; that the Judge was bribed, and the Jury bribed; and that the Judge was ſo biaſſed, he would not ſuffer the Woman to be ſearched.

Johnſon's Evidence.

Mrs. Johnſon being ſworn, teſtified, That Hathaway ſcratched her inſtead of Sarah Morduck; and he pretended to have received his Sight thereupon, as Dr. Martin teſtified.

Bateman's Evidence.

Mr. William Bateman depoſed, That he went to ſee Hathaway ſpew Pins: That they gave him ſomething in a Cup, which it was pretended would make him vomit; but the Witneſs could not perceive he ſwallowed any thing: However, he reached to vomit fourteen or fifteen Times, ſeeming to be in a great Agony; and there were ſome hundreds of Pins upon the Ground; but the Witneſs thought they were dropped by other People, for he took ſome of them up, and found they were dry, and ſome of them were in Chains; whereupon he ſaid, He believed they were the ſame that had been ſhewn at his Houſe; but his Maſter affirmed they were not the ſame, and endeavoured to ſatisfy him his Man did vomit them: Then the Witneſs deſired he might have a clean Pot to vomit in, and, having ſearched his Mouth, held the Pot cloſe to his Head: That Hathaway often endeavoured to lift up his Hands to the Pot, but the Witneſs would not ſuffer him; and though he vomited ſeveral Times, there were no Pins in the Pot, but ſeveral upon the Ground; and the Witneſs obſerving that the Pins on the Ground did not come out of his Mouth, the People were very preſſing he ſhould believe that they did. Then the Witneſs, with a great deal of Difficulty, forced his Hand into Hathaway's Pocket, where he found ſeveral Parcels of crooked Pins, like thoſe on the Floor.

The Printer's Evidence.

Richard Ball, a Printer's Man, teſtified, That Hathaway brought him a Narrative, giving an Account of his vomiting Pins, and deſired him to print it; and, at the ſame Time, ſhewed him a Diſh-full of crooked Pins, which he ſaid he had vomited, and declared he had eat nothing for a great many Days: But his Maſter, the Printer, being preſent, ſaid, Hathaway looked very well: He believed he was a Cheat, and would have nothing to do with it: And thereupon Hathaway went away.

1702. 2 Annæ.

Mr. Hern depoſed, That he was preſent when Hathaway ſcratched Mrs. Johnſon inſtead of Sarah Morduck, and pretended to recover his Sight thereupon, as Dr. Martin had teſtified: And that they afterwards dragged Sarah Morduck to the Houſe, and he ſcratched her, and the Rabble aſſaulted and abuſed her, leaving the poor Woman in a wretched Condition: Whereupon the Witneſs procured Juſtice Rich's Warrant, and apprehended one Osborn; but the Juſtice diſcharged him for Want of Evidence: However, Sarah Morduck was ſo mobbed and inſulted, that ſhe was forced to remove from Southwark to St. Paul's Wharf in London; and thither Hathaway, with one Jones and the Rabble, followed her: Whereupon the Witneſs got Sir Thomas Lane's Warrant, and took up Hathaway Jones; but Sir Thomas believing the Story of Hathaway's ſpewing of Pins, ſaid, There was Provocation enough for the Inſult, and compelled the Woman to let Hathaway ſcratch her again, which he did; and then he appeared very brisk, and calling for Bread and Cheeſe, eat it greedily, though he pretended he could not ſwallow any thing before. That Sir Thomas, afterwards, ordered the Woman to be ſtripped and ſearched by Dr. Hamilton; but the Doctor could find nothing extraordinary about her: However, Sir Thomas Lane committed her to Priſon, and would not accept of an Hundred Pound Bail at that Time; but afterwards, when Dr. Martin had been with him, he permitted her to be bailed.

Hern's Evidence.

Kenſey the Surgeon's Evidence.

Kenſey, the Surgeon, depoſed, That Hathaway, being in the King's-Bench Priſon, was committed to his Care in November laſt; and, going to that Priſon for him, the Turnkeys told him, His Tongue was ſwelled; but, upon ſearching his Mouth, he found nothing amiſs, and brought him to his Houſe, where he offered him Meat and Drink ſeveral Times, and he refuſed it: That the next Morning he was ſurly, and refuſed to riſe, and they found the Rug wet with his Urine, which dropped from the Teſter of the Bed, where he had endeavoured to conceal it in the Lid of a Box: That he entreated Hathaway to diſcover who ſet him to work, for he looked upon him as a poor innocent Fellow; but he would diſcover nothing, and ſtill refuſed to eat. That finding neither Perſuaſions nor Threats could move him (for he threatened to ſtarve him, if he would not confeſs) he (the Witneſs) feigned a Quarrel with his Maid, ſaying, in Hathaway's Hearing, he would be troubled no more with her: And when he was gone, the Maid, by his Directions, railed at him (Kenſey) and bid Hathaway have a Care how he took any thing from her Maſter, or his Brother, and ſhe would bring him Meat, and what he wanted: And ſhe accordingly carried him Victuals and Drink from Time to Time, and ſhe, and ſeveral of the Neighbours, (through ſome Crevices in the Boards) ſaw him eat and drink plentifully two or three Times a Day; and one Day, in particular, he eat ſo freely, and drank ſtrong Beer and Brandy after it, that he brought his Dinner up again, and he (the Surgeon) coming in, Hathaway raked the Aſhes over it, to hide it: That the next Day he offered him Meat, but he pretended he was ſo weak he could not get off his Chair, though they had ſeen him eat and drink ſeveral Days before, dance about, and play upon the Tongs. On the 8th Day after he came to his Houſe, he endeavoured to make his Eſcape; and on the 10th in the Morning, as he was putting on his Cloaths, he ſeized on him (the Surgeon); but ſtruggling with him, Hathaway pretended Feebleneſs, and fell down upon the Bed: Being told afterwards, that his Friends had betrayed the Secret, he offered to go before the Lord Chief Juſtice and diſcover the whole Truth; but his Lordſhip not being in the way, then he returned to the old Story, and ſaid he was bewitched

That at his firſt coming to his Houſe, he asked him how many Weeks he had faſted, and he counted his ten Fingers, for he pretended to be dumb.

The Evidence of the Surgeon's Maid.

Elizabeth Baker, Kenſey's Maid, teſtified, That after Hathaway was brought to their Houſe, her Maſter feigned a Quarrel with her, and ſhe ſupplied him with Meat and Drink by her Maſter's Directions; and that fetching him a Glaſs of Brandy, once, when a Child was by, he refuſed to drink it, pointing to the Child, whereupon ſhe ſtood before the Child, and then he drank it: That at another Time ſhe gave him ſo much ſtrong Beer, that he pointed to his Head, intimating his Head ached, and about two Hours after, he was very merry, danced about, and played upon the Tongs: That on the 11th of November, her Maſter ordering her to carry him ſeveral Slices of roaſt Veal, ſome of the Neighbours ſaw him eat it through the Chinks of the Walls.

To this his Counſel objected, That ſuch Evidence ought not to be given; becauſe this was done after the Record bore Date: But the Chief Juſtice anſwered, It was Evidence to prove, his pretended Faſting before was a meer Deceit; for if his Faſting the laſt two Weeks appeared to be a Fraud, it was ſtrongly to be inferred, that his pretended Faſting ten Weeks before was ſo too.

Evidence of the Neighbours who ſaw him eat.

Mr. Stanton depoſed, That being deſired by Mr. Kenſey to come and ſee Hathaway eat and drink, he went thither, and ſaw the Meat, before it was carried to him, being five ſlices of Veal, with Bread and Beer; and that Hathaway looked about at firſt, to obſerve if any one could ſee him, and then fell too, and eat as heartily as any Man could; but hearing a Noiſe, he ran away with the Meat, and ſet it on a Dreſſer, and the Maid telling him there was no Body coming, he went to it again, and eat it up, after which he drank and ſat down by the Fire: That afterwards, he (this Witneſs) and the reſt of the Company went into Hathaway's Room, and carried a Bottle of Beer and drank to him, but he made Signs that he could not drink, and ſhewed them that his Belly clung to his Back.

Hunt's Evidence.

John Hunt depoſed, That he pretended to ſpew Pins, but they were bright and clean, and only came out of his Mouth he thought: That the Company thought they heard ſtrange Noiſes the ſame Night, but he found Hathaway made the Noiſe with his Feet; and that Welling his Miſtreſs ſewed three little Bags to his Shirt, in which ſhe ſaid were Charms, and he uſed to be much better for them.

Brand's Evidence.

Elizabeth Brand teſtified, That ſeveral Sums of Money were gathered for Hathaway, particularly againſt Guilford Aſſizes, ſhe and others went about, and gathered between Six and Seven Pounds, which they paid to Mrs. Welling towards his Charges.

Ship's Evidence.

Matthew Shipps depoſed, That Hathaway being brought from Guildford Aſſizes to the Marſhalſea, was in his Cuſtody four Days; and that he eat and drank, and ſlept well during that Time.

Hatha-way's Defence by his Counſel.

The King's Counſel having cloſed their Evidence, Mr. Serjeant Fenour the Priſoner's Counſel entered upon his Defence, and ſaid,

My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel for the Defendant Richard Hathaway, who is indicted for a Cheat and Impoſtor; and it is for pretending himſelf to be bewitched, and that he has uſed indirect Arts and Means to make People believe he was ſo bewitched; and that this Sarah Morduck was the Perſon that had bewitched him; and that this was contrived by him, in order to bring Miſchief and Damage on this Sarah Morduck, and to the evil Example of the Queen's Subjects. You have heard the Evidence that hath been given, and therefore I ſhall not repeat it, but only obſerve ſome few Things to you: The Doctor has taken a great deal of Pains in this Cauſe; but that which he does tell you by Hear-ſay, what other Perſons have told him, is not ſuch Evidence as you are to take any Notice of, that is, what Johnſon told him, and likewiſe what other Perſons told him, concerning this Man; for what they have ſaid to him of this Man, though it may be true, is not to come under your Conſideration. There are ſeveral others that have given Evidence of what other Perſons have ſaid, and they have given it as their Opinions, that what this Man did, was the Cauſe of their doings; of which you are to take no Notice. But, my Lord, that which ſeems to bear moſt hard upon us is, That becauſe the Doctor and ſeveral others have been abuſed, both before and after the Trial, for what they endeavoured to do; therefore they would inſinuate as if my Client had had a Hand in it: But if a Man be doing any Thing, and another takes the Advantage of it, to do another a Miſchief, I hope that Miſchief ſhall not be laid to his Charge. My Lord, there is one Man that has given a great deal of Evidence as to his vomiting of Pins, and ſays, that he was by, and he ſwept the Ground, and when he had a Chamber-pot to vomit in, he could not find any Pins there; but there was ſome upon the Ground again. So likewiſe for his Faſting, you have had Evidence to prove that a Cheat: And this ſeems to affect him moſt, that all this Pretence to be bewitched, and vomiting of Pins, and Faſting, was a Cheat. This is the Matter that they accuſe him of; of which, if he be really guilty, I come not here to defend him; but I am to defend him as far as Witneſs will do. And now, my Lord, if my Brief be true, we ſhall ſatisfy you that my Client was in a very lamentable Condition, ſuch as one would think no Man could be in and live; and I will lead you by theſe Steps. When he was thus diſabled, could neither ſpeak nor take Suſtenance, his Maſter, after he had ſerved him two Years, and he had lived very civilly, and behaved himſelf well in his Maſter's Service, till he fell thus ill; then he was ſo ill, that after the Maſter had ſpent a great deal of Money with Doctors and Apothecaries, he could get no Cure for him; then he got him into the Hoſpital, and there he continued a long Time, and at laſt they gave it in, That he was incurable, and they turned him out: But his Maſter made Intereſt, and got him in again, and he continued ſometime there again; and there it was that he was firſt thought to be bewitched, for they had him twice, and could do no good with him; and the Tenders told him, He muſt lye under ſome evil Tongue; and thereupon he was turned out as incurable, and with that Inſtruction, that it was an incurable Diſeaſe. So he came home again, and his Maſter and Miſtreſs was acquainted with it; and they conſider what Perſon it ſhould be, that ſhould have any evil Deſign againſt him; and at laſt they recollect, that his Maſter had taken a Room over the Head of this Sarah Morduck; and ſhe had gone to the Shop often, and had given them very ill Words, and ſhe ſhould be even with him one Time or other; and therefore they concluded, this Woman was the Perſon. Upon this there were many Things contrived, what Courſe they ſhould take to do him good; and there was one Thing concluded upon, in order to his Eaſe (which I think none ſhould adviſe), that is, the Buſineſs of Scratching: But this Woman, when ſhe was accuſed by them of bewitching him, ſhe offered herſelf to be ſcratched, and ſhe was ſcratched; and from thence this Man found Eaſe: But afterwards he fell ill again, and he went into London, and was examined at Sir Thomas Lane's; and, upon Examination, they thought that this Man did lie under ſuch an Affliction. I cannot ſay it is an irreligious thing to ſay, there are Witches in the World; but this Man lay under ſuch a Diſtemper, that no Doctor could know what to do with it; and they could not imagine who ſhould do it, but this Woman; and ſhe was there ſcratched by him, and he did find Relief by it. My Lord, this being the Matter of Fact, we ſhall call very ſubſtantial Witneſſes to prove it. As to his Faſting, we ſhall prove that he was put under the Care of very ſubſtantial Perſons, and that he did not eat or drink for three Weeks or a Month; ſo that it will appear we had no Contrivance in the World, but only would get Eaſe if we could. We have twenty Witneſſes to call.

The Priſoner's Witneſſes.

Then the Priſoner's Witneſſes were called, and Anne Eaton depoſed, That ſhe looked after Hathaway nine Weeks: That ſhe was with him four or five Days and Nights together without ſtirring from him, and ſhe did not ſee him eat or drink during that Time: That he was at ſome Times dumb and blind, and loſt his Senſes.

Gibſon teſtified, That he had ſtrange Motions, foamed at the Mouth, and his Face was diſtorted, and he was blind and dumb.

1702. 2 Annæ.

Ann Pearſe, a Nurſe of the Hoſpital, depoſed, That he lay ſeven or eight Days in a very weak Condition there, without Eating or Drinking, and complained he could not go to Stool; whereupon the Doctor gave him Quickſilver.

Smith, an Apothecary, depoſed, That when he came Firſt to his Maſter, he was troubled with Convulſion Fits, ſometimes lay like a Man that was dead: But being asked, If this might not be counterfeited? he anſwered, No doubt, it might.

Some Women depoſed, They had heard him bark like a Dog; and believed he was bewitched.

Keeling depoſed, He watched with Hathaway nine Nights, and he neither eat nor drank while he was with him: And Bridges depoſed, He watched with him in the Day-time, when Keeling watched with him in the Night, and he never ſaw him eat or drink all that Time, though he never went from him till Keeling came to relieve him; and they both teſtified, That no Company came to him, nor did he ever go out, but on Sunday to Church.

Webb, one of the Officers of the Pariſh, teſtified, That they put him into an empty Houſe, with the two former Witneſſes to watch him; and that he vomited ruſty Pins; and they could not diſcover he eat or drank any thing all the Time he was there; and that he went out only once on a Sunday to Church.

Dell depoſed, That he watched with him one Night, and he went to Stool, and they found in his Excrements a Lump of Hair, looſe Pins, a Stump of a Nail, and two or three Pieces of Stone; and he lay in a ſad Condition as if he was dumb.

Two others confirmed the Teſtimony of this Witneſs. Mrs. Davenport teſtified, That Dr. Hamilton committed Hathaway to her Care, to diſcover, Whether he faſted as he pretended; and he was in her Houſe ſeventeen Days: That ſhe herſelf, her Son, or ſome others of her appointing, watched him diligently all the Time, and he nither eat nor drank; and to prevent any Deceit, they ſearched his Cloaths, and bought a Bed on purpoſe for him to lye on.

Then ſeveral of the Witneſſes Mrs. Davenport had employed to watch him, depoſed, That he neither eat nor drank in all the ſeventeen Days while they were with him reſpectively: But the Chief Juſtice demanding, Where her Son was, that watched with him Part of the Time? ſhe anſwered, He had been gone to Sea about a Week.

Dr Hamilton's Evidence for the Defendant.

Dr. Hamilton depoſed, That being at Sir Thomas Lane's when Hathaway was examined, he ſearched his Mouth and Throat, and found nothing amiſs, and obſerved, There was nothing to be depended on but his Faſting: As for vomitting Pins, and the reſt, it might be performed by Legerdemain; and he ſuſpected him to be an Impoſtor: That he told Hathaway's Maſter, If he thought fit, he would lock lock him in a Room a Fortnight, and ſee if he counterfeited; that the Maſter afterwards came to him, and deſired him to make the Experiment: Whereupon, he committed him to the Care of Mrs. Davenport, and deſired her to ſtrip him, and ſee he had no Bread about him, and to ſend to Long-Lane and buy new Things for him to lie on, &c. That he ordered her to let no Body come to him, and that one or two of the Family ſhould ſet up with him every Night; and ſhe promiſed ſhe would. They ſent him Word he had ſtrange kind of Motions; but he depended on nothing but his Faſting. That he had heard of many that had faſted ſeveral Weeks, but they had taken Water, or ſome ſuch thing, which, though they are very weak things, yet may keep one alive; but none can live without taking ſomething: That he ſaw this Man ſeveral Times while he was at Mrs. Davenport's, and he could not believe but that he had eat, becauſe his Pulſe was ſtrong.

The Chief Juſtice demanding of the Doctor, If he thought it poſſible in Nature, or if all the Devils in Hell could enable a Man, to faſt a Fortnight? The Doctor anſwered, He thought not; and that made him ſuſpect Hathaway: And being asked, If he thought the Pulſe of a Man could be very ſtrong who had faſted eight Days? he ſaid, He thought not.

Sir Thomas Lane's Evidence for the Defendant.

Sir Thomas Lane being ſworn, depoſed, That Hathaway's Maſter brought a Woman before him about a Twelvemonth ago, upon Suſpicion ſhe had bewitched his Man, affirming, he had faſted above eight Weeks, and voided and vomited Pins; and two Witneſſes ſwore to Chains of an hundred Pins each, that came from him in his Excrements; and the People imagining, that ſcratching the Woman might give Relief, were very earneſt with him, that he would command the Woman to be ſcratched; he anſwered, That would be an Aſſault; but if ſhe would conſent, he might do it; and the Woman thereupon ſaid, If ſhe might be ſecured from ſuch Inſults from the future, ſhe would let him, and conſented to it: And Hathaway no ſooner ſcratched her, but he grew better, had Bread and Cheeſe brought him, eat prodigiouſly, and drank up a Quart of Drink without gulping. That he (Sir Thomas) asked Mrs. Morduck, and her Friends, If ever they knew the Fellow got Money by theſe Tricks? but they could not ſay he had. And it appearing to him that there was neither Profit or Revenge in the Caſe, he thought the Man could not counterfeit all this for no End, and run the Hazard of being whipped.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, The Queſtion was not Whether he ſhould be puniſhed for a Fool, but whether he was a Knave? And whatever Puniſhment he was to ſuffer, did not belong to him to determine.

The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

Then his Lordſhip ſummed up the Evidence, and obſerved, As to Hathaway's being relieved by ſcratching the Woman, he pretended had bewitched him; there was no Rule either in Philoſophy or Divinity, that could induce a Man to believe this would effect his Cure if his Diſtemper had been real, as to his having faſted ſo long a Time. That of our Saviour's faſting forty Days, is mentioned in Scripture as miraculous, and an Effect of Divine Power, being one Evidence of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion: And that none could imagine, without ſuch Aſſiſtance a Man could faſt forty Days or above, and yet continue in Health: That all the Witneſſes in the World, or all the Devils in Hell, could not invert the Order of Nature, and enable a Man to faſt beyond the uſual Time that Nature will allow; and that if the Thing be impoſſible, and this Man had endeavoured to make the World believe he had faſted ſo long a Time, it was moſt evident, he was a Cheat, and muſt contrive to have Victuals one Way or other ſecretly conveyed to him, of which the impoſſibility of his being able to faſt ſo long was a Demonſtration: That it was plain the Man had counterfeited, during the Time he was at Mr. Kenſey's; and though that particular Time be not laid in the Information, yet it is a Continuance of the Time that is laid therein; and if he was an Impoſtor, by pretending to have faſted while he was at Mr. Kenſey's Houſe, he left them to conſider, whether he was not ſo all the Time before: He remembered that his ſcratching and drawing Blood of a ſtrange Woman inſtead of Sarah Morduck, did ſeem to avail him as much as if he had ſcratched her, until he underſtood he was impoſed upon: And upon the whole, if they did not believe he was non compos mentis, or under any Deluſion, but had endeavoured to impoſe upon the Magiſtrate, and on the World, by counterfeiting theſe Infirmities; then there was all the Reaſon in the World to find him Guilty.

And the Jury, without going from the Bar, found the Defendant GUILTY.

Hathaway and others tried for an Aſſault on Sarah Morduck.

Richard Hathaway, Thomas Welling his Maſter, and Elizabeth his Wife, and Elizabeth Willoughby, were afterwards tried upon another Information, for a Riot and Aſſault on the ſaid Sarah Morduck.

At which Trial it was proved, That the ſaid Richard Hathaway, on the 25th of September 1701, came to the Houſe of the ſaid Sarah Morduck, and ſcratched her Face in a cruel Manner, forced out one of her Teeth, and carried away part of her Cloaths: And that on the 11th of February following, one Thomas Osborn, Thomas Hatton, with four other Perſons, came in Diſguiſe to the ſaid Morduck's Houſe, and forced her out, and carried her to the Houſe of Thomas Welling, one of the Defendants; and that there the ſaid Richard Hathaway, by the Encouragement of the ſaid Osborn and Hatton, and the reſt of the Company, did again ſcratch her in a moſt barbarous manner: That afterwards, Elizabeth Wife of the ſaid Thomas Welling, fell upon her, and ſcratched her Face, and tore off her Head-cloaths, and Hair; and then the ſaid Thomas Welling gave her two or three Kicks on her Belly, and threw her on the Ground, and ſtamped upon her, and caſt her into the Street, and ſhe was ſo much bruiſed, that ſhe was forced to keep her Bed for 1702. 2 Annæ. for a Fortnight: That Elizabeth Willoughby, another of the Defendants, came with a great many Perſons to the ſaid Morduck's Houſe; and that the ſaid Elizabeth gave her ſeveral Blows with her Fiſt, and would have pulled her out of her Houſe, for the Defendant Hathaway to ſcratch her, he ſtanding at a Corner hard by; but was prevented by one Sarah Hall: And that in the Month of September aforeſaid, as the ſaid Sarah Morduck was going into Newgate Market, one Hopkins crying out, There goes the old Witch, a great Company of People, in a riotous Manner, flocked about her, and threatned to throw her into a Horſe-pond; and that if ſhe had not got into an Ale-houſe, by the Aſſiſtance of ſome Women there, ſhe had been Murdered: And that in Eaſter or Whitſon Week laſt, one Jones was apprehended for a Riot, by him, and others, committed, in one Burrell's Houſe in London, endeavouring to force themſelves into the ſaid Sarah Morduck's Chamber, that the Defendant Hathaway might ſcratch her; and that the ſaid Jones was carried before Sir Thomas Lane, who diſcharged him, ſaying, There was Cauſe enough for the Riot. The Evidence for the King being concluded, the Jury withdrew; and ſoon after returned, and brought all the Defendants in GUILTY.

Remarks on Hathaway's Trials.

It is impoſſible to read Hathaway's Trials, without bluſhing for the Credulity and Superſtition of our Country-men, who will not be convinced of ſuch Cheats and Impoſtures upon the ſtrongeſt Evidence that can be given; but tenaciouſly perſiſt in every idle Tale they have been told of this kind in the Nurſery, and contribute to delude themſelves, as well as their Neighbours, by encouraging and propagating ſuch Stories, how ridiculous ſoever, upon the weakeſt Suggeſtions and Surmiſes.

There ſeems to be a Series of Facts and Circumſtances, in which moſt of theſe Relations agree, and are made in a manner the Teſt of a Perſon's being bewitched; as a kind of Convulſion Fits, Diſtortions of the Countenance, Barking like a Dog, unaccountable Noiſes, and the voiding of crooked Pins upwards and downwards. They ſeem to confine the Devil to this beaten Road of Action, and do not often ſuffer him to omit theſe Methods of Torture and Deluſion; and ſome have ſuperadded that of long Faſting of late, which has unluckily diſcovered the Falacy of all the reſt, to all ſuch as are capable of Conviction: For there are a Set of People amongſt us, eſpecially the Sectaries, that ſeem determined never to be undeceived; that look upon every Piece of pretended Witchcraft, as ſtrong a Proof of their Religion and another World, and call all Men Atheiſts and Infidels that won't believe them.

We ſee here two wiſe City Magiſtrates, Sir Thomas Lane, and Sir Owen Buckingham, giving entire Credit to every Thing that was reported of Hathaway, and the Woman he pretended had bewitched him, and even encouraging the Mob to pull her in Pieces, by refuſing to take any Notice of thoſe that aſſaulted and wounded her. The credulous Sir Thomas Lane even cauſed the Woman to be ſtripped, to ſee if there were any Teats or Excreſcencies about her to ſuckle her Imps, and the Scotch Doctor Hamilton was weak enough to be employed in this Office: But this, I muſt confeſs, is not to be much wondered at in the Doctor, who was born and bred in a Country where every Story of this kind is believed to be as true as Goſpel, and where they hang up half a ſcore decrepit old Women every Year, whoſe unhappy Circumſtances and Countenances render them the Objects of the People's Fury; though they are in Reality the greateſt Objects of Compaſſion.

It is evident, Hathaway had two Inducements to counterfeit his Fits and Faſting; the firſt, his Expectation of living upon the Charity and Contribution of his Neighbours without working; and his Maſter and Miſtreſs, 'tis evident, expected to ſhare in the Profit, by telling Doctor Martin he had undone them, when he diſcovered the Cheat: And in the next Place, both the Maſter and Man had the Vanity to deſire they might be talked off, and diſtinguiſhed, for having Miracles wrought in their Favour; for Hathaway ſaid to Doctor Martin, in the Words of Scripture, Though you ſee Miracles, you will not believe: The Pariſh, and the whole Neighbourhood alſo, we find very zealous in encouraging all People to believe, that Signs and Wonders were wrought among them, and putting up Bills in ſeveral Churches, to pray for a poor Man afflicted by an evil Woman; and I don't doubt, but many of the People that were ſet to watch whether Hathaway eat or drank, were prepoſſeſſed in his Favour, and contributed to carry on the Cheat, or at leaſt connived at it; and ſome of them poſſibly were bribed to ſay what they did: And had a Man of leſs Judgment and Diſcretion than Doctor Martin been Miniſter of the Pariſh, the Credit of this Cheat had infallibly been as well eſtabliſhed, as many others of the ſame kind have been, from leſs ſpecious Circumſtances.

What Species of Dæmons and Animals thoſe Imps were, which our ſagacious Alderman expected to find about the old Woman, or how they were nouriſhed by her, would puzzle any Man to deſcribe, I believe; and he muſt have been confounded, if the Court had required his Worſhip to declare, what he meant by ordering the Doctor to ſearch her. In the Days of Hudibras, it ſeems, it was no uncommon thing to find a Calf an Alderman, a Gooſe a Juſtice; but, in our Days, I preſume, the Government takes Care to exclude all ſuch weak and credulous Creatures from the Magiſtracy, and puts Gentlemen into Commiſſion that will protect the old, the decrepit, and deformed Females in their Pariſhes, from being torn in Pieces by the Rabble, as well as the young and beautiful, from the Rapes of Giants and diſcourteous Knights, the Employment of the celebrated Don Quixot, who ſeems to have been touched alſo with the Alderman's Foible, and to have had great Faith in Magick and Necromancy.

Fuller ordered to be prosecuted.

IT was Ordered by the Lords, on the 19th of January, 1701, That the Attorney General prosecute William Fuller for certain Libels (The Tenor whereof the Reader has seen in Fuller's Trial).

Dr. Drake ordered to be prosecuted.

It was Resolved by the Lords, on the 9th of May, 1702, That in the Preface of a Book, intitled, The History of the last Parliament, begun at Westminster the 10*th of* Feb. 1702, written by Dr. Drake, as he confessed at the Bar, there were several Expressions that were groundless, false, and scandalous, tending to create Jealousies in Her Majesty of her People, &c. and that the Attorney General do prosecute the said Dr. Drake for the same.

The Passages in the said Preface, were as follow: And, perhaps, there was a third Thing in Prospect, of deeper Reach than all these; which was, That should it have pleased God, for our Sins, to have snatched from us the King on the sudden, by Chance of War, or other fatal Accident, during the Tumult of Arms abroad, and the civil Disorders they had raised among us at home, and a numerous, corrupt, licentious Party throughout the Nation, from which the House of Commons was sometimes not free, they might entertain Hopes from the Advantage of being at the Helm, and the Assistance of their Rabble, to have put in Practice their own Schemes, and have given us a new Model of Government of their own Projection, and so to have procured to themselves a lasting Impunity, and to have mounted their own Beast, the Rabble, and driven the sober Part of the Nation like Cattle before them.

That this is no groundless Conjecture, will readily appear to any considering Persons, from the Treatment her Royal Highness the Princess of Denmark, the Heiress Apparent to the Crown, met with all along from them and all their Party: They were not contented to shew her a constant Neglect and Slight themselves, but their whole Party were instructed to treat her not only with Disrespect, but Spight: They were busy to traduce her with false and scandalous Aspersions; and so far they carried the Affront, as to make her at one Time almost the common Subject of the Tittle-Tattle of almost every Coffee-House and Drawing-Room; which they promoted with as much Zeal, Application, and Venom, as if a Bill of Exclusion had been then on the Anvil: And these were the Introductory Ceremonies.

Resolution against Tom Double.

On Tuesday the 12th of May, 1702, it was Resolved by the Lords, That the following Paragraphs in the 89th and 90th Pages of a Book, intitled, Tom Double returned out of the Country: Or, The true Picture of a Modern Whig, &c. there are several Expressions which are groundless, false, and scandalous, tending to create Jealousies in Her Majesty of her People, and to cause great Misunderstandings, Fears, and Disputes, among the Queen's Subjects, &c.

The obnoxious Passages were these, viz.

Whiglove. I find we have miscarried in one great Design: The Train would not take: We were very hot upon it, just before the Parliament met: All the Whig Coffee-Houses rung, how necessary it was to break into the Acts of Settlement, and to exclude ———.

Double. Mum, Whiglove. Talk no more upon that Subject, I beseech you: Fresh Orders are issued; and since we are not strong enough to make it go, and that on the contrary it has alarmed and provoked all Sorts of Men, we are now directed to say, That never any such Thing was intended by our Party; though, God knows, it was the whole Discourse of all our Clubs. Under the Rose, this was one of those Embrio's that proved abortive upon the 30th of December last; but, though it be not seasonable to stir in it now, never fear our abandoning a wicked Design; we never quite lay aside any Mischief: However, since it has really opened the Eyes of a great many, and weakned our Interest among several of our own Side, whom (with Grief of Mind I speak it), we cannot work up to be guilty of so much Injustice; let us take all Occasions of declaring, That we will not violate these Acts upon any Account whatsoever; which we may the more safely do, because, you know, 'tis our Principle, Not to think that we are bound by any Protestations we make, either in private or in publick; and it is one of the great Advantages we have over the rest of our Fellow-Subjects, That we can fetter the Consciences of others, while our own are at perfect Liberty.

A Resolution against Doctor Bincks's Sermon of the 30th of January, 1701-2.

On Saturday the 16th of May, 1702, it was Resolved by the Lords, That in a Sermon preached the 30th of January, 1701-2, in King Henry the Seventh's Chapel, before the Lower House of Convocation, by W. Bincks, D. D. and Proctor for the Diocese of Litchfield and Coventry, there were several Expressions that gave just Scandal and Offence to all Christian People; and that the said Resolution should be communicated to the Lord Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry.

The obnoxious Passages were these, viz.

1702. 2 Annæ. Resolutions against Dr Lloyd bishop of Worcester.

1702. 2 Annæ.

And here one would imagine the latter were resolved to take St. Paul's Expreſſion in the moſt literal Senſe the Words will bear, And crucify to themſelves the Lord afreſh, and, in the neareſt Likeneſs that could be, put him to an Open Shame. If, with Reſpect to the Dignity of the Perſon, to have been born King of the Jews, was what ought to have ſkreened our Saviour from Violence; here is alſo one, not only born to a Crown, but actually poſſeſſed of it. He was not only called King by ſome, and, at the ſame Time, derided by others for being ſo called, but he was acknowledged by all to be a King: He was not juſt dreſſed up, for an Hour or two, in Purple Robes, and ſaluted with a HAIL KING! but the uſual Ornaments of Majeſty were his cuſtomary Apparel: His Subjects owned him to be their King, and yet they brought him before a Tribunal; they judged him; they condemned him; and, that they might not be wanting in any thing to ſet him at naught, they ſpit upon him, and treated him with the utmoſt Contempt. Our Saviour's declaring, That his Kingdom was not of this World, might look like a ſort of Renunciation of his Temporal Sovereignty for the preſent, deſiring only to reign in the Hearts of Men; but here was nothing of this in the Caſe before us: Here was an indiſputable, unrenounced Right of Sovereignty, both by the Laws of God and Man: He was the reigning Prince, and the Lord's Anointed; and yet, in Diſpite of all Law, both Human and Divine, he was by direct Force of Arms, and the moſt daring Methods of a flagrant Rebellion and Violence, deprived at once of his Imperial Crown and Life.

The Fact of this Day was ſuch a vying with the firſt Arch-Rebel, the Apoſtate Angel, Lucifer; it was ſuch a going beyond the Old Serpent in his own Way of Inſolence and Pride, that it is no Wonder if he then began to raiſe his Head, and ſet up for Dominion in this World, when thus warmed and enlivened by a fiery Zeal in ſome, and Rage in others, to the Degree of Drunkenneſs, thirſting after, and ſatiating themſelves in Royal Blood; and in which Reſpect only, heated to the Degree of Frenzy and Madneſs, the Plea in my Text may ſeem to have ſome Hold of them, FATHER FORGIVE THEM, FOR THEY KNOW NOT WHAT THEY DO.

It was Reſolved alſo, on the ſame 16th of May, That there are, in the Pamphlet intitled Reaſons ſo Arddreſſing his Majeſty, to invite into England their Hagineſſes the Electreſs Dowager, and the Electoral Prince of Hanover, &c. Aſſertions and Inſinuations, ſcandalous and dangerous, tending to alienate the Affections of the Subject from Her Majeſty, &c.

Reſolution againſt Toland's Book for the Encouragement of Rebelion.

The obnoxious Paſſages were theſe, viz.

It appears from Hiſtory, That all free People have ſet aſide the Children of Tyrants, for Reaſons of eternal and univerſal Force, as inheriting the Principles and Deſigns of their Parents, bearing an Affection to their Friends, and owing a Revenge to their Enemies, as more likely to graſp at a greater Power than even their Parents, the better to ſecure themſelves from their Diſgrace; and being under extraordinary Obligations to thoſe Foreign Potentates who protected or reſtored them.

In fine, whether the Abjuration be penal or voluntary (for I cannot doubt of one or the other), I hope Care will be taken that it be tendered, as I ſaid before, to all Manner of Perſons, not excepting the King's Majeſty, or Her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs of Denmark. For all the Securities we give to them, they owe this Security to us. Not that I doubt either of them, from which, I am the fartheſt of any Man in the World: But they both of them very well know what Stories and Surmiſes our Enemies have been actively ſpreading to amuſe and intimidate the People. They have whiſpered horrible Things of blind and clancular Bargains. But Cæſar's Wife ought to be unſuſpected as well as innocent.

Reſolutions againſt Dr Lloyd Biſhop of Worceſter.

Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons againſt Dr. WILLIAM LLOYD, Lord Biſhop of Worceſter, and Mr. LLOYD his Son, on the Complaint of Sir JOHN PAKINGTON, in November 1702. 2 Annæ.

1702. 2 Annæ.

ON the 2d of November 1702, a Complaint was made to the Houſe of Commons by Sir John Pakington, againſt the Lord Biſhop of Worceſter, and Mr. Lloyd his Son, for Treſpaſſing on the Rights and Privileges of the Houſe of Commons; and, on the 18th of the ſame Month, Sir John reduced the Charge againſt the Biſhop and his Son to the following Heads, which he preſented to the Houſe (viz.)

1. That, ſoon after the laſt Parliament roſe, the Biſhop of Worceſter took upon him to ſend to me to deſiſt from ſtanding to be elected Knight for that County, and to threaten me, That if I would not deſiſt, he ſhould think himſelf obliged to ſpeak againſt me to the Clergy.

2. He ſent ſome Letters himſelf, and his Secretary ſent others, to ſeveral of his Clergy, with Directions to make what Intereſt they could could againſt me in their ſeveral Pariſhes; and where they could not prevail with ſuch who voted ſingly for me in the laſt Election, to give a Vote for one or both the other Candidates, they ſhould deſire them to ſtay at home; and in order to this, his Lordſhip ſent them Copies of the Poll of their reſpective Pariſhes.

3. He aſperſed me to his Clergy, branding me and my Anceſtors with ſeveral Vices; and at his Confirmations and Viſitations, ſollicited his Clergy to vote againſt me, repreſenting me as very unfit to ſerve in Parliament; and threatning them with his Diſpleaſure, if they did not vote againſt me.

4. He aſperſed me and my Anceſtors to ſeveral of the Laity, who were his Tenants; and threatned them, That if they would not vote againſt me, they ſhould never renew any Eſtate under him; and that he would ſet ſuch Marks upon them, that his Succeſſors ſhould not ſuffer them, nor their Children, to renew any more.

5. Mr. Lloyd, the Biſhop's Son, aſperſed me, and gave ſcandalous Characters of me to ſeveral Freeholders, whom he ſollicited to vote againſt me, and told them, I voted for bringing in a French Government.

6. The Biſhop's Secrerary aſperſed me to ſeveral Freeholders in the like Manner, repreſenting me as unfit to ſit in the Houſe; threatning them with the Biſhop's Diſpleaſure; and ſaid, They might as well vote for the Prince of Wales, as for me.

The Houſe, having taken the ſaid Complaint and Articles into their Conſideration, and heard the Witneſſes to every Part of the Charge,

Reſolved, nemine contradicente, That Sir John Pakington had, by Evidence, fully made out the Charge which he exhibited againſt the Lord Biſhop of Worceſter, and againſt Mr. Lloyd his Son: And Reſolved, That it appeared to that Houſe, That the Proceedings of William Lord Biſhop of Worceſter, his Son, and Agents, in order to the hindering of the Election of a Member for the County of Worceſter, has been Malicious, Unchriſtian, and Arbitrary, in high Violation of the Liberties and Privileges of the Commons of England.

Then they proceeded to addreſs Her Majeſty to remove the ſaid Biſhop from the Poſt of Lord Almoner to her Majeſty; to whom ſhe gave the following Anſwer:

"I am very ſorry that there is Occaſion for "this Addreſs, againſt the Biſhop of Wor- "ceſter: I ſhall order and direct, that he ſhall "no longer continue to ſupply the Place of "Almoner, but I will put another in his Room "to perform that Office.

The Commons alſo Ordered Mr. Attorney to proſecute Mr. Lloyd for his ſaid Offences, after his Privilege as a Member of the Lower Houſe of Convocation was out.

But in the mean while, between the Time the Commons had Reſolved on the Addreſs to the Queen againſt the Biſhopof Worceſter, and their preſenting it, the Lords addreſſed her Majeſty in the Biſhop's Favour, repreſenting, That it was the undoubted Right of every Lord of Parliament, and of every other Subject of England, to have an Opportunity of making his Defence, before he ſuffer any Sort of Puniſhment; and therefore humbly deſired Her Majeſty, that ſhe would be pleaſed not to remove the Lord Biſhop of Worceſter, from the Place of Lord Almoner, nor to ſhew any Mark of her Diſpleaſure towards him, till he be found guilty of ſome Crime by due Courſe of Law. To which the Queen made the following Anſwer, (viz)

1702. 2 Annæ.

"I agree, That every Peer and Lord of "Parliament, and indeed every other Perſon, "ought to have an Opportunity of being "heard to any Matters objected againſt him, "before he be puniſhed. I have not yet re- "ceived any Complaint of the Biſhop of Wor- "ceſter; but I look upon it as my undoubted "Right, to continue or diſplace any Servant, "attending upon my own Perſon, when I "ſhall think proper."——And the Biſhop of Worceſter was immediately after diſmiſſed from the Place of Almoner.

Remarks on the Reſolution of the Lords and Commons.

As to Fuller, he was very juſtly cenſured by the Lords, and ordered to be proſecuted, being one of the moſt notorious Cheats and Impoſtors of the Age, having more than once endeavoured to impoſe upon both Houſes of Parliament and the Miniſtry, as appears by his Trial above.

Nor was their Cenſure of Dr. Drake at all ſevere: For it is very evident, that King William was far from uſing any Endeavours to ſet the Princeſs of Denmark aſide; on the contrary, he lived in perfect Friendſhip with her a little before his Death, whatever Miſunderſtandings there might have been before, and even put the Adminiſtration of the Government into the Hands of her neareſt Relations and Friends: The Queen's Uncle, the Earl of Rocheſter, was his Prime Miniſter, and the Earl of Marlborough, whom that Princeſs chiefly relied on, was made Ambaſſador and Plenipotentiary to negotiate and form a Confederacy with our Allies againſt France: Indeed there was a Presbyterian and Republican Faction, that did not ſcruple to declare openly, That they would gladly ſet the Princeſs Anne aſide, if it was in their Power; but theſe Men were not at all in King William's Favour at that Time. It was a Juſtice due to the Memory of that Prince, therefore, to declare, That the Report, that the late King intended to exclude her Majeſty from ſucceeding to the Crown, was falſe and groundleſs.

But I don't think there was the like Reaſon to be ſevere upon the Author of Tom Double; for he only charges the Republicans with ſuch a Deſign, and not King William: And their Lordſhips themſelves were very ſenſible, that Toland and The Obſervator, the then Scribblers for the Faction, had dared to make a Propoſal of that Nature in Print; and actually cenſured Toland's Libel on that Account.

As to their Reſolution againſt Doctor Bincks's 30th of Jan. Sermon, I leave every Man to judge of it as he is enclined: They fairly left the Doctor to the Cenſure of his Dioceſan; but I never heard he ſuffered for his zealous Declamation on this Occaſion.

1702. 2 Annæ. Remarks.

The Complaint of Sir John Pakington againſt the Biſhop of Worceſter, and the Reſolution of the Commons thereupon were exceeding juſt: Never was a more ſcandalous Charge, or more fully proved: Never did a Spiritual Lord interpoſe ſo violently in the Election of a Commoner, by Calumny, Detraction, Threats, and every vile Art, proſtituting his Authority and Character, to gratifie his Revenge on a Gentleman of Quality and Fortune, that ſtood Candidate to repreſent his County: Every one, who has any Veneration for the Fathers of the Church, muſt, in the Queen's Words, be ſorry there was ſuch Occaſion to complain of a Right Reverend Prelate, who once appeared a glorious Confeſſor of the Church.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged him with High-Treaſon, in going to France and returning to England again without Licence, contrary to the Statute of 9 W. III.

His Confeſſion.

The Priſoner confeſſed the Fact, pleaded Guilty, and threw himſelf upon the Queen's Mercy; but was told, he muſt apply himſelf elſewhere for Her Majeſty's Pardon: And the Chief Juſtice proceeded to pronounce Sentence of Death upon him as a Traitor, after he had made the following Speech upon the Occaſion, viz.

His Sentence, with the Speech of the Chief Juſtice thereupon.

Mr. Boucher, You are, by your own Confeſſion, convicted of High-Treaſon; for which, Judgment of Death is to be pronounced upon you, and which you are to ſuffer under thoſe Circumſtances which the Law hath appointed.

The Fact of which you were accuſed, and have now confeſſed, is, That ſince the 11th Day of December 1688, you went into France without Licence either from the late King or Queen, and have returned ſince the 14th of January 1697. without any Licence under the Privy-Seal, either from the late King or Her Majeſty that now is; which Fact is made High-Treaſon by the Statute of the Ninth Year of the late King.

The Wiſdom and Juſtice in making that Law, will be very evident to any one that will but reflect upon the Poſture of our Affairs at that Time: For in the Year preceeding to that of the making thereof, there was an horrid Conſpiracy, formed from among that Party of Men who had ſo left the Kingdom, to aſſaſſinate the late King; to introduce a Popiſh and French Power, for the Subverſion of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties and Properties of the People of England; which was managed with that Privacy, and carried on with that Secrecy, that it was not diſcovered, nay, not ſo much as ſuſpected, untill it arrived to that Maturity, that it was come to the very Point of being put in Execution.

The Truth of which is very clear, as well by the Proofs produced at the Trials of ſeveral of the Malefactors, as even by their own Confeſſion.

In the following Year the Peace of Ryſwick was made, whereby the Intercourſe was reſtored between England and France. From thence it was evident, that divers of that Party of Men would return into the Realm, thereby to have an Opportunity to revive and carry on that horrid Deſign, in the Succeſs whereof they had been ſo diſappointed; for which, no doubt, they were not a little enraged, and it could not be otherwiſe expected but they would make uſe of it: For thoſe of the ſaid Principles will be guilty of the ſame Practices.

Therefore it was neceſſary to make a Returning into England, by any of thoſe who were under theſe Circumſtances, to be ſo very Penal, unleſs they ſhould firſt give Satisfaction to the Government, either of their Innocence or Repentance, and obtain a Licence and Approbation for their Return under the Privy-Seal: For their returning in any other manner, is a Danger to the Queen's Perſon, and her Kingdom.

This Treaſon, though it ſeems, and is, new in the Form, yet it is compounded of an old Treaſon, known in the ancient Law of the Kingdom, which is, that of adhering to the King's Enemies: For what can be thought of thoſe who, in Time of War, ſhall abandon their own Country, and be harboured and protected in an Enemy's Country, for being of an Intereſt inconſiſtent with, and even repugnant to that of their own.

What your Deſign might be in returning in this manner, whether to revive and purſue thoſe wicked Practices, your own Conſcience is your Witneſs, and will be your Judge; and if that ſhall acquit you, it will be for your Advantage in the World to come. But you are an Offender againſt the Law of the Land, which has made this your Offence to be High-Treaſon, and therefore that Judgment appointed for one guilty thereof muſt be pronounced: And it was pronounced accordingly; but Boucher was reprieved, and afterwards pardoned, as I apprehend; for I never heard he was executed, though I was at London about the Time he was condemned.

Aſhby's Declaration againſt White, &c.

THE Plaintiff Matthew Aſhby, brought his Action againſt William White, Richard Talboys, William Bell, and Richard Heydon, Defendants, Conſtables of the Borough of Aylesbury, and declared, That on the 26th of December, in the 12th Year of King William III. a Writ iſſued out of Chancery, directed to the Sheriff of the County of Bucks, reciting that the King had ordered a Parliament to be held at Weſtminſter, on the 6th of February then next following, and commanded the Sheriff to cauſe two Knights to be elected for the County, two Citizens for every City, and two Burgeſſes for every Borough: Which Writ was declared to the Sheriff, who made a Precept in Writing under the Seal of his Office, directed to the ſaid Conſtables of the Borough of Aylesbury, commanding them to cauſe two Burgeſſes of the ſaid Borough to be elected, &c. which Precept was delivered to the Defendants, to whom it belonged to execute the ſame: By Virtue of which Writ and Precept, the Burgeſſes of that Borough being ſummoned, did aſſemble before the Defendants to elect two Burgeſſes; and they being aſſembled in order to make ſuch Election, the Plaintiff Matthew Aſhby, then a Burgeſs and Inhabitant of the ſaid Borough, and duely qualified to give his Vote at that Election, was there ready, and offered his Vote to the Defendants for the Choice of Sir Thomas Lee, Bart. and Simon Mayne, Eſq; and the Defendants were then required to receive and admit of his Vote: That the Defendants, not being ignorant of the Premiſſes, but contriving, and fraudulently, and maliciouſly intending to damnify the Plaintiff, and to defeat him of that his Privilege, did hinder him from giving his Vote, and did refuſe to permit him to give his Vote; ſo that the two Burgeſſes were elected without any Vote given by the Plaintiff, to his Damage of 200 l. Upon Not Guilty pleaded, Iſſue was joined, and the Cauſe was tried at the Aſſizes for the County of Bucks; and the Plaintiff obtained a Verdict, and 5 l. Damages beſides Coſts.

Aſhby recovers.

Judgment arreſted in the King's-Bench.

The Defendants thereupon moved the Court of King's-Bench in Arreſt of Judgment, inſiſting, That the Action did not lie, and this Point being argued by Counſel, and afterwards by the Court, three of the Judges, (viz.) Powel, Gould, and Powys, were of Opinion the Action would not lie; for that the Judging of Elections belonged ſolely to the Houſe of Commons; adding, That this was the firſt Action of the Kind that had been brought; and, if theſe Suits were encouraged, it would make the Return-Officers liable to an infinite Number of Suits. The Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, however, differed from his Brethren, being of Opinion, That every Man had a Right to ſue the Return-Officer (if he had a legal Vote), where his Vote was refuſed: But, there being three Judges againſt one, the Conſtables carried their Point; and it was adjudged, That the Plaintiff had no Cauſe of Action.

This Matter being brought before the Houſe of Lords afterwards, by a Writ of Error, the Judges were ordered to deliver their Opinions: Whereupon Sir Tho. Trevor, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, and ſeveral other Judges, declared it was their Opinion, That the Houſe of Commons only had a Right to judge of Elections, and conſequently who were the Electors; and obſerved, That Petitions to that Houſe were frequently founded on Allegations; that ſome of the Voters had no Right, and that others were refuſed that had a Right: Nor had it ever been diſputed but the Commons were the only proper Judges of this Matter; adding, That if two independent Juriſdictions ſhould be allowed in the ſame Caſe, this muſt frequently occaſion contrary Judgments, and create great Confuſion in the Execution of ſuch Judgments.

Reſolutions of the Lords contra.

To this it was anſwered, That a Voter had no other Remedy but in a Court of Law: For, ſuppoſing the Perſon was returned he would have voted for, he had no Pretence to complain to the Houſe of Commons; and if they could admit of ſuch a Complaint, they could give him no Damages to make him Satisfaction for the Officer's denying his Vote. And ſince this was a Right inherent to every Voter, it was reaſonable an Action ſhould be brought for it in the Courts of Law, where all other Rights were tried. That, if this Determination of the King's-Bench was allowed, it would amount to an Indemnity for the Return-Officers, how partial or unjuſt ſoever they ſhould prove, and exceedingly multiply theſe Diſorders: And to this latter Opinion their Lordſhips agreeing, confirmed the Verdict given for Aſhby the Plaintiff at the Aſſizes, over-ruled the Determination of the Court of King's-Bench, and gave Judgment for Aſhby the Plaintiff.

Judgment for Aſhby in the Houſe of Peers.

Reſolutions of the Commons thereupon.

The Commons, upon this Deciſion of the Houſe of Lords, Reſolved,

1. That, according to the known Laws and Uſage of Parliament, it was the ſole Right of the Commons (except in Caſes otherwiſe provided for by Act of Parliament) to examine and determine all Matters relating to the Right of Election of their own Members.

2. That

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

2. That neither the Qualification of an Elector, or the Right of any Perſon elected, is cognizable or determinable elſewhere than before the Commons, except as aforeſaid.

3. That the examining and determining the Qualification or Right of any Elector, or any Perſon elected in any Court of Law, or elſewhere than before the Commons, except as aforeſaid, will expoſe all Mayors, and other Return-Officers, to Multiplicity of Actions and Vexatious Suits, and ſubject them to different and independent Juriſdictions, and inconſiſtent Determinations

4. That Matthew Aſhby having brought his Action againſt White and the reſt of the Conſtables of Aylesbury, for not receiving his Vote, was guilty of a Breach of Privilege.

5. That whoever ſhall commence or proſecute any Action, Indictment, or Information, which ſhall bring the Right of the Electors or Elected to the Determination of any other Juriſdiction than the Houſe of Commons, except as aforeſaid, ſuch Perſons, and all Attorneys, Sollicitors, Counſellors, and Serjeants at Law, ſolliciting, pleading, or proſecuting in any ſuch Caſe, are guilty of a high Breach of the Privilege of this Houſe. And theſe Reſolutions were ordered to be fixed on Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, ſigned by the Clerk.

Reſolutions of the Lords contra.

On the other hand the Lords Reſolved,

1. That, by the known Laws of this Kingdom, every Freeholder, or other Perſon, having a Right to vote at the Election of Members to ſerve in Parliament, and being willfully denied or hindered ſo to do by the Officer who ought to receive the ſame, may maintain his Action againſt ſuch Officer, and recover Damages for the Injury.

2. That the aſſerting that a Perſon, having Right to give his Vote at any Election, and being hindered ſo to do by the Officer, who ought to take the ſame, is without Remedy for ſuch Wrong, by the ordinary Courſe of Law, is deſtructive of the Property of the Subject, againſt the Freedom of Elections, and manifeſtly tends to encourage Corruption and Partiality in Officers, who are to make Returns in Parliament, and to ſubject the Freeholders, and other Electors, to their arbitrary Will and Pleaſure.

3. That the declaring Matthew Aſhby guilty of a Breach of Privilege of the Houſe of Commons for proſecuting his Action againſt the Conſtables of Aylesbury, after he had obtained a Judgment in Parliament for Recovery of his Damages, is an unprecedented Attempt upon the Judicature in Parliament; and is, in Effect, to ſubject the Law of England to the Votes of the Houſe of Commons.

4. That the deterring Electors from proſecuting Actions in the ordinary Courſe of Law, where they are deprived of their Right of voting; and the terrifying Attorneys, Sollicitors, Counſellors, and Serjeants at Law, from ſolliciting, proſecuting, and pleading in ſuch Caſes, by voting their ſo doing to be a Breach of Privilege of the Houſe of Commons, is a manifeſt aſſuming a Power to controul the Law, to hinder the Courſe of Juſtice, and ſubject the Property of Engliſhmen to the arbitrary Votes of the Houſe of Commons.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

But notwithſtanding the Commons had Reſolved that Aſhby was guilty of a Breach of Privilege in commencing an Action againſt White, and the reſt of the Conſtables of Aylesbury, they did not proceed to take Aſhby, or his Counſel, Attorney or Agents, into Cuſtody for it; and the Parliament was no ſooner up, but Aſhby's Attorney, Robert Mead, executed the Judgment againſt the Conſtables of Aylesbury; and brought Actions of the like Nature for John Paty, John Oviat, John Paton, jun. Henry Baſſe, and Daniel Horne, five more Aylesbury Men, againſt the ſaid Conſtables, for refuſing them Votes at the Election of Members to ſerve in Parliament for the ſaid Borough of Aylesbury.

The Judgment executed againſt the Conſtables.

Five Actions brought againſt them.

Whereupon, the Parliament meeting again in the Month of October 1704, Complaint was made to the Houſe of Commons, of the Execution of the ſaid Judgment againſt the Conſtables of Aylesbury, at the Suit of Aſhby; and of the five new Actions brought by Mead the Attorney, in the Name of the other five Aylesbury Men: And the Serjeant at Arms was ordered to take the ſaid Attorney, and the five Aylesbury Men, into Cuſtody; but the Attorney was ſo wiſe as to keep out of the Way, though his Clients were brought before the Houſe by the Serjeant, on Tueſday the 5th of December, when Mr. Crabb, the Attorney for the Conſtables (the Defendants) produced five Declarations, which Mead, the Plaintiff's Attorney, had delivered him, againſt the ſaid Conſtables, being all of the ſame Tenour with that of Aſhby's againſt the Conſtables, for refuſing their reſpective Votes. And one of the Declarations being read, and the Plaintiffs examined thereupon, the Houſe Reſolved, That John Paty, and the reſt of Plaintiffs, had been guilty of commencing and proſecuting Actions at Common Law, againſt William White, and others, late Conſtables of Aylesbury, for not allowing their reſpective Votes in the Election of Members to ſerve in Parliament, contrary to the Declaration, in High Contempt of the Juriſdiction, and in Breach of the known Privileges of that Houſe: And ordered them all to be committed to Newgate by the Speaker's Warrant, which was done accordingly.

The five Aylesbury Men taken into Cuſtody by the Commons.

The Houſe, being informed on the 24th of February, that there had been Endeavours to bring a Writ of Error on the Proceedings in the Court of King's-Bench, upon a Habeas Corpus granted there for the Perſons committed by that Houſe to Newgate, for Breach of their Privilege, thereby to bring the Commitments of that Houſe under the Examination of the Houſe of Peers, addreſſed Her Majeſty, laying before her, the undoubted Right of the Commons of England to commit for Breach of Privilege; and that the Commitments of the Houſe were not examinable in any other Court whatever, and that no ſuch Writ of Error was ever brought, nor did any Writ of Error lie in that Caſe. And as that Houſe had expreſſed their Duty to Her Majeſty,

An Habeas Corpus brought by the Aylesbury Men, and a Writ of Error petitioned.

The Commons Addreſs againſt the Writ of Error.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

Majeſty, in giving Diſpatch to all the Supplies; ſo they had an entire Confidence in Her Majeſty's Goodneſs and Juſtice, That ſhe would not give Leave for the bringing any Writ of Error in this Caſe, which would tend to the overthrowing the Rights and Privileges of the Commons of England.

The Queen's Anſwer.

To which Addreſs Her Majeſty anſwered, She was much troubled to find the Houſe of Commons of Opinion, That her granting the Writs of Error, mentioned in their Addreſs, was againſt their Privileges, of which her Majeſty would always be as tender as of her own Prerogative; and therefore the Houſe of Commons might depend on it, Her Majeſty would not do any Thing to give them any juſt Occaſion of Complaint: But this Matter, relating to the Courſe of Judicial Proceedings, being of the higheſt Importance, Her Majeſty thought it neceſſary to weigh and conſider very carefully, what might be proper for her to do in a Thing of ſo great a Concern.

The Counſel and Attorneys for the Priſoners ordered into Cuſtody.

The ſame Day the Commons Reſolved, That Mr. Francis Page, Mr. James Montague, Mr. Nicholas Lechmere, and Mr. Alexander Denton, who had been concerned in pleading upon the Return of the Habeas Corpus, on behalf of the Priſoners committed by that Houſe, were guilty of a Breach of Privilege; and Ordered them to be taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms.

They alſo Ordered the five Aylesbury Men to be removed from Newgate, and delivered into the Cuſtody of their Serjeant at Arms; which was done accordingly.

But examining the Serjeant the next Day, as to the Counſellors at Law he was ordered to take into Cuſtody, he anſwered, That he had taken Mr. James Montague into Cuſtody, who ſhewed him a Protection from the Houſe of Lords (granted at the Petition of the five Aylesbury Men) by which, the ſaid Mr. Montague, Mr. Page, Mr. Lechmere, and Mr. Denton, as alſo Mr. Lee and Mr. Harris, the Attorneys in the Cauſe, were aſſigned Counſel and Attorneys for the ſaid Perſons impriſoned, and protected by the Houſe of Lords: And all Officers, Serjeants at Arms, and other Perſons, were thereby forbid to meddle with them.

That he had like to have taken Mr. Nicholas Lechmere, but he got out of his Chamber in the Temple, two pair of Stairs, at the back Window, by the Help of his Sheets and a Rope; and that the ſaid Harris was alſo taken into Cuſtody, but that Mr. Page, Mr. Denton, and Mr. Lee, were not to be found.

An Abſtract of the Proceedings in the Court of King's-Bench.

I ſhall, in the next Place, look back to the Proceedings in the King's-Bench, which gave Birth to theſe extraordinary Reſolutions of the Commons, in relation to the Five Aylesbury Men, and their Counſel, and Attorneys.

The Five Aylesbury Men above-mentioned, having been committed to Newgate by the Commons, as related above, in Michaelmas Vacation, 1704, prayed Writs of Habeas Corpus in order to be admitted to Bail: Whereupon all the Judges aſſembled, and reſolved unanimouſly, That they were not bailable; and thereupon the Priſoners were remanded to Newgate.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

In Hillary Term following, the Priſoner's Counſel moved the Court of Queen's-Bench for Writs of Habeas Corpus, which were granted, and upon the Return thereof, that Court deſiring the Aſſiſtance of all the Judges, they were all of Opinion, except the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, That they ought to be remanded to Newgate.

The Priſoners Counſel on this Occaſion, were, Mr. Page, Mr. Montague, Mr. Lechmere, and Mr. Denton, who inſiſted, That there was no Breach of Privilege returned: That it did not appear the Priſoners were any ways related to the Houſe of Commons, either as Members or Officers. They agreed, every Court had Power to keep Order among themſelves; but to take a Man out of the Houſe, who was not of the Houſe, or guilty of any Breach of Privilege, for ought appeared by the Return, they knew no Law for it: That the bringing an Action was no Crime by any known Law: That there was a Judgment at Law againſt the Conſtables of Aylesbury, which could not be got over till ſome Act of Parliament interpoſed; and the Law being ſo, they did not know any Crime in bringing this Action, while the former Judgment remained on Record.

That as to the bringing an Action againſt the Commons' Declaration, they muſt oppoſe the Declaration of the Lords to it; and that Privileges againſt the known Laws of the Land, were void in themſelves: That though both Houſes were proper Judges of their own Privileges, yet that Court had formerly judged of their Privileges: That in the Caſe of the Lord Banbury, though the Houſe of Peers declared he was no Peer, yet, when he was proſecuted for Murder in that Court, and inſiſted on his Peerage, the Court allowed his Plea, and refuſed to try him.

That, had it been a general Commitment, without ſhewing the Offence, and ſaid to be for a Breach of Privilege only, it might have been a good Commitment; but here the Cauſe being ſet forth, and it appearing by the Judgment of the Lords, in the Caſe of Aſhby and White, That this was no Cauſe for a Commitment, they ought to be bailed: That the Queen Herſelf could not, by a Commitment, exclude the Subject from the Benefit of the Law, and prevent his being bailed by this Court upon Cauſe ſhewn, much leſs the Houſe of Commons.

The Caſe was afterwards argued by the Judges, who were all (except the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt) of Opinion, They ought to be remanded.

The Judges remand the Priſoners.

They held, That, as the Priſoners were committed by a ſuperior Authority, they had nothing to do to intermeddle with it: That there had been no Caſe or Opinion cited, where the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall undertook to judge of the Authority of the Houſe of Commons; or, that the Orders and Commitments of the Houſe of Commons, were diſcharged in Weſtminſter-Hall; which was a good Argument, they had no Power to do it: The Reſolution of the Commons upon a Breach of Privilege, was a Judgment; and the Commitment, an Execution; which could not not be controuled. The Houſes of Parliament reſpectively were ſole Judges of their ſeveral Privileges; and where there was a Diſpute between the two Houſes about them, the only Method that had ever been taken to adjuſt them, had been by Conferences: That the Reſolution of the Lords, in the Caſe of Aſhby and White, did not bind the Commons, or determine their Privileges; and it would be a ſtrange Thing, if the Houſe of Commons ſhould have Power to examine and judge of a Breach of Privilege, and have no Power to puniſh the Breach of it.

Lord Chief Juſtice Holt's Reaſons for bailing them.

The Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, on the other Hand, gave the following Reaſons, why he did not think this a legal Commitment: He ſaid, This Caſe depended on the Vote that was recited in the Speaker's Warrant, (viz.) That it did appear to that Honourable Houſe, that John Paty, &c. had been guilty of commencing and proſecuting an Action at Common Law, againſt W. White, and others, late Conſtables of Aylesbury, for not allowing his Vote in an Election of Members of Parliament, contrary to the Declaration, in high Contempt of the Juriſdiction, and in Breach of the known Privileges of this Houſe.

That he owned himſelf to lie under two Diſadvantages; one, That all the reſt of the Judges do agree with his three Brethren, from whom he had the Misfortune to diſſent; the other, That he oppoſed the Votes of the Houſe of Commons, and did begin to think, he might juſtify himſelf in reſigning his Opinion to the reſt; but that he valued more the Dictates of his own Conſcience, than any thing he could ſuffer in this World; and by that and his Judgment (though it were but weak) he would be guided.

That this was not ſuch an Impriſonment as the Freemen of England ought to be bound by; and that it did highly concern the People of England, not to be bound by a Declaration of the Houſe of Commons, in a Matter that before was lawful.

That neither Houſe of Parliament has a Power ſeparately to diſpoſe of the Liberty or Property of the People, for that cannot be done, but by the Queen, Lords, and Commons; and this is the Security of our Engliſh Conſtitution, which cannot be altered, but by Act of Parliament.

That there is a Crime charged by the Vote for commencing an Action; but ſure, that cannot be a Breach of Privilege: For an Original may be filed againſt a Member of Parliament, during the Time of Privilege, ſo that you don't moleſt him, and it is no Breach of Privilege; as it was reſolved in Sir George Benion's Caſe, 14 Char. II. for otherwiſe, by Lapſe of Time in ſeveral Actions, he may be barred by the Statute of Limitations: So that, if it be not a Breach of Privilege to commence an Action againſt a Member of Parliament, then how can it be ſo, to commence an Action againſt the Conſtables of Aylesbury?

But then the Vote goes further, and ſays, For commencing and proſecuting an Action: But Proſecuting may not be a Breach of Privilege neither; for Entering and Continuing, is Proſecuting, which may be done without a Breach of Privilege.

1702-3. 2 & 3 Ann.

That it does not appear that the Conſtable of Aylesbury has any Privilege above another Perſon; for no Man is preſumed to be privileged, unleſs it be ſhewn; and he has no Privilege as Conſtable.

That the Vote goes yet further, and ſays, For not allowing his Vote in an Election of Members to ſerve in this preſent Parliament: But this can be no Crime.

That he admitted they were Judges of their own Privileges; but the Law muſt alſo be obſerved. By 2 Ric. III. Fol. 9. it appears, it was no Crime by the Common Law, to bring an Action, though never ſo malicious, falſe, or groundleſs, where it is adjudged, that there was no Puniſhment for it; becauſe it was in a Method of Juſtice: But when Buſineſs began to increaſe, Coſts were given againſt the Plaintiff by 23 Hen. VIII. for bringing an Action cauſeleſsly. A Peer cannot have an Action of Scandalum Magnatum, where there is no Cauſe for the Action wherein he is charged with Scandal: So much the Law regarded the Right of bringing Actions.

That when Subjects have ſuch a Right to bring Actions, it cannot be ſtopped by Privilege of Parliament; for no Privilege of Parliament can extend ſo far as to deſtroy a Man's Right.

That it has been adjudged a good Action by the Law of the Land; and that Damages may be recovered for the Injury, in not allowing his Vote; and this Action is the ſame as Aſhby and White, which lies before us; and if we conſult the Records, we ſhall find it to be the ſame.

That the latter Part of this Vote, is, That the proſecuting this Action is contrary to the Declaration, in high Contempt of the Juriſdiction, and in Breach of the known Privileges of this Houſe.

That the Privileges of the Houſe of Commons are limited; for there is no Privilege in Caſe of Treaſon, or Felony, or Breach of the Peace: For a Juſtice of Peace may commit a Member for Breach of the Peace; and if he ſhould be indicted for it, his Plea of Privilege would not be allowed.

That nothing can make a Privilege, that was not ſo before (for the Breach of which a Man ſhall looſe his Life), but an Act of Parliament.

That each Houſe is judge of their own Privileges, becauſe they are more converſant with the Privileges of their own Houſe; ſo the Judges decline it: But if they come incidently before the Courts of Law, they muſt determine it there.

That ſuppoſe the Houſe of Commons had not meddled in this Matter, but the Defendants in this Action had pleaded to the Juriſdiction of this Court, That this was a Matter examinable only in the Parliament, and the Plaintiff had demurred; we muſt then have determined it, and be Judges then of their Privileges.

few is, because they do not seek for it. We are bound to take Notice of the Customs of Parliament, for they are Part of the Law of the Land; and there are the same Methods of knowing it, as the Law in Westminster-Hall.

In Clarendon's History, Part I. Fol. 310. He was Lord Chancellor of England, a Man of great Probity and Learning: His Observations touching Privileges of Parliament are these.

It is not to be believed, how many sober, well-minded Men, who were real Lovers of the Peace of the Kingdom, and had a full Submission and Reverence to the known Laws, were imposed upon, and had their Understandings confounded, and so their Wills perverted, by the meer Mention of Privilege of Parliament; which, instead of the plain and intelligible Notion of it, was, by the Dexterity of those Bouteseus, and their Agents, and the Sottishness of the People, rendered such a Mystery, as could be only explained by themselves, and intended as far as they found necessary for their Occasions, and was to be acknowledged a good Reason for any Thing that no other Reason could be given for. We are, say they, and have been always confessed, the only Judges of our own Privileges, and whatsoever we declare to be our Privileges, are such; otherwise, whosoever determines that it is not so, makes himself Judge of that whereof the Cognizance belongs only to us. And this Sophistical Riddle perplexed many, who, notwithstanding the desperate Consequence they saw must result from such Logick, taking the first Proposition for true, which being rightly understood is so, have not been able to wind themselves out of the Labyrinth of the Conclusion: I say, the Proposition rightly understood, they are the only Judges of their own Privileges; that is, upon the Breach of those Privileges which the Law hath declared to be their own, and what Punishment is to be inflicted upon such Breach; but there can be no Privilege, of which the Law doth not take Notice, and which is not pleadable by and at Law.

The same Part, Page 312. But that their being Judges of their Privileges should qualify them to make new Privileges, or that their Judgment should create them such, as it was a Doctrine never before heard of, so it could not but produce all those monstrous Effects we have seen: When they have attempted to swallow all the Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown, the Liberties and Lands of the Church, the Power and Jurisdiction of the Peers; in a Word, the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of England, in the bottomless, and insatiable Gulph of their own Privileges.

That he had yet a greater Authority than this, the Opinion of King Charles I. in his Answer to the 19 Propositions from both Houses of Parliament, in Lord Clarendon's History, Part I. Page 498. which Answer is in the King's own Words, in Rushworth's Collections, 3 Vol. Part I. Page 725, 730, 731.

That though the bringing this Action be contrary to the Declaration, it does not follow, therefore, that it must be a Breach of Privilege; for this Vote has not obtained the Authority of a Law, and they have no more Power to declare the Law, than they have to make a Law.

That if bringing an Action is a Breach of Privilege, why was not Ashby laid hold on? He prosecuted to Judgment and Execution; but these Persons are committed for commencing an Action. 1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

How can the bringing an Action in one Court be a Contempt to another?

If a Man that has a Privilege in one Court, is sued in another, he shall have his Privilege: But it is no Contempt in the Plaintiff that he sues in another Court, and there is no Punishment for it; much less can it be a Contempt to the House of Commons, where no Action can be brought.

That he admitted, the House of Commons may commit any Person, and for any Crime, because they may impeach any Person for any Crime whatsoever; but that Course is seldom taken, unless where the Crime requires a strict Persecution, and very much concerns the Publick.

That the Lord Shaftesbury's Case is not like this; for he was a Member of the House, and it was for a Contempt in the House.

The House may, at any Time, commit a Man for a Contempt in the Face of the House; whereas the Prisoners are committed, not for a Breach of Privilege, or Contempt, but because they have brought their Actions, which are legal, and so adjudged by the Lords in the Writ of Error.

That he did not question but that the Warrant was a good Warrant.

That lex & consuetudo Parliamenti, is as much the Law of the Land, as any other Law. 'Tis the Law gives the Queen her Prerogative: 'Tis the Law gives Jurisdiction to the House of Lords; and 'tis the Law limits the Jurisdiction of the House of Commons.

That if the Ecclesiastical Court exceed their Jurisdiction, a Prohibition will lie; and even the King's Acts, if contrary to Law, are void.

He insisted, That the Lord Banbury's Case was a great Authority for him.

He petitioned the House of Lords to sit, and also to have the King's Leave: The Lords determined he was not a Lord; yet, when he was brought before the Court of King's-Bench upon an Indictment, by the Name of Charles Knollys, Esq; he here pleaded, and insisted, That he was a Peer; which Plea was allowed, and he was not tried.

I proceed in the next Place, to give some select Speeches that were made in the House of Commons on this Occasion.

A Speech of Sir Simon Harcourt's, against the Action.

Sir Simon Harcourt. It hath been said, That the Question now before you is, Whether Judgment being given in the Court of Queen's-Bench, a Writ of Error does not lie in the House of Lords to reverse that Judgment? I cannot, by any Means, agree that to be the Question.

But that which I take to be the proper Question before you is, Whether or no it be the sole Right of the Commons of England to determine their own Elections? If you are of that Opinion, never let your Disease grow to such a Head as to put you upon the Necessity of complaining of a Judgment of the Lords, but rather check it in its Infancy.

It

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

It may, perhaps, ſound harſh, That a Man ſhall not be admitted to make Uſe and have the Benefit of the Law; and yet, when that Law is thoroughly digeſted, I believe no Gentleman in this Houſe, but will agree, That there may be many ſuch Inſtances, where you will not endure any Suit at Law. I cannot give you any better Inſtances than what have been mentioned to you by a learned Gentleman on the other Side, who approves of this Proceeding by Writ of Error; the Proſecution againſt Sir William Williams, for publiſhing a Libel (as it was called) by Direction of this Houſe, and an Action againſt the Serjeant for obeying your Commands. If ſuch an Action ſhould be brought againſt the Speaker or Serjeant, ſhould we ſit ſtill here to ſee what they would do in the Courts below, and afterwards wait for the Event in the Houſe of Lords by Writ of Error?

'Tis very true, theſe Judgments that are mentioned by that Gentleman continue ſtill unreverſed. As to that given againſt the Speaker, he mentioned it as a Precedent not fit to be followed: Indeed, 'tis a Reproach to the Houſe to mention it, ſince no Parliament has reverſed it. As to the other Action, againſt the Serjeant, he ſays, Judgment was given againſt him, and that ſtands in full Force; as I remember that Caſe, it went off upon the Form of Pleading.

But nothing of that Kind being the Queſtion now, I beg Leave to ſtate what this Action is that is now before us: For Gentlemen in the Country, who have frequently met with Actions proſecuted without Cenſure, for Matters relating to the Elections, may perhaps be ſurprized, till they come to conſider what the Point is. This is not an Action grounded upon any Statute whatſoever. 'Tis agreed, an Action may be maintained, where a Statute gives a particular Remedy; but this is an Action founded upon the Common Law. Whatever your Privileges are, if you will conſent to an Act of Parliament to make other Perſons Judges of thoſe Privileges, ſo far as you conſent, if they purſue the Power given them by Act of Parliament, there is no Wrong done you: But an Action brought at Common Law, is that which, I think, interferes with the inherent Right of this Houſe.

We have, I think, attained to one Piece of Knowledge upon this Debate, That this was the firſt Action that was ever brought of this Kind; and Gentlemen will not much wonder why this is brought now, when they conſider what Endeavours have been uſed to make this Houſe contemptible. I believe this may be thought the moſt probable Method to attain that End.

I would not repeat the Precedents that have been quoted; yet I cannot but take Notice of that of Barnardiſton and Soame: Thoſe Arguments that were made uſe of for this Judgment in that Caſe were rejected; and the Judgment of the Lords was then directly contrary. I ſhould be very glad to hear how the Lords Judgment of Reverſal, in that Caſe and in this, are reconcilable. The Commons, at that Time, would ſcarce have ſuffered ſuch an Attempt upon their Privileges; and I hope we ſhall be as careful and as zealous to preſerve ours: We have as much Power as our Predeceſſors; we ſhall never ſuffer for Want of Power, if we do not ſuffer for Want of Will to exert it.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

I expect to hear of the great Authority of one learned Judge, that differed from the reſt: I have the utmoſt Eſteem for his Judgment; but am ſorry to hear any Inſinuation, that thoſe Judges who have given their Opinion otherwiſe, are guilty of a Breach of their Oaths. It hath been touched upon, That, whenever any Queſtion has been asked the Judges concerning the Privileges of the Lords, or the Privileges of the Commons, their Anſwer is recorded for the Inſtruction of all their Succeſſors, and to the Honour of both Houſes of Parliament, That it was a Matter above their Knowledge: The Law of Parliament is above the Judges of the Common Law, and is not to be ſubject to their Judgment; 'tis alieni fori.

And, Sir, as I have been informed, this was the Anſwer given in the Houſe of Lords by one of the preſent Judges; and, by what I have heard, it was well he eſcaped their Cenſure; ſhewing too much Reſpect to this Houſe, gave very great Offence.

I beg, Gentlemen, to conſider (I ſhall not enter into Particulars that have been mentioned), Whether any thing of this Kind would not make you deſpicable to the loweſt Degree in the World, and expoſe Electors to ſuch Miſchiefs that none could endure? Upon every Election that comes before you, 'tis impoſſible to judge the Right of Election, but by the Right of the Electors. If you will endure any Perſon, after you have ſaid he has no Right, to go into Weſtminſter-Hall, and bring an Action in the Courts there, a Jury may find a Verdict, That the Houſe of Commons are miſtaken, and that this Perſon hath a Right; and Judgment ſhall be given accordingly. Will not this Proceeding, that very Moment, ſubmit your Reſolutions to the Examination and Cenſure of the inferior Courts? May not they ſay, They vote for one another? we have detected them all? That they are a Parcel of People packed together, and not one of them elected as they ſhould be?

What Condition the Magiſtrate will be in, hath been mentioned already: When a Multitude hath a Right, and every body may bring his Action, can any Magiſtrate (a Conſtable, as in this Caſe) bear the Expences of 100 or 1000 Actions at Law? There will not be wanting ſome to proſecute a Magiſtrate with all the Violence poſſible.

Though I can by no Means agree, That this Matter is to be determined according to the common Rules and Methods of Law, but according to the Courſe of Parliament; yet I ſhall compare it with ſome other Caſes in the Law.

That which maketh theſe Perſons Hardſhips the greater is, Theſe Magiſtrates are not People that officiouſly interpoſe to take a Poll at Elections, and make a Return; but theſe are Men, who, by the Duty of their Office, are obliged to do it; and, if they do not execute their Office, you puniſh them; and, if they do execute their Office, and give you Satisfaction, faction, yet, if you let this be examined in another Place, after you have ſaid they have done well, they may be puniſhed for doing ſo.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

I will compare this with one or two common Caſes that have not been mentioned. Suppoſe a Perſon ſhould exhibit an Indictment againſt another maliciouſly, he does this wilfully, and an Action does lie againſt him; but, if a Grand Juryman find a Bill againſt a Man, the Law will not admit an Averment that it was done maliciouſly, becauſe he was obliged by his Office to do it. So it is in the Caſe of a Witneſs, becauſe he is brought in by the Proceſs of the Court: So it is in the Caſe of Judges. And is it not equally the Duty of a Magiſtrate to determine upon the Poll, and afterwards to make a Return? And is not that examinable before you?

A great deal might be ſaid further upon this, but I hope it is pretty unneceſſary; and that nobody can have any Doubt, but that our Privileges are very much concerned in this Queſtion, and what the Conſequences would be; therefore I would humbly propoſe for the Queſtion, what another Gentleman hath hinted at, which may reduce this Debate to a particular Point.

We certainly have ſuch a Thing as the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, and that is very well known; and upon that Foot I deſire you would put a Queſtion to this Effect.

"That the ſole Right of examining and "determining all Matters relating to the E-"lection of Members to ſerve in Parliament, "except in ſuch Caſes as are otherwiſe provi-"ded for by Act of Parliament, is in the "Houſe of Commons; and that neither the "Qualifications of the Electors, or the Right "of the Perſons elected, is elſewhere cogni-"zable or determinable.

A Speech of Mr. Dormer's, for the Action.

Mr. Dormer (afterwards a Judge). Mr. Freeman, you have now a Queſtion upon your Paper; but that which I take to be the Queſtion, is, "Whether a Freeholder, or a Free-"man, who hath a Right to give his Vote "for his Repreſentatives in Parliament, may "arbitrarily and maliciouſly be deprived of "that Privilege, without any Redreſs in any "Court whatſoever.

This I take to the Caſe before you: It is ſaid to be of great Conſequence, and I do take it to be of as great Conſequence as any thing that ever came before either Houſe; and I don't look upon it only to concern the Juriſdiction of the Lords and Commons, but to affect every Part of the Conſtitution, and the Queen, the Head thereof, in the higheſt Degree: For it comes to this, If the Lords have not a Right to determine in this Matter, which by Writ of Error is regularly brought before them, we ſhall be turned into a State of Villenage, and the People will be deprived of chuſing their own Repreſentatives without Relief, and ſhall not have Relief by Her Majeſty in the Court of Queen's-Bench, nor before Her in the Court of Parliament, where, in Conſideration of Law, She is alway preſent, and where by our Law is the laſt Appeal; and there will be a Failure and an Interruption of Juſtice; and our Conſtitution, in relation to ourſelves, will be ſo far changed, that it will be impoſſible there ſhould be any right Repreſentatives of the People; for it will not be the People then that will chuſe, but the Officer may arbitrarily refuſe, and return whom he thinks fit, and the particular Perſon will be without Remedy. For, whatever Gentlemen apprehend, if the Right of Return be not controverted, which way can any particular Man bring his Caſe before you? and what Remedy ſhall he have, if not by Action? I will not ſay there has not (but I will turn the Argument, and put it upon them to ſhew there has), but I believe there was never any particular Application to the Committee of Privileges, where the Injury has been done to a particular Man, which is the preſent Caſe; and this Matter is found by a Jury that was ſtruck, and not one Man of the Jury but of Quality, and approved on both Sides: And I think, though it never came before the Parliament, nor the Committee of Privileges, they might conſider of a particular Injury.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

And as for the Notion that has been taken up, That where the Houſe of Commons have a Juriſdiction, there the Party is, in all Caſes, without Remedy in any other Court: Sure, that is not according to Truth; for in the Caſe of a falſe Return, there is a publick Injury; that does not hinder the Party from obtaining Satisfaction as to his particular Injury; and if no Action lies, there can be no Satisfaction; for this Houſe hath not awarded Damages in any Caſe, notwithſtanding the Caſe cited; for that was only Coſts for the Man's Trouble, in coming up to be examined before this Houſe; and if they ſhould award Damages, there is no Way of levying thoſe Damages; what Writ can we iſſue out? And if this Perſon be without Remedy at Law, he muſt ſit down without any Redreſs whatſoever.

There may be a Multitude of Caſes where this Houſe hath a Juriſdiction, as far as concerns the Publick and themſelves, and the Party ſhall have his Action alſo.

If I receive a Blow in this Houſe, it is a Violation of the Privilege of this Houſe, and this Houſe can take Cognizance of it, and cenſure the Perſon that hath done the Injury; but will any Man ſay, That an Action of Battery will not lie at the Common Law in that Caſe?

There was the Caſe of Sir Thomas Clarges: At the Time of his Election, there was one Roe ſpoke Words to his Prejudice; he might certainly have complained to this Houſe of it, (you had an Inſtance, I think, laſt Seſſion, of one that complained for ſome ſuch Injury againſt the Lord Biſhop of Worceſter, and the Houſe took it into Conſideration, which Sir Thomas Clarges might have done); but he brought his Action, and recovered conſiderable Damages; and afterwards a Writ of Error was brought in the King's-Bench, and Judgment was affirmed.

There is a Caſe, not within any Proviſion of your Law, and that is, where a Sheriff made a a Return, and he delivered this to a private Meſſenger, to bring up to the Crown-Office: The Meſſenger by the Way thought fit to vitiate the Return, and make another Return than what he received from the Sheriff: For this an Action was brought, and he recovered at Law againſt this Meſſenger, for the private Damage he had done him. Certainly, otherwiſe, the Law would be defective.

In another Caſe, the Sheriff adjourned, in Prejudice to a Candidate, to a Corn-Field; an Action was brought againſt this Sheriff at Law, for the Damages he had done this Gentleman, and it was maintained; and I dare ſay, more Caſes may be put: Which ſhews, that your having a Juriſdiction, as to what concerns the Publick, does not exclude the Party, but he may have an Action for his private Injury.

A great many Poſitions I have heard, which I take not to be true; particularly this, "That "there is no Remedy at Law, but in Caſes "provided for by the Statutes:" That is not ſo; theſe Statutes imply the contrary: The firſt ſays, Whereas there was not a ſufficient Remedy, therefore that gives a more compleat Remedy; and ſo the Judges declared in the Caſe of Barnardiſton and Soame.

Sir, They have told us of the Caſes of Barnardiſton and Soame, and of Nevil and Strode; with humble Submiſſion to you, thoſe Caſes go ſo far as to prove the Juriſdiction of the Lords, and the inferior Courts: That of Barnardiſton and Soame, was an Action tried before the Court of King's-Bench, and a Set of as learned Judges as ever were, before or ſince, and three of them were of Opinion for the Action, and my Lord Chief Juſtice Hale was one of them; who, the Term before he ſurrendered his Character, did thus expreſs himſelf, He gave Thanks to God, that he had ſpared him to that Time; that he was able to keep his Cuſhion, and declare his Conſcience in that Place. But afterwards it had it's Fate, a Writ of Error was brought in the Exchequer-Chamber; Mr. Juſtice Levinz, that reports it, ſays, It appears, that thoſe who argued againſt the Judgment in the King's-Bench were made Judges; and they themſelves afterwards determined the Caſe: And every Body knows how valuable it was at that Time to know the Price of an Houſe of Commons, and an Engliſh Parliament. Three Judges were then made in the Exchequer, and I think, two in the Common-Pleas. Afterwards it came into the Houſe of Lords, and there the Reverſal in the Exchequer was affirmed, for Reaſons different to what are urged now, and I believe for ſeveral good Reaſons. The Sheriff in that Caſe had made a double Return, and the Sheriff might do it for his own Indemnity, for it was no more than finding a Special Verdict; and therefore the Saying falſo & malitioſe, being put to a Thing that was in it ſelf right, it would not alter the Nature of the Thing. Another Reaſon they went upon, was, They ſaid this double Return was a void Return, and for that Reaſon the Action did not lie; and upon theſe Reaſons depended that Judgment. That Gentleman, who ſaid that only four or five Lords diſſented, is under a great Miſtake: Four or five Lords only, I believe entered this Diſſent; but there was a great Number, and near an Equality againſt that Judgment, that did not enter their Diſſent.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

Then, Sir, there is the Caſe of Nevil and Strode; and that was firſt a Judgment in the Common-Pleas, and when it had taken it's Progreſs in Weſtminſter-Hall, it came before the Houſe of Lords; and the Lords returned it back again to Weſtminſter-Hall, and ordered all the Judges of England to deliver their Opinion in it. That was founded upon an Ordinance of thoſe Times; Berkſhire was to ſend five Knights, and Nevill was one of them that were elected, but not returned: There they ſaid, in that Caſe, that Ordinance was entirely new, and that Caſe did not recommend itſelf by the known Laws of the Land; and for that Reaſon they would not give Judgment, for Wages could not be levied for five ſuch Knights: And when afterwards they were to give Judgment, the right Conſtitution had recovered it ſelf.

Now, as to the Lords Right to receive a Writ of Error in this Caſe: You have addreſſed to them, that they would receive a Writ of Error, at a Time when your Privileges were invaded. That was the Caſe of my Lord Holles, who, with others, was informed againſt, 5 Car. for having ſpoke Words in this Houſe that did affect the Government; and he pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court, (Is there any ſuch Thing here! No, they have ſubmitted to it), and the Court over-ruled their Plea to the Juriſdiction, and that Judgment continued in Force (as ſome others, which have been ſince, do now, which it were well if they were reverſed), 'till this Houſe took Notice of it; and in 1667, they deſired a Conference with the Houſe of Lords, the Chairman was my Lord Chief Juſtice Vaughan; and this Houſe there complained how they were grieved by that Judgment: And after repeated Conferences, both Houſes did conſent to this Expedient, That my Lord Holles, being the only Survivor, ſhould be deſired to bring a Writ of Error in the Houſe of Lords, and he did ſo; and the Lords in that Caſe did you Juſtice, and reverſed the Judgment.

As to your paſſing this Vote, what it will ſignify I can't tell: What ſignified a Vote you paſſed before, about the Year 80, That the putting the Laws in Execution againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, was an Injury to the Publick, and a Subverſion of the Government; and that thoſe that put them in Execution, ſhould be looked upon as Enemies to the King and Kingdom? The Conſequence was, That all the Laws againſt Popery were put in Execution againſt the Proteſtants, more than they were before: The Judges in Weſtminſter-Hall ſaid, This Vote had not paſſed into a Law, and they could not take Notice of it. I hope we ſhall do nothing that will leſſen our ſelves, nor any Thing but what will be effectual, for the Ends of which 'tis propoſed.

The Speech of Mr Harley, againſt the Action.

Mr Harley, (Speaker). Sir, I ſhall trouble you but with a few Words, after this long Debate; and rather to underſtand the Terms you are debating on, than to think any Thing

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

I can offer to be of any great Weight. But I take the Queſtion not to be as ſome have repreſented it, but to be ſingly this in general, Whether an Action does lie at Common Law in the Caſe before you?

There is do need to mention the particular Circumſtances of Aylesbury Election; for, if that was the ſingle Caſe, you might have taken another Method. I will not inſiſt, That in this very Election a great Number of thoſe Inhabitants petitioned this Houſe upon this Point, that their Votes were denied; and, after this Petition had lain in the Houſe for ſome Time, it was withdrawn by their own Conſent. I do not trouble my ſelf whether this particular Man was amongſt them, nor will I trouble you with what may reaſonably be urged from this, but leave that to other Gentlemen.

But I deſire we may underſtand the Terms upon which we are debating: We have had Maxims of the Common Law, and the Rights of Parliament, mentioned. The Common Law is the Common Uſage of the Realm: I take the Laws of Parliament to be the Common Law of the Land, and the Uſage of Parliament to be the Law of Parliament; and the Law of Parliament is to be known by Uſage, as the Common Law is.

Then how ſhall we know whether this belongs to the Common Law? If there be any other Way, I ſhould be glad to be informed; but I think there is no other Way of knowing whether an Action will lie at Common Law, but by Reaſon or Uſage, and Precedents. Now, if by Reaſon, it is to be made out by what neceſſarily attends this Caſe, or ſome other Caſes like it. And pray what do they offer, that lies at Common Law? Do they give you any Precedent? What Reaſon do they offer? I ſuppoſe that which was read laſt is no Precedent in this Caſe, for that was an Action upon the Statute; or that the Courts below take upon them a Legiſlature inſtead of a Judicature, which muſt be, if there be no Rule for them to go by. I take the Queſtion you have read to conſiſt of two Parts; one aſſerting your own Right, the other is Negative, That no other Courts have any Right, but in Caſes particularly directed by the Statute.

I can't think this of Electors and Elected a Privilege: I take it to be a Service, both in the Electors and Elected; and, formerly, it was reckoned an hard Service: I know not how they find it now. 'Tis a Service, I take it, becauſe all who are Electors are liable to pay the Wages; and I take that to be a Burden: And not only from that, but the very Towns that were Boroughs, and elected, when one paid Fifteenths, the other paid Tenths; ſo that I take it to be a Service: And if a Franchiſe, ſee the Conſequence; it will be in the Power of the Crown to create as many Boroughs as they pleaſe.

Then conſider, this Houſe is in Poſſeſſion of this Power, as of Right; and I do not find the Common Law in Poſſeſſion of any ſuch Right. Then, what do they offer, to bring it in, but that there would be ſome Failure of Juſtice? Now I took it, That the Judges are Jus dicere, and not Jus dare. If any thing want a Proviſion to be made for it, it muſt be done by the Legiſlative Power; and, if the Electors want it, Proviſion muſt be made for them, that they ſhall have an Action. And thoſe Gentlemen, who think that neceſſary, may bring in a Bill to that Purpoſe, and take the Senſe of the Legiſlature upon it in a regular Way.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

The Queſtion before you now is, Whether the Examination, Hearing, and Determination of all Matters relating to Elections, where ſome Statutes have not particularly directed otherwiſe, does not belong to this Houſe? There was a famous Caſe of Goodwin; that was a Caſe conteſted by the Crown, and the Crown pretended to ſend out another Writ; and there they ſay, That as to Members of Parliament, their Attendance, &c. they are the ſole Judge. And this they lay before King James in the Firſt Year of his Reign, and claim it as their ſole Right; and the King's ſecond Writ was determined to be void.

But a Gentleman makes an Argument, If one ſhould ſtrike another in the Houſe, what Remedy? Why there is an Act made for that Caſe in Henry VI's Time.

I think now the Matter will turn upon this: Say they, 'Tis true, you can try Elections, and who are the Electors; but here is one thing remains, that is, to give Satisfaction. Have they any Precedent for this? I believe the Precedents are without: They have a Power for what is neceſſary; nothing leſs than a Law can give the other.

Gentlemen ſay, There may be a Difference in Judgment in Courts below, but they are ſubordinate, and there lies an Appeal: But, in this Caſe, all Courts will be co-ordinate with you; and therefore, if that be a Grievance, nay a Solæciſm in Government, prevent it now.

'Tis ſaid, What will your Vote do? That is pretty odd: If they would have an Act of Parliament, your Vote muſt be the Ground of it.

You are Judges of the Whole; but, ſay ſome, You cannot give the pecuniary Satisfaction. Well, ſuppoſe ſo; but you can reſtore all to their Right. But let me ſay this, If you would not ſet up a co-ordinate Power with you in Matters of Elections, and which will be too hard for you at laſt, I hope it will be a Warning to you, to take more Care in the judging of your Elections for the Time to come.

If the Judgment belongs to you, and you are poſſeſſed of it for ſo long a Tract of Time, that no body can offer any thing againſt it ſince Henry IV's Time; till Gentlemen ſhew me ſome Reaſon, why the Common Law ſhould lay hold of it, I muſt be of Opinion, that it does belong to you; and no Court can take Cognizance of it but you, except where 'tis otherwiſe provided for by Statute.

The Speech of Mr. Cowper, for the Action.

Mr. Cowper (afterwards Earl Cowper). I perfectly agree with that honourable and learned Gentleman that ſpoke laſt but one in this Debate, in what he laid down as an undoubted Maxim, or Ground-Work, for the Opinion he delivered, That the Law and Cuſtom 1703-4. 2 & 3 An. Cuſtom of Parliament is Part of the Law of the Land, and as ſuch, ought to be taken Notice of by all Perſons: And I think 'tis the exact Standard by which we ought to walk; and the Deduction my poor Judgment is apt to make from that Principle, is this, That we ought not, out of Zeal to our own Juriſdiction, to go one Step farther than that known Law and Cuſtom of Parliament will warrant us to do.

Now I take it upon this Debate, That this Law and Cuſtom of Parliament doth not give the Subject, who is injured by his Vote being denied him, any Satisfaction or Recompence for that Damage; and am the rather confirmed in that Opinion, becauſe that very learned and honourable Gentleman, who is particularly knowing in the Laws and Precedents of Parliament, has not pleaſed to repreſent to you any one Precedent, where the Subject ſo injured hath complained to the Parliament, and had Redreſs in that Particular; but all Petitions have been either from the Candidates, or Electors, complaining of an undue Return: So that it cannot be ſhewed, That it hath been the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, to give that Remedy or Relief in Parliament, which is the Subject Matter or End of the Action now in Queſtion.

I go likewiſe along with him, and every Gentleman that hath ſpoke it in this Debate, That by the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, none but your ſelves can determine, who are rightly elected, in order to diſplace or place them here; and incident to that End, you have the ſole Right of conſidering the Right of the Electors; I ſay ſo far forth, as it is neceſſarily incident to determine who ſhall, and who ſhall not ſit here; and no other Court can conſider the Right of the Electors, in order to determine the Right of any to ſit in this Place, further than you by ſome Act of Parliament have given them Leave. But this Matter having been now diſputed a great while, you have had it fully repreſented to you, how they came to hold the Scales in this Action in Weſtminſter-Hall, not as in a Caſe where the Right of Election, or the Privileges of this Houſe was the Subject Matter of the Queſtion; the Queſtion was brought there only to intitle the injured Subject to Damages: And this Matter ought to be conſidered, as it relates to different Ends and Purpoſes, and upon that it turned in the Caſe of Soame and Barnardiſton. They who thought that Action lay, thought the Courts below might try the Merits of the Election to repair in Damages, not to determine who ſhould be admitted to ſit in Parliament.

And I will venture to ſay, That the Judgment of the Houſe of Lords, that confirmed that Reverſal, was in no wiſe at that Time ſatisfactory to the Commons of England.

But the Act of Parliament that hath been mentioned, was built upon this, That the Reverſal of the Judgment between Barnardiſton and Soame was not right; and ſo that Act was procured to ſet up the Right of the Commons of England, that was thought to be invaded by that Reverſal, or Judgment, that the Action upon the Caſe did not lie.

1703 4. 2 & 3 An. I will go a Step farther, That as you have the ſole Power to try the Election, and conſider the Right of the Electors, to the End I mentioned, to determine who ſhall be admitted here; ſo I grant it hath been the Law and Cuſtom of Parliaments (how antient I will not enquire) to puniſh the Offenders, particularly the Officers and Magiſtrates preſiding at the Election, for doing any Wrong or Injury in their Office on that Occaſion, in order to make him an Example, as an Offender againſt the Publick, and the Conſtitution of Parliament: So far I grant you have juſt Right to go, and no Body ought to interfere with you.

But now we are carrying the Matter yet further: The Queſtion now is not, Whether we have the ſole Right to puniſh the Officer as a publick Offender? This Action is not brought to that End, nor is there a Word in the Declaration, who was, or who was not duly elected, or that the Conſtitution or Privilege of Parliament was violated: But the Plaintiff only ſays, he had a Right to vote, and that he was injuriouſly denied it (whether the right or wrong Member was returned, he meddles not with it), and he ſubmits it to the Court and the Law, Whether he ought not to have Damages for that Wrong? And the Queſtion now is, Whether that Demand of Damages was not well founded? Or, Whether there is any Thing in this, contrary to the Law and Conſtitution of Parliament? Law depending on Cuſtom, certainly conſiſts not in, and is not to be made out by one Act, but by often reiterated Acts; and that muſt be very far from being the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, which is ſo far from being a frequent Repetition of Acts, or Precedents, that in this Caſe, there is not one Inſtance where an Elector hath brought his Petition without Regard to the Return made, and deſired his particular Right to vote might be tried and aſſerted, he having been obſtructed and injured in giving his Vote; nor was ever ſuch Elector repaired in Damages here, nor ever had his particular Right to vote reſolved, or aſſerted by any Judgment or Declaration of this Houſe.

The learned and honourable Perſon, upon whoſe Reaſoning I am humbly offering my Thoughts with great Deference, was pleaſed to inſtance in the Caſe of five Perſons in the Town of Aylesbury, who exhibited a Petition, and complained of an Injury done them at an Election for that Town, at which their Votes were refuſed: And, if they complained of nothing further, and did not conclude to the Right of the Return, and complain, That they were unduly repreſented, I admit it had been ſo far an Inſtance to his Purpoſe. But if they had ſo complained only of the Injury done the Petitioners in denying their Votes, yet he is pleaſed to tell you, this Petition was withdrawn, and by the Conſent of the Perſons who preſented it, and ſo came to nothing. I ſuppoſe this is the ſingle Precedent to prove the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, becauſe there is no other Inſtance given. It does not appear upon what Ground or Reaſons it was withdrawn; and I have no particular Memory 1703-4. 2 & 3 An. mory of that Paſſage; you will pardon me if I am miſtaken in my Conjecture. I believe no Man, that ſeeks a Remedy, would deſiſt, if he expected to ſucceed: So I take the moſt probable Reaſon (till another appear) to be, that they were hopeleſs of doing any Good with it: And one Petition, not proſecuted, will hardly ſhew that Parliaments uſe to give Redreſs in ſuch Caſes. Now, if that Precedent had been ſucceſsful, if the Petition had been referred to a Committee, if Damages had been given upon the Complaint, and a declarative Vote had paſſed to aſſert the Petitioners Right (but I did not obſerve there were any ſuch Proceedings); then, indeed, I muſt admit that it was one Precedent in Point, and a very material one; and it would have proved, That we had once held Plea of this Matter; and, by Conſequence, if we had often done ſo, that no body elſe had to do with it. But, if that Precedent be defective, and none can ſhew that ever any Petition was exhibited by any Elector for a Perſonal Injury done him in rejecting his Vote, though the Perſon he would have voted for was returned, this Action may lie for ſuch an Injury done to an Elector, without interfereing with any Law, or Uſage of Parliament, that hath yet been made evident: And that brings me to another Matter of that honourable Perſon's Diſcourſe; and I acknowledge he entered into it with a great deal of Candour and Fairneſs.

He was pleaſed to ſay, He thought it was admitted in this Debate, That the like Action is not to be found in all the Reports, or Books of Law. I would allow his Objection its due Weight, and admit what I take his Meaning to be, That this Action, in the particular Species of it, may be new, though it's old in its Genus, or the principal Materials on which it is built: And I take it, if by the general Rule or Reaſon of Law for ſuch an Action it be warranted, this Action (as a thouſand other Actions on the Caſe may) will lie, though in all the Parts 'tis not to be exactly parallel'd; for it is the very Nature of, and implied in the Name of an Action upon the Caſe, that every Man may maintain it on his particular Caſe, provided it carry in it the general Reaſon, or Ingredients required by Law to ſupport ſuch an Action, though in many Circumſtances it may be perfectly new. I ſee that honourable Perſon underſtands clearly the neceſſary Incidents of that Action; that is, there are to be damnum & injuria, which I take to mean a Damage to the Subject not ariſing from a lawful, but, which is the Conſequence, of an unlawful Act. Now, ſays he, firſt here is no Damage, becauſe anciently the Attendance was thought a Service and a Burden, and the Right of Electing was a Service too; and, in being deprived of a Service, there can be no Damage; and therefore one of the main Ingredients of an Action of the Caſe is wanting. This is clear Reaſoning, and either to be anſwered or ſubmitted to.

It is ſaid, The Right of Electing was a Service; how true, I doubt upon the Reaſon of the Thing: A Service was often a Part of the Tenure by which a Man held his Land till it came up to the Crown; and the Service was originally created by Grant and Reſervation. Now, can any one imagine, that, where one holds a ſmall Freehold, any ſuch Tenure was created between him and his immediate Lord originally by Reſervation, as that he ſhou'd vote to ſend Members to Parliament? 1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

But if it might be conſidered as a Service ſo created, it will not do the Buſineſs of the Argument, unleſs you conſider it alſo as a Service, without Advantage or Privilege; for, if it be a Privilege too (though in its Creation it might be a Service), then the depriving a Man of it is an Injury. Now no body can think but that the Right to elect a Parliament-Man, which is a diſtinguiſhing Character from the Vulgar, and hath its Weight in the Legiſlature, is a Privilege; and therefore, to be deprived of it, is to be deprived not only of a Service and Burden, but of a very valuable Privilege: And, I believe, any Engliſhman would think we dealt hardly by him to deprive him of it, though we ſhould tell him, at the ſame Time, we deprived him only of a Service or Burden, and not of a Valuable Privilege.

There is another Thing occurs on this Head: We have been ſo far from thinking the being elected a Service or Burden only, that, in the Nature of a Repeal of thoſe Judgments of Soame and Barnardiſton, by a poſitive Law, we have given the Elected double Damages, if he be deprived of that Service. Therefore, by our own Notion, and in our own Caſe, 'tis a Privilege that ought to be recompenced even with double Damages, that is to ſay, when it concerns our ſelves: And ſhall we declare it a mere Service in the Caſe of our Electors, not to be recompenced even by ſingle Damages, and that after the undoubted Methods of the Common Law have adjudged it their Due? For I do not find any body doubts, whether this Man has proceeded in the legal Method throughout, even in the laſt Reſort. The Lords have not judged the Fact; they are bound, as to the Fact, by the Verdict, and they are unqueſtionably the Judges of the Law on a Writ of Error: And therefore, as to what hath been ſaid, That any Fact of an Election might come to be determined before the Lords, it is a great Miſtake; for they judge purely of the Law on Writs of Error, as every one knows, that knows any thing of our Conſtitution. Give me Leave to ſay, We, upon this Occaſion, judge of this Matter only as a Matter of Law, which may affect our Privileges; and though we have Authority to conſider what is Law, as it relates to, or may intrench upon, our Privileges, no body that ſits here can think that there lies an Appeal in this Place, or a ſecond Conſideration of this Matter after the Lords Judgment, as 'tis a Point of Law only, and as it regards the Right of the Subject. So that an Objection in Point of Law here, to the Judgment of the Lords, will not hold otherwiſe, than as it relates to our own Privileges; for no body will ſay, That we are the Dernier Reſort in any other Reſpect. And tho' that is the only Point that brings it properly under our Conſideration, yet I fear we are taking taking from the Subject, in Effect, what the Law hath adjudged his Right, and reverſing a legal Judgment given in the Subjects Favour. There are other Arguments flung in, to make up the Weight only, as that which compares the preſent to the Caſe of a Dove-houſe: In which Caſe, in Regard of the Multitude of Actions that would follow, an Action will not lie for every one that is injured by the erecting of it: It is true, where a Multitude is injured by one and the ſame Fact, it ſhall not be puniſhed by a Multitude of Actions; but the Publick is to take Care of it, becauſe the Injury is of a publick Nature. But by the ſame Standard and known Laws of England, if one Man is ſo raſh as to commit a Multitude of Injuries, which ſeverally affect ſeveral Perſons, it was never ſaid, that he became unpuniſhable by the Multitude of his Offences; but every one injured, has his Action againſt him. I have heard it ſaid, defendit numerus, but that is ſpoken to the Number of Offenders, not the Number of the Offences committed by the ſame Man: And theſe Injuries, which conſiſt in the denying the Subject to vote, when of Right he ought, will not be multiplied (as is objected) by letting the Subject know, that as they may come into Parliament to puniſh the Officer as a publick Offender againſt the Conſtitution; ſo the particular Perſon injured, by being denied his Vote, may alſo have an Action for the private and particular Injury done to him only.

I would mention one Thing more: They who have ſpoke for the other Opinion, ſeem to take it for granted, (which I do not take to be a true Way of reaſoning) that, becauſe in determining who have a Right to ſit here, we do incidently, and only can, in order to that End, determine who have a Right to vote, therefore no other Judicature can try the ſame Matter or Right to vote, though it be to different Ends and Purpoſes.

Now, if you will conſider the different Juriſdictions in the Conſtitution of this Kingdom, there is nothing more common; and many Inſtances may be given of it. There are Variety of Juriſdictions that try the ſame Fact, and yet each hath a ſole and ſeparate Juriſdiction in that Matter, to different Ends; and theſe Juriſdictions are not in that Reſpect ſubordinate to one another: Take the Spiritual and Temporal, the Spiritual is not ſubordinate, but only reſtrainable by the Temporal, where they intrench upon the Temporal; as in the common Inſtance of Matrimony, which directly, and abſtracted from other Purpoſes, is triable in the Spiritual Court, and no where elſe: But yet, if that comes to be a Queſtion of Fact, in relation to a Title at Law, or to make out a Deſcent, why the Temporal Courts every Day try it, though per ſe, and taken by itſelf, it belongs to the Juriſdiction of the Spiritual Court; and yet theſe Courts are not in that Reſpect ſubordinate one to another.

So in the Caſe touched upon of a Battery, 'tis not triable in the Common-Pleas, as it is an Offence againſt the publick Peace, by Indictment, in order to a Fine, but triable in thoſe Courts only, that have a Criminal Juriſdiction; but as 'tis a private Injury, and in order to recompence the injured in Damages, that is triable in the Court of Common-Pleas, and other Places, which have Cognizance of Civil Actions only: And this is not in Reſpect that one Court is ſubordinate to the other, but only holds Plea of the ſame Fact, in order to one End; and the other, in order to another End; and there is no claſhing of Juriſdictions in ſuch Caſes.

1703-4. 2&3 An.

For what hath been objected, That this may create Variety of Judgments concerning the ſame Right: This does weigh, it ſeems, in our own Caſes, for we may bring our Actions for double Damages, for a falſe Return, and yet that may produce the ſame Variety of Judgments. So was the Opinion of the Houſe in the Caſe by me cited; and the Law is plain, That though the laſt Determination of this Houſe, where there hath been any, ſhall determine the Right of Election, and there the Judges and Jury ſhall be bound by the laſt Determination, and to act by the ſame Rule; yet in Towns where there has been no Diſpute of the Right ſettled here, one way or other, the Candidate may, notwithſtanding, bring his Action, and he, or the People of the Place, may alſo petition the Houſe of Commons: And then, there is the ſame Objection; for there may be Variety of Judgments touching the Right of Election, one in the Houſe of Commons, and another in the Courts below. And upon the Trial, in order to obtain Damages, a Jury, in ſuch Caſes, where the Right had never been ſettled in Parliament before the Election in Queſtion, are not directed by the Judgment of your Houſe on the ſame diſputed Election; nor is any Jury bound to follow ſuch Judgment. And if you will go upon a Suppoſition that a Judge and Jury may go contrary to Law and Right, or the Determinations of this Houſe in the Caſe before you, 'tis an Objection which you have over-looked in your own Caſes; and therefore, why ſhould it be an Objection to hinder the Perſon, whom you repreſent, of his Remedy for the Injury done him?

Upon the whole, I am for ſo much of your Queſtion as ſerves only to declare, That you have the ſole Power of determining the Right of all Elections, and even the Electors Right to vote, to the End to try who is your Member, or to puniſh the Officer, as an Offender againſt the Conſtitution: So far is agreeable to the conſtant Law and Practice of Parliament. But for that Part of the Queſtion which relates to the reſtraining the Electors from bringing their Actions for the Perſonal or Private Damage done to them, I think it is not agreeable to the Law or Conſtitution of Parliament.

The Speech of Sir Humphry Mackworth, againſt the Action.

Sir Humphry Mackworth. Mr. Freeman, we are much obliged to the Gentlemen that have argued on both Sides, who have brought the Matter of this Debate into a narrow Compaſs: The Queſtion is this, "Whether an "Elector be entitled to an Action at Com-"mon Law againſt the Officer, for Recovery "of Damages, in Caſe his Vote, which he "offered, be not taken down in Writing, "and entered on the Poll? Or, Whether the "Houſe

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

"House of Commons have the sole Privilege "of examining and determining the Right or "Qualification of every Elector to give his "Vote, and to judge of the Behaviour of "every Sheriff, and other Officer, in taking "the Poll on the Election of Members to "serve in Parliament?

I am of Opinion, with great Submission to better Judgments, that the House of Commons have a sole Right of Judicature in these Cases, and that the Elector is not entitled to an Action at Common Law. I shall endeavour to support this Opinion, by answering the Arguments that have been made use of to prove the contrary: And first, I crave Leave to observe, That the Gentlemen who have argued on the other Side, have not taken Notice of a Distinction, which seems to be very material in this Case; and that is, between an actual Force or Violence done by the Officer, and a bare Omission in Point of Duty. It is agreed, That in case the Officer does, by Force or Violence, obstruct or hinder an Elector from offering or pronouncing his Vote at an Election, for which of the Candidates he pleases, the Elector will be entituled to an Action at Common Law, for Recovery of Damages; for that is a Personal Wrong, and does not concern the Right or Qualification of an Elector to vote in Elections: But in case the Officer does permit the Elector quietly to offer, or pronounce his Vote, (as he did in the Case of Ashby, who pronounced his Vote for Sir Thomas Lee, and Simon Mayne, Esq;) but does not think fit to enter his Vote upon the Poll, the Elector in this Case, is not entitled to an Action at Common Law for Recovery of Damages; because he hath neither suffered any Force or Violence, nor is by such Omission deprived of his Vote: For a Vote being once pronounced, the Law takes it for the Benefit of the Publick, though the Officer be wanting in his Duty; and none have Power to determine, whether the Elector had a legal Vote, and whether the Officer had sufficient Reason to refuse to enter the said Vote on the Poll, but the House of Commons: If any others should have Authority in this Case, they will be able to destroy the Freedom of Elections, and the Constitution of Parliament.

It is insisted by some Gentlemen, That the Electors have no proper Remedy in this Case in the House of Commons; and therefore they must have the Remedy at Common Law: But with great Deference to their Judgments, the Electors have a very proper Remedy in this House in every Respect; for here their Votes will be allowed, the legal Representatives restored, and the Officer will be punished for any wilful Default in the Execution of his Office: This is the Remedy that answers the End for which every Elector is entitled to give his Vote, which is not for a private Advantage to himself, but for the general Advantage of the whole Kingdom: But the Action at Law is no proper Remedy in any Respect; for since a Vote that is offered and refused, is as good by the Law of Parliament as a Vote that is offered and received, and is so adjudged on the Trial of every Election in the House of Commons, or else they could not fill their House with legal Representatives; it is not proper or reasonable, that an Officer should pay Damages to an Elector that has not suffered any, nor that a publick Offence should be punished by a private Satisfaction; which is not likely to prevent the Evil, preserve the Vote, and restore the Representative; nor is the same consistent with the Constitution, or the publick Safety.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

The Qualification of Electors, and the Behaviour of Officers in all Elections, are Matters of Parliament, and such Matters are not cognizable elsewhere, as hath been often declared by all the Judges of England: A Parliamentary Case requires a Parliamentary Remedy; and since Votes have been refused in all Elections, if Electors in this Case had been entitled to an Action at Law, it must be presumed, that some Time or other, such an Action would have been brought, which yet was never once attempted in any former Reign; and all those Acts of Parliament that were made to give Damages, in Cases relating to Elections, do demonstrate that no such Damages could be recovered at Common Law; for if they could, there had been no Occasion for making any of those Statutes.

It is insisted, That every Right must have a Remedy; but then the Subject must first be deprived of that Right, which in this Case he was not; and even when he is, he must have his Remedy in a proper Manner, and in a proper Court. There are several Sorts of Rights, and several Sorts of Laws in England, and there are several Courts of Justice, for the Administration of those Laws: A Man that has a Right to a Legacy, can't bring an Action at Common Law, but he has a proper Remedy in the Spiritual Court. The like may be observed of Cases that belong to the Courts of Chancery, Admiralty, Stanneries, and of the Forrest Laws. The Subject cannot bring Actions at Common Law, in Cases that belong to the Jurisdiction of other Courts: And when my Lord Chief Justice Coke enumerates the several Laws in this Kingdom, he gives the Precedence to the Law and Custom of Parliament, which, he tells us, is superior to the Common Law in Westminster-Hall: And as every Court at Law has it's Customs and Privileges peculiar to it self, and is sole Judge of them; so also the High Court of Parliament suis propriis legibus & consuetudinibus subsistit, hath it's own proper Laws and Customs, and is sole Judge thereof. And if an Action at Common Law will not lie for a Legacy, where the Spiritual Court has a Jurisdiction, though the Temporal Courts have, in many Respects, a superior Authority; such an Action will much less lie in a Case concerning the Parliament, which is the highest Court of the Kingdom, and who are sole Judges in all Cases relating to themselves. But some carry this further, and say, that every Right must have a Remedy with Damages: This may be true in most Cases, where a Man is deprived of Rights of Property and Possession; but there are many Instances to be given, where a Right of Franchise or Privilege is not entitled to any Damage; as a Person ſon elected Mayor of a Corporation, if the proper Officer refuſes to ſwear him, has no Action at Law for Damages, but his Remedy is by a Mandamus out of the Queen's-Bench: There is a Remedy by Quare impedit, but not to recover Damages. In a Writ of Right, you ſhall recover the Land, but no Damages: So in this Caſe, the proper Remedy is to have the Vote allowed, which can only be done by the Houſe of Commons. Some Gentlemen have found out a new Diſtinction, which I never heard before, That the Houſe of Commons have the ſole Privilege to judge of the Rights of Electors, and of the Behaviour of Officers, to one Intent, but not to another; that is, in order to determine who are the legal Repreſentatives, but not to give Damages to the Party injured. But, with great Submiſſion, there is no Weight at all in this Diſtinction; for as it is plain, that the Elector is not, in this Caſe, deprived of his Vote, and therefore ſuffers no Damage; ſo it is alſo evident, that the Judgment of the Houſe of Commons, in Matters properly cognizable before them, cannot be contradicted by any other Judicature; and therefore their Judgment of the Qualification of the Elector, and of the Behaviour of the Officer, muſt be concluſive to all Intents and Purpoſes whatſoever. It is contrary to the Reaſon of all Laws, that the Behaviour of an Officer ſhould be ſubject to the Determination of two independent Juriſdictions; or that he ſhould be innocent by the Judgment of a ſuperior Court, and guilty by the Judgment of an inferior; or that he ſhould be twice puniſhed for the ſame Offence. No Man can ſerve two Maſters: The Officer, at this Rate, will be every way enſnared, and made liable to Puniſhment, whether he does his Duty or not: If he accepts illegal Votes on the Poll, he will forfeit 500 l. by the Statute, for a falſe Return; if he refuſes them, he may be ruined by a Multitude of Actions; for if one may bring an Action, then 500 may, ſince every Man at this Rate, may offer a Vote, and bring an Action for not entering it upon the Poll. How is this conſiſtent with the Freedom of Elections, in which there ought to be no Terror, neither on the Electors, nor on the Officers? But as the Electors ſhould be free to offer their Votes, ſo the Officers ſhould be free to judge, whether they ought to be entered on the Poll or not; and they ought not to be accountable to any but the Houſe of Commons, whoſe Servants they are in all Matters relating to Elections, and who are entruſted with the Determination of all Matters and Caſes relating thereto; and they may as well puniſh them for taking illegal Votes on the Poll, as for not taking thoſe that are legal: In neither of which Caſes have the Judges of the Common Law any Juriſdiction, though there is the ſame Reaſon in both, to take Care that every the meaneſt Subject may have Relief for any Injury done him; but we are not to take more Care of the meaneſt Subject, than of the whole Houſe of Commons. The greateſt Subject in England ought to have no Relief, but what is conſiſtent with the Law of Parliament, and the Safety of the Conſtitution. If an Action lies, and upon a Judgment on that Action a Writ of Error lies in the Houſe of Peers, the Lords will be the ſole Judges at laſt, who have Votes to chuſe a Houſe of Commons; which is directly contrary to the fundamental Maxim of the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, that the two Houſes are mutual Checks to each other, and ſole Judges of their own Privileges.

1703 4 & 3 An.

This is an excellent Conſtitution, and admirably well contrived for the common Safety: But how can this Conſtitution be preſerved, if the Lords can puniſh our Officers, and govern our Elections? This will be the Way to deſtroy all Checks, and to make the Houſe of Commons dependent on the Lords; and then I cannot ſee upon what Foundation you can be ſaid to ſit here to do any Service for your Country.

Others inſiſt, That this is a Right that is incident to the Freehold and Freedom of Electors; therefore, as their Freeholds are cognizable at Common Law, ſo is every Incident belonging to it. This Argument is plauſible at firſt Sight, but, in Reality, there is nothing in it: For though the Commons of England have ſubmitted their private Differences to Arbitrators, or Judges, indifferently choſen and appointed by the Prince, the common Parent of the People, yet they have never ſubmitted their fundamental Rights and Privileges which they hold in their publick and politick Capacities, as a free Branch of the High Court of Parliament, to any other but their own Repreſentatives, who are choſen and appointed by themſelves. This is not a Caſe, properly ſpeaking, between Party and Party, but between the Lords and Commons; becauſe the Determination of this Caſe brings the whole Right in Queſtion, Who have a Privilege to judge of the Qualification of Electors to give their Votes in Election of Members to ſerve in Parliament, Whether the Lords or the Commons? It is not now the Queſtion, Who hath the beſt Right to Freehold, or Freedom, or to any thing that is incident to it? But, Whether the Commons of England ſhall have any Freeholds, or Freedoms at all? Or, which is the ſame thing in Effect, Whether they ſhall have any Security for thoſe Rights or not? For, if the Lords are Judges of your Privileges, you can hold no Right but during their Pleaſure.

The Lords ſeem to contend for the Right of the Subject; but I wiſh it is not for a Power to enable themſelves to judge and determine, as they think fit, of all our Rights and Liberties: For this is the neceſſary Conſequence of allowing an Elector to have a Remedy in any other Place but within theſe Walls.

This is my humble Opinion; and, if I am miſtaken, other Gentlemen will ſet me right. This is certainly a Matter of the higheſt Importance to the Welfare of the Subject, and I doubt not but they will very well conſider it, before they give Way to the eſtabliſhing a Precedent that tends to deſtroy the Privileges of this Houſe, or the Liberties of their Country.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

A great Tenderneſs is expreſſed for this poor Man, whoſe Vote has been refuſed; but whether he had a Right to give his Vote, is very much queſtioned, and never yet determined by this Houſe, who has the proper Judicature thereof. But admitting he had a Vote, Whether ought to be preferred, a private Intereſt, or the Publick Safety? Whether will be moſt for the Honour of this Houſe, and the Intereſt of our Electors, The Care of a private Perſon by a new-invented Action, neither warranted by Reaſon or Precedent, or any eſtabliſhed Law; or the Care of the Parliament, and the Conſtitution, on which depend the Rights and Liberties of all the Commons of England?

Sir, I beg Pardon for taking up ſo much of your Time, but I muſt confeſs it ſeems to me, That our ALL depends upon a right Determination of this Matter; for I cannot ſee any other Reaſon why this new Device is ſupported by the Lords, but only to render you precarious and uſeleſs.

The Speech of Mr. King, againſt the Action.

Mr. King (afterwards Lord King, and Lord Chancellor). That which calls me up in the firſt Place is, what that Honourable Gentleman, juſt againſt me, was pleaſed to intimate, as if the Right of Electing was only a Service, and not a Liberty, or Privilege; and I find a worthy Member, that ſpoke laſt, is of the ſame Opinion. Truly, I am loth to tell you my own, without deſiring the Act 25 Car. II. cap. 9. may be read. ——

Members. No, no.

Mr. King. 'Tis an Act to enable the County Palatine of Durham to ſend Members to Parliament, and it recites, That they had not, before that Time, had the Liberty and Privilege of electing and ſending any Members to Parliament: Where you ſee the Legiſlature call it a Liberty and Privilege; and, if the Legiſlature call it ſo, I think I may venture to call it ſo too. And if it be a Liberty and Privilege, then the Queſtion will be, Whether it does not ſtand on the ſame Bottom with our Liberties and Privileges? In caſe of any other Franchiſe or Liberty, an Action lies at Common Law for the Breach thereof; and why an Action ſhould not lie at Common Law for the Breach of this Franchiſe, as well as for the Breach of every other Franchiſe, is to me very ſtrange. Gentlemen take it for granted, this is purely an Action at Common Law, and no Statute hath any Influence on it. Now there is a Statute which hath not been mentioned (only I muſt premiſe that which, I think, no Body will deny, viz. That wherever an Act of Parliament does forbid any Thing, if any Body be injured by the doing of the Thing ſo prohibited by that Act, in Conſequence of Law, the Perſon injured hath an Action); I ſay, There is a Statute that forbids Diſturbances and Hindrances in Matters of Elections; and, by Conſequence of Law, that Statute gives an Action to the Party injured, againſt the Perſon diſturbing or hindering him in his Election. The Statute I mean, is 3 Edw. I. cap. 5. that is a poſitive Law, whereby all Diſturbances in Elections are forbid: Every Man is forbid to hinder or diſturb by Force or Arms, by Malice, or menacing any Man, to make a free Election. 1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

I ſhall only inſtance in one parallel Caſe, though I could in many more: The Statute in Richard II's Time, de ſcandalis Magnatum, only forbids the ſpeaking Evil of great Men: There is not one Word of an Action; yet, by Operation of Law, it was always held, that an Action would lie upon that Statute for a Scandal of a great Man, becauſe it was prohibited by that Statute. So here, the Statute forbids the diſturbing of any Man by Force or Malice to make free Election; the Jury have found, that the Defendants did, in this Cauſe, maliciouſly diſturb and hinder the Plaintiff from voting at the Election; and by a like Conſequence and Operation of Law, this Action is maintainable.

Gentlemen ſay, This is a new Action, never heard of before: It is true, this particular Action was never brought before; but Actions of the ſame Kind and Nature, and grounded on the ſame Principles and Reaſons of Law, have been brought before. Et ubi eadem eſt ratio, idem jus. I could give you many Inſtances of this Kind. Was it ever heard, till the 20th or 21ſt of Car. II. that an Action lay againſt an Officer for denying a Poll to one that ſtood Candidate for a Bridge-Maſter? The Mayor denied the Poll, and ſaid, He was Judge of the Election: And upon this, the Perſon injured brought his Action and recovered. At the ſame Time it was ſaid, There was no ſuch Action ever heard of before; 'tis true, not that Species, but the Genus was heard of. Another Action was brought 30 Car. II (which was never heard of before) againſt a Mayor, for refuſing the Plaintiff's Vote for a ſucceeding Mayor.

I believe every body knows, that all the Law-books for 400 Years ſay, That the Reverſioner had Liberty to go into an Eſtate of a Tenant for Life, to ſee if he commit Waſte. And no Action was brought till 10 Jac. I. by a Reverſioner againſt a Tenant for Life, for refuſing to let him in to ſee whether Waſte was committed. No Action was ever brought againſt a Maſter of a Ship for the negligent keeping and Loſs of Goods on board his Ship, till about 24 Car. II. and yet the Action lay.

There was another Action, in K. Charles I's Time, brought, for a falſe and malicious Proſecution of an Indictment of a Man for Treaſon. There was the ſame Objection; and it was ſaid, That this would deter People from proſecuting. And no body ever dreamt of it before, 'tis true, but it ſtood upon the general Reaſon of the Law; if you do me a Wrong, I muſt have a Remedy. And as to what a worthy Gentleman has ſaid, That there are Inſtances at Common Law, where a Man ſhall recover, and yet have no Damages; 'tis true in real Actions; but let him give me an Inſtance of that in an Action of the Caſe. He recovers nothing there: If he does not recover Damages in real Actions, he recovers the Land itſelf. ——

Members. The Queſtion, the Queſtion.

Mr.

1703-4. 2 & 3 An.

Mr. King. I find Gentlemen are very uneaſy, I will trouble you no further.

Members. Go on, go on.

Mr. King. I agree the determining the Right of Election belongs to the Houſe of Commons; and they ought to apply to the Houſe of Commons in that Caſe. And I ſhall not depart from that; I think I can't, without ruining the Conſtitution: But that which I ſay is, That this Action does not at all relate to the Right of Election. This Action is brought by a Man that hath an undoubted Right of voting, againſt an Officer for maliciouſly refuſing his Vote. Put the Caſe this had happened in a County (for the Law would have been the ſame), that a Freeholder, who had a Right to vote, had tendered his Vote to the Sheriff; and though he knew he was a Freeholder, yet the Sheriff ſhould maliciouſly refuſe his Vote: Hath the Sheriff done this Man an Injury or not? This Man does not bring his Action becauſe the Perſon he would have voted for is not returned, but 'tis becauſe there is an Injury done to his Franchiſe. If I thought the Right of Election was concerned in this Caſe, I would go as far as any, for I think that does belong to the Houſe; but I don't think this is concerned in the preſent Caſe.

Mr. Walpole's ſpeech, againſt the Action.

Mr. Walpole (afterwards Sir Robert, and Chancellor of the Exchequer). I will trouble you very little at this Time: I think the Point of Learning and Law hath been ſo well ſpoken to by thoſe learned Gentlemen that have been againſt the Queſtion, that, if I was able, I ſhould ſay nothing more to that. But I think the Queſtion, as it is going to be put, is not right; for, as the Queſtion ſtands, though I can't give my Negative to one Part, I think 'tis impoſſible to give my Affirmative to the other. The Matter before you comes to this ſingle Queſtion, Whether you will encourage and give a Power to an Officer, be he whom he will, to act arbitrarily, or rather chuſe, in ſuch a Caſe, to do ſomething in Favour of the Electors? I am ſure, if I deſire to be elected by thoſe that had the Right, I would never give the Officer an Authority to the Prejudice of the Electors. Where you come to ſay, That the ſole judging of the Qualification of the Electors belongs to the Houſe of Commons only, thoſe, I apprehend, are Words of too large Extent and ill Conſequence. Suppoſe there was an Action brought upon the laſt Act of Parliament for a falſe or double Return.——

Mr. Freeman. There is an Exception in the Queſtion as to that.

Mr. Walpole. I know there is: But ſuppoſe an Action is brought upon that Statute, the Officer may have proceeded with the greateſt Impartiality, may have taken the Poll with the greateſt Exactneſs and Juſtice, and there may appear to be an equal Number of Votes for each Candidate; whereupon he makes a Double Return; and this brings it to be determined by the Committee of Elections, and they vote one of them duly elected. This Gentleman, that had the Favour of the Committee, (though afterwards poſſibly it might be made appear, that, by Bribery or Corruption, and at great Expence, he procured himſelf to be elected) after you have voted him duly elected, he hath nothing to do but to try his Action, and ſee if he can make his double Damages amount to his Expences. The firſt Thing he is to do, is to produce the Vote of the Houſe of Commons that declared him duly elected, contrary, perhaps, to the laſt Determination in Parliament, which in every Place is to be the Guide to the Returning Officer. But ſhall there then be given in Evidence no Qualification of the Electors? Nothing to prove that the Perſons admitted to vote were qualified according to ſuch laſt Determination? Or ſhall that Vote of the Houſe of Commons, that was intended only to bring him into this Houſe, recover him 5 or 600 Damages? I take it to be ſo, as the Law ſtands. Now it ought to be ſeen who hath the greater Number of legal Votes, and whether duly qualified; and, in that Caſe, you muſt ſuffer the Matter again to be tried by the Court; and you do, in ſome Meaſure, make them Judges of the Qualifications of the Electors; if it were otherwiſe, they could not enquire into the Majority of legal Votes.

What happens in the Caſe of a Mayor, may be in the Caſe of a Sheriff. If a Mayor, or a Conſtable, may deny a Man his Vote, that hath an uncontroverted Right in a Corporation, a Sheriff may refuſe a Freeholder, and ſtrike off enough to make a Majority for whom he pleaſes. You had once the Caſe before you, Whether a Sheriff could refuſe a Scrutiny? and one or two Gentlemen would have given that Power to a Sheriff; but a learned Gentleman thought it a dangerous Queſtion, and he deſired to come to the Merits of the Election; and that was determined, and you voted the worthy Member duly elected, and thought it a dangerous Thing to determine, Whether the Officer had that Power one Way or another? I think that Part of the Queſtion, which concerns the Qualification of the Electors, ought to be left out.

The Marquis of Hartington ſaid, He thought it was a conſtant Rule, where a Queſtion was complicated, if a Member deſired to have it divided, to divide it; and therefore he ſeconded the Gentlemen who ſpoke laſt, That thoſe Words in the Queſtion, relating to the Qualification of Electors, ſhould be left out.

Whereupon the Queſtion was put, Whether the Words, relating to the Qualification of Electors, ſhould ſtand? And it was carried, That thoſe Words ſhould ſtand Part of the Queſtion. Ayes 215, Noes 97. And the Commons proceeded to make the reſt of the Reſolutions above-mentioned, viz. That, according to the known Law and Uſage of Parliament, neither the Qualification of any Elector, or the Right of any Perſon elected, is cognizable or determinable elſewhere than before the Commons, &c.

There were ſeveral Conferences afterwards between the Lords and Commons, for adjuſting their reſpective Privileges, which broke off at length very abruptly; and as the Commons had addreſſed Her Majeſty, not to grant a Writ of Error, the Lords on the other 1703-4 2 & 3 An. Hand, drew up an Addreſs and Repreſentation of the Caſe, in which they ſay, Whatever the Commons may inſinuate on this Occaſion, we deſire not to meddle with the Choice of their Repreſentatives: We willingly leave that Matter where it is; and in what manner it is exerciſed there, how impartially and ſteadily, is ſo well known by Experience, and ſo univerſally underſtood, that the People will be extremely deſirous their Eſtates and Properties ſhould be ſubject to ſuch Determinations: It is not ſtrange, the free Conference ended without Succeſs, when the Commons came to it with ſuch a Temper, as appears by the Votes of the 8th of March, made after they themſelves had conſented to the free Conference: If thoſe Votes had been publiſhed ſoon enough, it would have fully convinced the Lords, how vain a Thing it was to confer with them further upon the Matters in Debate at the former Conferences; for not content with what they had done before, upon Information that their Serjeant had been ſerved with two Writs of Habeas Corpus, returnable before the Lord Keeper, in Behalf of Mr. Montague and Mr. Denton, two of the Gentlemen that had been of Counſel with the five Priſoners, they came to a Reſolution, That no Commoner, committed by them for Breach of Privilege, or Contempt of the Houſe, ought to be by Habeas Corpus made to appear before any other Judicature, and required their Serjeant to make no Return, or yield any Obedience to thoſe Writs; and that for ſuch Refuſal, he had the Protection of the Houſe of Commons.

It hath been always held the undoubted Prerogative of the Crown, to have an Account of the Reaſon, why any Subject is deprived of Liberty? and it has ever been allowed, That by the known common Law, it is the Right of every Subject under Reſtraint upon Demand to have his Writ of Habeas Corpus, and thereupon to be brought before ſome proper Court, where it may be examined, Whether he be detained for a lawful Cauſe? And the Statutes made in the Reign of Your Royal Grandfather, and Your Royal Uncle have enacted, That in all Caſes, Writs of Habeas Corpus be granted and obeyed by the reſpective Officers, upon great Penalties.

But theſe Votes import a direct Repeal of thoſe Laws, as to all Perſons committed by the Houſe of Commons.

It is no longer worth diſputing, Whether a Perſon committed by them, though for a Fact which appears to be both lawful and neceſſary, may be delivered by any Court; for by this new Law, he ſhall never be brought thither; and the Serjeant is not only warranted, but commanded openly to contemn your Majeſty's Royal Writs of Habeas Corpus, brought upon the Act of the 31ſt of King Charles II. which is an Invaſion of your Prerogative, never before heard of in England.

Your Majeſty does not claim an Authority to protect any of your Officers for diſobeying a known Law. The Habeas Corpus Act in Times of imminent and viſible Danger, was in the late Reign ſuſpended by Acts of Parliament for ſome ſhort Time, and yet (ſo Sacred was that Law held) that thoſe Acts paſſed with great Reluctancy; and one of the Arguments that prevailed moſt for agreeing to that Temporary Suſpenſion was, That it ſhould be an unanſwerable Evidence to all future Times, that this Act could never be ſuſpended afterwards, by any leſs Authority than that of the whole Legiſlature: But we live to ſee a Houſe of Commons take upon them to ſuſpend this Law by a Vote. 1703-4 2 & 3 An.

They Ordered, That the Lord Keeper of Your Great Seal, ſhould be acquainted with their Reſolutions, to the End the Writs of Habeas Corpus may be ſuperſeded, as contrary to Law, and the Privileges of their Houſe. They are contrary to no Law, but that of theſe Votes, which ſurely are none of the Laws the Lord Keeper was ſworn to obſerve; but yet he is to act at his Peril: They have ordered this Law to be publiſhed to him by their Clerk.

The Lord Keeper is a Commoner, and if he diſobeys, 'tis a Breach of Privilege; and if they ſhould carry it ſo far, as to order him into Cuſtody, he may ſeek, but is not to have, Relief from any Habeas Corpus.

We humbly beg Pardon of Your Majeſty, for this long and melancholy Repreſentation, which we could not avoid, without being guilty of Treachery to Your Majeſty, and to our Native Country. The five Perſons immediately concerned, are but poor Men; but we well know Your Majeſty's Juſtice and Compaſſion extends itſelf to the meaneſt of your Subjects.

The Matters in Diſpute are of the higheſt Conſequence: Your Majeſty's Prerogative, the Reverence due to Laws, and the Liberties and Properties of all the People of England are concerned and at Stake, if theſe Encroachments prevail.

We do not pretend to ſollicit Your Majeſty to put a Stop to theſe Innovations; Your own Wiſdom will ſuggeſt the moſt proper Methods: We have endeavoured to do our Duty, in laying the whole Matter before You.

We humbly beg Leave ſo far to reſume what has been ſaid, as to preſent to Your Majeſty a ſhort View of the unhappy Condition of ſuch of Your Subjects as have a Right of giving Votes for chooſing Members to ſerve in Parliament, which has been hitherto thought a great and valuable Privilege; but by the late Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons, is likely to be made only a dangerous Snare to them, in caſe they who may be hereafter choſen to ſerve in Parliament, ſhall think fit to purſue the Methods of this preſent Houſe of Commons.

If they refrain from making uſe of their Right in giving their Votes, they are wanting in their Duty to their Country, by not doing their Parts towards the chooſing ſuch Repreſentatives as will uſe their Truſt for the Good of the Kingdom, and not for the Oppreſſion of their Fellow Subjects.

If the Officer, who has the Right of taking the Suffrages, refuſe to admit them to give their Votes, they muſt either ſit down by it, and ſubmit to be wrongfully and maliciouſly deprived of their Rights; or, if they bring their

their Actions at Law, in order to assert their Rights, and recover Damages for the Injury (as all other injured Men may do, in like Cases) they become liable to indefinite Imprisonment, by incurring the Displeasure of those who are elected.

If being thus imprisoned, they seek their Liberty by Habeas Corpus (the known Remedy of all other Subjects), they do not only tie their own Chains faster, but bring all their Friends and Agents, their Sollicitors and Counsel into the same Misfortune with themselves.

If they think themselves to have received Injury by the Judgment upon the Habeas Corpus, and seek Relief by Writ of Error (the known Refuge of those who suffer by any wrong Judgment) all that assist them in that Matter, are likewise to lose their Liberties for it, and they themselves will be removed to new Prisons, in order to avoid the Justice of the Law.

We humbly conclude, with acquainting Your Majesty, That we have been informed by the Petition of two of the Prisoners, that they have been long delayed, though they have made their Applications in due Manner for Writs of Error.

We are under a necessary Obligation for the Sake of Justice, and asserting the Judicature of Parliaments to make this humble Address to Your Majesty, That no Importunity of the House of Commons, nor any other Consideration whatsoever may prevail with Your Majesty to suffer a Stop to be put to the known Course of Justice, but that You will be pleased to give effectual Orders for the immediate issuing of the Writs of Error.

To which Address Her Majesty answered,

" My Lords, I should have granted the " Writ of Error desired in this Address; but " finding an absolute Necessity of putting an " immediate End to this Session, I am sensible " there could have been no further Proceed- " ing upon that Matter.

And the same Day the Parliament was prorogued, which prevented Matters being brought to Extremity, and both Parties were in some Measure obliged; or at least, neither House had Reason to censure Her Majesty's Conduct on this Occasion.

For the five Prisoners obtained their Liberty by the Prorogation, which was one End of their bringing Writs of Habeas Corpus, and Writs of Error; and the Commons were satisfied, because no Writs of Error were granted.

Nor did the five Ailesbury Men think fit to continue or prosecute their Actions against the Constables afterwards; and so the Matter has slept ever since.

1705-4. 2 & 3 An.

Remarks.

What seems to have been insisted on by the Commons in these Debates, with the greatest shew of Reason, is, That the two Houses of Parliament are independent of each other, and sole Judges of their own Rights and Privileges; but if the Right of Electors to vote may be determined in the Courts of Law, and from thence such Causes removed by Writ of Error into the House of Lords; then the Lords would become Judges of the Right of Electors to chuse, and consequently who were duly elected Members of the Commons House; whereby the Commons would lose their Independency, and become subject to the Lords, as to their very Being; for though they allowed the Commons to determine the Right of the Members to sit in the House; yet if the Lords could, notwithstanding, upon a Writ of Error, give Damages against the Return-Officer, for not allowing the Vote of a Person whom they adjudged to have a Right; this must necessarily have such an Influence upon the Officer, as to induce him to return such Persons as would be most acceptable to their Lordships, and consequently their Lordships might in time chuse the House of Commons themselves: And further, should the House of Commons determine the Right of Election to be in one, and the Courts of Law, and their Lordships adjudge it to be in another, this would produce contradictory Judgments, and must create Confusion. There is indeed nothing of human Institution, but is liable to some Objection, and it was possible, the Commons might err in their Determinations: But they thought the Rights and Privileges of the Commons of England, much safer in the Hands of their own Representatives, than if they were but Tenants at Will to the House of Lords.

The sole Question, therefore, in the Debate seems to be, Whether, if the Lords should have it in their Power to punish the Return-Officer, when he does not allow of such Votes as they approve, This would not make the Lords entirely Masters of the Election of the Commons, and in Time exclude them from their Share in the Legislature? For if it would, every Man's private or particular Right must submit to this Consideration, Better a single Man suffer some trifling Wrong, than the Constitution be destroyed. Whatever Laws may countenance Actions on the Case, Writs of Error, or other Process, in ordinary Cases, must be waved here, when the Safety of the Whole comes in Competition with such private Rights; and the bringing such Actions would destroy the very Being of the Constitution.

Proceedings in the Houſe of Lords and Commons in the Caſe of CHARLES BATHURST, Eſq; in January, 1703. 2 Annæ.

THE Court of Exchequer, on the 15th of July 1701, made an Order ex officio, for the Preſervation of a Record in that Court; and the Lord Wharton, finding it was made Uſe of, as Evidence againſt him, in a Trial at the Queen's-Bench Bar, of an Iſſue directed out of Chancery, wherein the Lord Wharton was Plaintiff, and the ſaid Bathurſt, Squire, and others, were Defendants, concerning ſome Lead-Mines, petitioned the Houſe of Lords, praying the ſaid Order might be diſcharged, and the Record taken off the File, ſuggeſting, that the ſaid Record was forged. Bathurſt and Squire thereupon petitioned the Houſe of Lords, ſetting forth, That no Suit was depending in the Court of Exchequer between his Lordſhip and them; and therefore the Lord Wharton's Petition was not an Appeal (as he called it), but an original Complaint, and therefore ought to be determined by ſome inferior Court: But the Lords proceeding, however, to hear and determine the Cauſe, Mr. Bathurſt complained to the Houſe of Commons; and that Houſe, thereupon, came to the following Reſolution, on the 28th of January 1703, (viz.)

That the Houſe of Lords taking Cognizance of, and proceeding upon the Petition of Thomas Lord Wharton, complaining of an Order of the Court of Exchequer of the 15th of July 1701, for filing the Record of a Survey of the Honour of Richmond and Lordſhip of Middleham in the County of York, is without Precedent, and unwarrantable, and tends to the ſubjecting the Rights and Properties of all the Commons of England to an illegal and arbitrary Power.

The Lords, on the other hand, Reſolved, on the 27th of March 1704, That the Houſe of Commons taking upon them, by their Votes, to condemn a Judgment in the Houſe of Lords, upon the Petition of Thomas Lord Wharton, and to declare what the Law is, in Contradiction to the Proceedings of the Houſe of Lords, is without Precedent, and an Uſurpation of a Judicature, to which they have no Sort of Pretence.

The Case.

THIS being no State-Trial, and partially related by the Prosecutor himself, I shall only give a short State of the Case, that I may have the more Room for what are properly State-Trials, and published by Authority.

Mr. Colepeper had, in Conversation, reflected on Admiral Rook, whereupon the Admiral sent him a Challenge by the Defendant Denew; but Colepeper avoided answering it as much as he could, under Pretence that he should engage the Admiral with great Disadvantage; because the Admiral was sure of a Pardon, in Case he wanted it, whereas he was sure to be hanged if the Admiral fell; and giving Denew, who brought the Challenge, some ill Language, Denew challenged him himself: Mr. Britton also insulted him, and urged him to fight; and Denew meeting Mr. Colepeper afterwards near St. Clement's Church in the Strand, a Rencounter happened between them; they both drew their Swords, and made several Passes at each other, Mr. Merriam being present; but People coming in prevented Mischief.

After which Mr. Colepeper indicted the Defendants for an Assault and Conspiracy, and for challenging him; pretending, they designed to way-lay and assassinate him: But the Lords Winchelsea and Thanet giving them a great Character in Court, and testifying they were Men of Estates and great Worth, the Jury gave the following Verdict, That Mr. Merriam was Not guilty.

Richard Britton Not guilty of the Conspiracy, or the Assault; but guilty of the rest of the Matter charged in the Indictment.

Nathaniel Denew Not guilty of the Conspiracy, but guilty of the rest of the Indictment.

Whereupon Mr. Denew was fined 200 Marks, and Mr. Britton 100 l.

Mr. Colepeper himself was the principal Witness against these Gentlemen; and some Ladies, his Relations, supported his Testimony: The Persons who took the Trial in Short-Hand were employed by him, and the Trial was published in the Manner he directed it.

Baillie's Case.

Proceedings against DAVID BAILLIE, for Defaming the Duke of Queensberry and the Marquis of Anandale, in February, $170\frac{2}{3}$. 2 Annæ.

1702-3. 2 Annæ.

THE Government of Scotland having intercepted a Letter from Mr. Baillie to Duke Hamilton, wherein he told the Duke, that the Duke of Queensberry and the Marquis of Anandale would have suborned him to swear, That Duke Hamilton, the Duke of Athol, and his Brother the Earl of Cromarty, and others, were engaged in a Plot to bring in the Pretender; the Council examined Baillie upon Interrogatories, but could get nothing out of him: Whereupon they ordered him to be prosecuted for Leasing-making, and creating Differences between the Queen and her Subjects, (which was Treason in Scotland before the Union, but then only a Misdemeanor.)

Baillie being tried before the Lords of the Council, confessed he was the Author of the Letter to Duke Hamilton: Whereupon he was sentenced to stand in the Pillory, and to be banished the Kingdom for Life; there being thirty one Members present, and not one dissenting Voice.

But remaining a Prisoner in the Tolbooth at Edinburgh, when the next Parliament met, they set him at Liberty on his Petition; requiring him only to find Bail, to appear before the Parliament when called.

1704. 3 Annæ. Quelch's Case.

The Trial of JOHN QUELCH, and his Accomplices, for Piracy, Robbery, and Murder, at Boſton in New-England, on the 13th, 16th, and 19th of June, 1704. 3 Annæ.

1704. 3 Annæ.

THE Articles preferred againſt them, charged, That the Brigantine Charles being fitted out as a Privateer at Boſton, to cruiſe on the French and Spaniards, under the Command of Captain Plowman, who died ſoon after they ſailed out of the Harbour of Boſton, in the Year 1703; the ſaid John Quelch, his Lieutenant, and the reſt of the Crew, turned Pirates, and took and plundered ſeveral Ships and Veſſels of the Portugueſe, (then in Amity with Great Britain) on the Coaſt of Braſil in America, and murdered the Captain of one of thoſe Ships.

The moſt remarkable Thing in this Trial is, that they were tried upon a Statute made in the 11th and 12th Years of William III. which impowers Commiſſioners to try Pirates in the Plantations, according to the Courſe of the Admiralty, and to condemn and execute them without impaneling a Jury; the Sentence being according to the Determination of the Majority of the Commiſſioners.

The Facts being proved beyond Contradiction againſt Quelch, and five of his Accomplices who were moſt active in the Captures, they were condemned and executed; but ſome Servants and others, who did not appear to have concurred with them voluntarily, were acquitted.

There being ſeveral Trials for Piracy inſerted already, and this being properly no State-Matter, I chuſe to give only an Abſtract of it, to make Room for what are properly State-Trials.

1704. 3 Annæ. Lindſay's Trial.

The Trial of DAVID LINDSAY, Gent. for High-Treaſon, on the 24th of April, 1704. 3 Annæ.

1704. 3 Annæ.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment reciting, That the Priſoner, David Lindſay, was a Subject of the late King William, and now of her preſent Majeſty, charges him, That after the 11th Day of December, 1688, viz. on the 26th Day of March, 1689, he was in this Kingdom of England, viz. in the Pariſh of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex; and that afterwards, and before the 3d of December 1697, viz. on the 1ſt of October, 1696, he did voluntarily go into France without Licenſe, either from the late King William, or the late Queen Mary; and that, on the 3d Day of December, 1697, he was not within the Dominions of the late King William: And that, as a falſe Traitor, after the 14th Day of January, 1697, viz. on the 10th of December, in the ſecond Year of her preſent Majeſty, he did traitorouſly return and come into the Kingdom of England, viz. into the Pariſh of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, without a Licenſe, either from the late King William, or from her preſent Majeſty, under the Privy Seal; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

The Priſoner being arraigned, on the 19th of April, deſired he might have Counſel, and thereupon Mr. Raymond and Mr. Williams were aſſigned to be of his Counſel; and, having pleaded Not Guilty, Monday, the 24th of April, was appointed for his Trial.

The Priſoner being brought to his Trial accordingly, on the 24th of April, a Jury was ſworn, to whom he made no Objections or Challenges.

After which the Priſoner ſaid, He ſhould give the Court as little Trouble as might be; he only begged leave to ſtate his Caſe truly, and ſhould then ſubmit it to their Judgment.

The Lord Chief Juſtice Holt told him, If he had a Mind to confeſs, he ſhould have done it before; for now the Jury were to enquire whether he was guilty or not; and directed the Queen's Council to ſtate the Evidence firſt.

Whereupon the Attorney-General ſaid, They charged him with going into France without Licenſe, and returning without Licenſe; and if he did not admit thoſe Facts, they would call their Witneſſes to prove them upon him.

Lindſay anſwered, He did confeſs, that being a Native of Scotland, and never having had any Office in England, he did go into France without his Majeſty's Licenſe, and did continue beyond Sea, 'till he was informed her preſent Majeſty, by her Proclamation in 1702, granted a General Pardon to all her Subjects; whereupon he came into Scotland, and preſented himſelf to the Government there, and had the Benefit of the Queen's Proclamation allowed him; and he was adviſed, by ſome eminent Counſel there, that he was as free to come into England as any other Subject; and, having his Wife and Children here, he came to London by Way of Berwick; and conceived he was not guilty of Treaſon within the Intent of the Act, deſiring his Counſel might be heard to that Point.

Then the Proclamation was read, containing a general Indemnity for Scotland; and Proof was made that the Priſoner was a Native of Scotland, and a Proteſtant, and had been allowed the 1704. 3 Annæ. The Priſoner's Defence, by his Counſel.

1704. 3 Annæ.

The Priſoner's Defence, by his Counſel.

the Benefit of the Queen's Pardon there. After which Mr. Williams, of Counſel for the Priſoner, ſaid,

My Lord, We do humbly inſiſt, that the Words in the Proclamation do amount to a Licenſe to us to come to Scotland; and if ſo, then we are not guilty within this Act of Parliament, of coming into the Queen's Dominions without Licenſe. And we likewiſe further inſiſt, That one that has the Queen's Licenſe to come into Scotland, may, without any further Licenſe, come into England. The Proclamation pardons all Treaſons, and all correſponding and intercommuning with Rebels, or declared Enemies of the Queen, and all other Crimes of what Nature ſoever; and it is declared to be as available as if the particular Crime was named, and as if Remiſſions under the Great Seal were paſſed: And Her Majeſty alſo declares, That it ſhall be taken in the moſt favourable and comprehenſive Senſe that may be, for the Security of the Subject. I admit the Words of this Act are, If any return into England, or any other of her Majeſty's Dominions, without Licenſe under the Privy Seal, it ſhall be High-Treaſon; now, we humbly hope, if the Queen is pleaſed to beſtow her Licenſe by any Act, or in any Manner equally notorious with her Privy Seal, 'tis ſufficient, and within the Meaning and Equity of the Statute; and this Proclamation, made by all the Heralds at Arms, at the moſt publick Place at Edinburgh, is much more notorious and publick than a Licenſe under the Privy Seal only: Beſides, the very Words of the Proclamation are, That it ſhall be, in every Reſpect, as valid and effectual as if it were under the Great Seal; then, ſurely, it muſt be at leaſt as ſtrong as if under the Privy Seal: Beſides, the Statute does not ſay, that the Licenſe muſt be under the Privy Seal of England; and it not being ſaid what Privy Seal, or of what Kingdom, it muſt be intended according to the ſubject Matter, the Seal of that Kingdom or Dominion where the Licenſe is granted; and that being Scotland, the Licenſe under the Great Seal of Scotland is ſufficient; for it ſeems improper that the Seal of one Kingdom ſhould be made uſe of to licenſe an Act in another Kingdom. But it will be ſaid, that, taking this to be a Licenſe, it is only a Licenſe to come into Scotland; but the Priſoner is indicted for coming into England without Licenſe: Now this Act, with Submiſſion, muſt operate and take its Effect upon the firſt Step made from France into any of the Queen's Dominions; ſo that if the Priſoner be guilty of Treaſon within this Act, it muſt be when he made his firſt Step from France into Scotland; but that being made lawful by the Proclamation, amounting (as we ſay) to a Licenſe, it cannot be afterwards Treaſon for the Priſoner to come into England; and this Proclamation amounts to a Pardon of the Treaſon, though it were before the Priſoner returned to any of the Queen's Dominions: For both the going into France without Licenſe, and returning home without Licenſe, muſt be joined together to make it Treaſon; ſo that the Priſoner, from the Time he went into France without Licenſe, was an Offender, and conſequently capable of a Pardon; and if the original Offence be pardoned, all that enſues upon that Offence is at the ſame Time pardoned. This ſeems to be proved by Cole's Caſe, Plowd. 401. where, after one had felonioufly murdered another, there came a Pardon of all Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and afterwards the Party wounded died. The original Miſdemeanor being pardoned, all that enſued upon it was pardoned; and conſequently the Murder, by the Pardon only of all Miſdemeanors.

Beſides, I would beg leave to offer to your Conſideration, whether a Scotchman, that was not in England at the Time of making this Act, be within the Meaning of this Act? The Act ſays, That if any of his Majeſty's Subjects ſhall go into France without Licenſe: This, according to a reaſonable Conſtruction, ſhall be intended only of Engliſh Subjects, ſtrictly ſpeaking, who were repreſented by the Parliament that made this Law, and who only can reaſonably be ſuppoſed to have Notice of it.

There is another Objection, (viz). That this Indictment, or Trial, cannot be in Middleſex; but in the County whither the Priſoner firſt came, after his leaving France, which was Northumberland. It is a known Rule, That all Indictments, or Trials for Treaſons, and other Crimes, muſt be in the County where the Treaſon, &c. was committed: It is true indeed, if I ſteal Goods in one County, and carry them into another, it is Felony, (though not Robbery), in every County whither I carry them: And the Reaſon given in Dyer 40, and 7 Coke 2, is, That the Robbery or Felony does not alter the Property of the Goods: But this depends upon a different Reaſon, no Way affecting the principal Caſe; for if coming into every County, would make a freſh Treaſon, a Man might be brought to ſuffer as a Traitor, with many Pardons about him.

Mr. Raymond, the Priſoner's other Counſel, alſo ſaid, I beg the Liberty to offer a Word or two on the ſame Side, for the Priſoner, and ſhall take Leave to inſiſt upon it, That Mr. Lindſay cannot be called one of his late Majeſty's Subjects within this Act: I do agree, he was the late King's Subject, as King of Scotland, but not as King of England. This Act being made in England, by the Engliſh Parliament, and uſing the Word Subjects, muſt mean ſuch Subjects as that Parliament were able to oblige, which are only the Subjects of England, or the Dominions depending on the Crown of England; but not the Subjects of Scotland, which is a different Dominion from England.

I am very ſenſible, with what Solemnity Calvin's Caſe, in 7 Rep. is ſaid by my Lord Coke to have been adjudged; but muſt beg Leave to conſider the Foundation upon which this Reſolution is built: According to my Lord Coke himſelf, in Calvin's Caſe, Legiance is a true and faithful Obedience of the Subject due to the Sovereign; for which the Sovereign is obliged to protect his Subjects: But this is not a blind Obedience to every arbitrary Command of the Sovereign; but is only ſuch an Obedience, as the Law of the Kingdom, or Principality, has reſpectively preſcribed, for the Subject to pay to his Sovereign: Conſequently, the Legiance due to the King, as King of England, and the Legiance due to him as King of Scotland, (ſince the Laws of both Nations are diſtinct) muſt be ſeparate and diſtinguiſhable.

And

1704. 3 Annæ.

And that the Parliament did not intend to concern themſelves with Scotland, or the Natives thereof, appears by the Preamble of the Act; the Words are, That upon the Concluſion of the Peace, it was become neceſſary, for the carrying on a Trade between England and France, that the Subjects of each Kingdom ſhould have &c. Now if a Scotchman ſhould be taken to be a Subject of the Kingdom of England, I conceive he was never taken to be a Subject of the Kingdom of England.

But taking it, that Mr. Lindſay, though a Native of Scotland, might be within both the Words and Meaning of the Act; yet I will ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether this Act will bind him, he being beyond Sea, (viz). in France, at the Time when it was made. I agree, that every Scotchman reſident here, is bound by all the Laws of the Land, and ſo are all Foreigners whatſoever, who live here under the King's Protection: But as ſoon as they are gone out of the Kingdom, their Allegiance, which was but local, ceaſes, and they are no longer obliged by the Laws of England: It muſt be agreed, that no Engliſh Act of Parliament can bind Scotland; nor, as I humbly apprehend, the Scotch, while out of England: And, if ſo, then how could the Priſoner be bound by this Act, being a Scotchman, and out of this Kingdom when the Act was made. Suppoſe it was enacted, That if a Dane ſhould land in England without Licenſe, he ſhould be a Traitor; and a Dane, notwithſtanding, ſhould come into England without ſuch Licenſe, ſuch an Act might amount to a Prohibition of his coming, and he might be uſed as an Alien Enemy, 7*Co.* 6 B. as Perkin Warbeck was in Henry the VIIth's Time; but could not make him a Traitor, becauſe he owed no Allegiance to the Act, or Subjection to the Law, at the Time when the Act was made. As to the Priſoner's having been in England, and reſided here, that, I think, will make no Difference, becauſe his Subjection to the Engliſh Law ceaſed, as ſoon as he ſtepped off from the Engliſh Shore.

I beg Leave further to inſiſt, That this Evidence don't maintain the Indictment. The Indictment is for returning from France into England, and the Evidence is, That he returned out of France into Scotland, and from thence into England. The Act ſays, "That if any of his "Majeſty's Subjects, &c. return into the King-"dom of England, or other his Majeſty's Domi-"nions:" The Meaning of which we take to be, That the firſt coming of any ſuch Perſon into any of his Majeſty's Dominions, ſhall be the Treaſon: And that the Act did not intend to make every ſeveral coming into every diſtinct Dominion, a new Treaſon; for if he has a Licenſe to come into one, it is to be believed, with a great Deal of Reaſon, he may be truſted in any other of her Majeſty's Dominions: And if the coming into Scotland, was the firſt and only Treaſon puniſhable by this Act, then we muſt offer the general Pardon of Scotland in the Priſoner's Excuſe: For though generally ſpeaking, when an Engliſh Act mentions the Great Seal or Privy Seal, it muſt be taken to be the Great Seal, or Privy Seal of England: Yet in this Engliſh Act, if your Lordſhip will conſtrue the Words, His Majeſty's Subjects, not only to be his Subjects as King of England, but as King of England, or any other Nation; by Parity of Reaſon, the Words Privy Seal ought to be extended to all the Privy Seals the King has, as King of England, or King of Scotland: And, if ſo, then ſince the Queen in her Proclamation, has declared, That Her Pardon ſhall be taken as beneficially as if it had been under the Great Seal, (and the Great Seal includes the Privy Seal, and is of greater Efficacy); we humbly hope it will be as beneficial to the Priſoner; nay, rather more, becauſe as to Scotland, it pardons the Offence: For though the Return is after the Pardon, yet it pardons the going into France, which is the Foundation of the Crime; and without which, the returning into Scotland, or any of his Majeſty's Dominions, was no Offence: This is the Uſe the Priſoner would make of this Pardon. I cannot preſs it as a Pardon of an Engliſh Crime, though it ſeems ſomething ſtrange, that Mr. Lindſay ſhould, by Virtue of this Pardon, be a very good Subject of the Queen's in Scotland, and have all the ſame Liberties other of his Countrymen have there, and yet ſhould be a Traitor againſt the Queen here in England: That he ſhould be within the Queen's Protection there, and out of her Protection here; and yet at the ſame Time that his Allegiance to her cannot be ſevered (according to my Lord Coke in Calvin's Caſe); nor he conſidered as a Subject to her as Queen of Scotland, and not as Queen of England.

The Reply of the Queen's Counſel to his Defence.

To this Defence, Sir Thomas Powis, the Queen's Serjeant replied, It muſt be owned, that a great Deal of that which has been ſaid, might have carried Weight with it, if it had been pleaded in Scotland, where the Proclamation was made; but to make uſe of it here in England, as having any Force in this Caſe, is not agreeable to Law or Reaſon: For 1ſt it is a Pardon of another Kingdom, for Offences committed againſt the Crown of Scotland; whereas this Indictment is for an Offence committed againſt the Crown of England: And, 2*dly*, It was granted at a Time precedent to the Time of this Offence committed. As for the Words of the Act not extending to a Native of Scotland, we need do no more than read them, to make it appear otherwiſe: It ſays not, Any of the Subjects of the Kingdom of England, but if any of his Majeſty's Subjects; ſo that whoever was a Subject of the late King's, is within the Act: And they would do little Service to the Subjects of Scotland to overthrow Calvin's Caſe, which was ſo ſolemnly determined near 100 Years ago; which enables them of Scotland to come into England, and enjoy the ſame Privileges here as the Subjects of England do. Certainly, as they are let into all theſe Benefits by the Reſolution of that Caſe, ſo they are, at the ſame Time, the Subjects of the King or Queen of England: And ſince the Miſchief of a Scotchman's returning, be equal with that of an Engliſhman's, conſequently, they are not only within the Words, but the Meaning of that Act. It is true, we cannot, by an Act here, bind them in Scotland; but we are not now putting in Execution this Act in Scotland, but putting it in Execution here in England, upon a Scotchman, that had been long an Inhabitant here before. As to the Indictment being laid in a wrong Place, if this Objection would hold, it would render it impracticable to profecute any one for this Offence; it being impoſſible to know where a Man firſt privately arrived: But we ſay, wherever he is found in England, there the Indictment may be laid againſt him; and the Caſe of the Felony comes Home to this Point: The Man that ſteals Goods in one County, may be indicted in any other County where he carries them. Upon the whole Matter, the Fact being confeſſed, we inſiſt he is within the Words, and the Meaning of the Act, and within the miſchievous Conſequences which are intended to be prevented by it.

Mr. Attorney alſo replied to the Priſoner's Counſel, and ſaid, My Lord, we are not to conſider this Gentleman, in this Caſe, as a Scotchman abſolutely, but as a Scotchman here in England. The Queſtion is, Whether an Act of Parliament made in England will not bind every Perſon that is reſident here in England? Now the Priſoner was reſident here in England, and went hence into France: And by the Law every Scotchman, reſiding in England, is an Engliſhman, and hath a Right to enjoy the Privileges of an Engliſhman. This is the Reſolution in Calvin's Caſe: I will give but one Inſtance of this: The Act of Navigation, made 12 Car. II. requires, That the Maſter, and three fourths of the Mariners, ſhall be Engliſh: The Act of 14 Car. II. cap. 11. declares, That any of Her Majeſty's Subjects of England, Ireland, and the Plantations, ſhall be accounted Engliſh, and no others. Now the Natives of Scotland inhabiting in England or Ireland, have always been allowed to be Engliſh or Iriſh, within that Act; and have enjoyed the Privileges ever ſince, of being Maſters of Ships: So that to all Intents and Purpoſes, a Scotchman being in England, enjoys the Privileges of an Engliſhman, and is a Subject of the Crown of England. And as to what they ſay, That his Offence was going into France, that is but the Deſcription of the Perſon; it is his returning from France to England, that is the Offence; and it is not his returning to Scotland, but returning to England, or any other of her Majeſty's Dominions, bound by the Acts of Parliament of England.

As to that Objection, That this Act cannot bind the Scots here, becauſe they have no Repreſentatives in Parliament here; that is not ſo, for they may be, and many of them are, Freemen of Corporations, and Freeholders, and, as ſuch, may be repreſented in Parliament. And as to that Objection, That Middleſex is not the firſt County he came into; the Queen may proceed againſt him in any County, as in an Eſcape: It is an Eſcape in every County where the Party comes; and the Party eſcaping, or the Sheriff, may be proceeded againſt in any County where the Party eſcaped is found, as well as in that from whence he firſt eſcaped; and if this were otherwiſe, the Act could ſcarce ever be put in Execution.

Mr. Lindſay ſtill inſiſting, That the Pardon reinſtated him in all the Privileges he had before; the Chief Juſtice replied, I tell you, No: It only reſtores you to thoſe Privileges you had as a Scotchman; but exempts you not from any Puniſhment, to which you were obnoxious by the Laws of England: You ought to conſider, that as you are a Subject of Scotland, ſo you are a Subject to the Crown of England, by being a Native of Scotland ſince the Acceſſion of Scotland to England: And an Act of Parliament in England, may ſubject a Scotchman to any Penalty, for any Act that he ſhall do in England; and the Priſoner being a Scotchman born, and having been in England for a long Time, and departing from England into France, within the Time mentioned in the Act, and afterwards returning into England, is, to all Purpoſes, within the Letter and Deſign of the Act. Another Point that your Counſel have urged, is, That this Pardon is a Licenſe for you to return into Scotland; which, in Truth, it is not; and if it were a Licenſe to return into Scotland, it will not be a Licenſe to return into England. As to what you ſay of the Offence of going into France being pardoned, and therefore the Return cannot be High-Treaſon; to this a plain Anſwer hath been given you, That going into France ſince the 11th of December, 1688, is no Offence originally; but only the Return of ſuch Perſon is made High-Treaſon: Therefore ſuch a Pardon, even under the Great Seal of England, could not have diſcharged him if he had returned afterwards.

If you object, That this Pardon has made you a free Scotchman, to all Intents and Purpoſes, as if you had never offended; and conſequently you had the ſame Liberty as any other Scotchman, to come to England: It is true, this Pardon puts you in the ſame Condition as other Scotchmen are by the Law of Scotland; but it puts you not in the ſame Condition that other Scotchmen are by the Law of England.

They who are born in Scotland, may inherit Lands in England; but if an Alien be naturalized in Scotland; though he is, to all Purpoſes, a natural-born Subject of Scotland, by the Law of that Realm; yet he is not therefore inheritable to Lands in England, becauſe he is not a natural-born Subject by the Law of England.

The Chief Juſtice then proceeding to direct the Jury, acquainted them, That the Priſoner was a Subject of the Queen of England: That it appeared he had departed from England ſince the 11th of December, 1688, and had returned thither without Licenſe under the Privy Seal; which if they believed, they muſt find him guilty.

The Jury then withdrew; and after a Receſs of half an Hour, brought the Priſoner in GUILTY; and Sentence was pronounced on him as a Traitor; but he was reprived, and afterwards pardoned, as I remember: And, indeed, it would have been very hard, if the Queen had pardoned him as a Subject of Scotland, and cauſed him to be executed as a Subject of England, admitting he did come within the Letter of the Law.

1704. 3 Annæ. Tutchin's Trial.

The Trial of JOHN TUTCHIN, for A ſeditious Libel, called, The Obſervator, at Guildhall, London, on the 4th of November, 1704. 3 Annæ.

1704. 3 Annæ.

The Information.

THE Information charged, That the Defendant, John Tutchin, being a ſeditious Perſon, and a daily Inventer and Publiſher of falſe News and ſeditious Libels, to traduce the Government, did, on the 30th of May, in the firſt Year of Her Majeſty's Reign, compoſe and publiſh a certain falſe, malicious, ſeditious, and ſcandalous Libel, entitled, THE OBSERVATOR; wherein, among other Things, were the following Paſſages, No. 11. Saturday, the 30th of May, 1702. "At the ſame Time we "conſider the French King's Succeſs in his "Bribery and Corruption, we ought to lament "the ſad State of our own Country, which af-"fords ſo many Inſtances of Treachery. If we "may judge, by our own National Miſcarri-"ages, perhaps no Nation in Europe has felt "the Influences of French Gold more than Eng-"land: And worthy it is our greateſt Lamen-"tation, that our dear Country ſhould be "weakened by Men of mercenary Principles, "when Countries inferior to us in Strength and "Riches, are ſecured from Attempts of this "Nature, only by the Fidelity of their Peo-"ple. What is the Reaſon that French Gold "has not affected Holland as well as England; "but that their Miniſtry is ſuch as is intirely in "the Intereſt of their Country, and altogether "incorruptible? They prefer Men that are "knowing in their Poſts, and are active in "Buſineſs; when in England we find Offices "for Men, not Men for Offices; and a Title "of Honour gives a Man a Title to a great "Employment, he is altogether ignorant of. "By this, and by preferring of Men by In-"tereſt and Favour, has the Exciſe, the Cuſ-"toms, and other Branches of the Revenue, "intolerably ſunk; and, by this Means, has "the Navy of England, our chief Support, "been hitherto perfectly bewitched: And "can Lewis ſpend his Money better, than in "getting Men into Offices in England, who "are either falſe or ignorant of the Buſineſs, or "are his Friends?

That on the 11*th of* July following, he publiſhed another Obſervator; wherein are theſe Words: "And this is a Prerogative of ſingular Advan-"tage to the People of England, in that their "Repreſentatives are the Judges of the Male-"Adminiſtration of their Governors: That "they can call them in Queſtion for the ſame, "and can appoint ſuch to wear the Crown "who are fitteſt for Government; which they "have often done, and, indeed, which is the "Privilege of all free People, who are autho-"rized by the Laws of God and Nature, to "chuſe their own Governors.

That on the 12th of June, in the ſecond Year of the Queen, he publiſhed another; wherein are theſe Words: Take one Time with another, the Miſ-"managements of the Navy have been a great-"er Tax on the Merchants, than the Duties "raiſed by Parliament: We never had a better "Navy; but the Wiſdom of the Managers "thereof is like a bottomleſs Pit, paſt finding "out.

That on the 16*th of the ſame* June, he publiſhed another; wherein are theſe Words: "What a-"vails it a Man of Learning and Parts, to qua-"lify himſelf for the Service of his Country on "the Ocean? If he has Knowledge enough to "adviſe Neptune himſelf; if he has no Intereſt, "he ſhall have no Preferment. How much "does it look to our Nation's Diſadvantage, "to have Men in eminent Stations in the Navy, "who have not ſo much as an Idea, a Notion, "a Thought, of Naval Affairs? To have Men "ſuperintend the building of our floating Caſ-"tles, who know not the Nature of any Part "of the Management? To have Men employ-"ed in the Victualling, who qualify them-"ſelves for that Poſt, by Learning to write "their Names; which is, indeed, a Poſt for a "Philoſopher bred to the Sea?

That the 10*th of* July following, he publiſhed another Obſervator; wherein are theſe Words: "COUNTRYMAN. Truly, Maſter Obſervator, "I have no very good News for you: Mr. "Daniel de Foe has pleaded guilty to the In-"dictment againſt him, for writing and Pub-"liſhing, The ſhorteſt Way with the Diſſenters; "and he is ſentenced to ſtand three Times in "the Pillory, to pay a Fine of 200 Marks, "and to find Security for his good Behaviour for "ſeven Years. OBSERV. The Court could do "no otherwiſe than convict him upon his plead-"ing guilty: Habemus confitentem reum is very "often the Voice of Courts of Judicature; 'tis "the Eaſe of Judge and Juries. If Daniel de "Foe was in Expectation of Coleman's Black "Box, he has found a Pillory inſtead of it. I "don't trouble my Head about the Cuſtom of giving "the Pillory to Authors, which is the Puniſhment "of Bakers. You talk'd juſt now of turning "Author; have a Care of your Candle; you "ſee which is the ſhorteſt Way with Authors: "You muſt all enter yourſelves in the Regi-"ment of Colonel Foe. The Law of England "directs, that no Man ſhall be fined ultra "Tenementum; and, I make no Queſtion, but "the Juſtice of the Court has fined Mr. Foe "anſwerable to his Eſtate: His Security for his "good Behaviour for ſeven Years, without "Doubt, was rationally conſidered, as to the "Legality thereof. For my Part, I am only "acquainted with the Old Laws of England, "the antient Birthrights and Immunities of "Engliſhmen: This I take to be the Foundation "of New Laws.

A Challenge to the Favour.

The Jury ſworn.

Mr. Attorney opens the Evidence.

That on the 20*th of* May, 1704, he publiſhed another ſcandalous and ſeditious Libel; entitled, The Obſervator; in which are contained theſe Words. COUNTRYM. "Maſter Obſervator, "There is another Plot againſt you. OBSERV. "Prithee Man, there is a Plot againſt the Queen, "and the whole Nation; is it any Wonder then, that

1704. 3 Annæ.

" that there are Plots againſt me? The High-Flyers are now plotting againſt every honeſt " Man in England: I'll tell you more of it the " next Time we meet. COUNTRYM. I fancy " ſome Sort of People plot againſt you, becauſe " you endeavour to countermine their Plots a- " gainſt the Queen and Nation. OBSERV. You " are right enough; but that ſhan't hinder me " from detecting their Deſigns, and from opening " the People's Eyes. But prithee, what Plot is " this? COUNTRYM. Why, Sir, it is a Plot pre- " paratory to your Trial; and, if they can't affect " this Plot, I ſuppoſe you'll never be tried: They " inſinuate into the Citizens of London, that you " have lately written very ſcandalouſly, malici- " ouſly, and treaſonably, and I do not know how " many other Lies, againſt them the ſaid Citi- " zens; and, by this Means, they are minded to " ſet your Jurors againſt you. OBSERV. This " is likely enough, they'll leave no Stone un- " turn'd to ſuppreſs the Truth: I underſtand I " ſhould have been proſecuted by Bill the laſt " Seſſions; but the High-Flyers did not like " the Jury: Nay, they ſay, they don't like " the two Sheriffs, becauſe they on't pack " Juries, to find innocent Men guilty". To the great Scandal of the Queen and her Government, and againſt the Peace, &c.

A Challenge to the Favour.

Then the Jury were called over; and the Defendant's Counſel challenged Mr. Pinfold, becauſe he had diſapproved of The Obſervator, and therefore might be thought prejudiced againſt the Defendant: But the Court held, that they could not challenge to the Favour, in a Caſe of the Crown: However, Mr. Pinfold deſiring to be excuſed, the Queen's Counſel conſented he ſhould be ſet aſide; and no other Challenge being made to the reſt of the Panel, a Jury was ſworn: After which Mr. Attorney, in opening the Evidence, ſaid,

The Jury ſworn.

Mr. Attorney opens the Evidence.

My Lord, the Information is laid againſt Mr. Tutchin for a few of his Obſervators of the many he has writ; ſometimes two, ſometimes three in a Week. It is a great while that he has done it; and it has been the great Indulgence of the Government, that he has not been proſecuted before. He has been taken notice of by the Houſe, and been before the Secretary of State, where he has been admoniſhed to take care of what he ſhould write; but he would not take Warning: And now he is to be tried for ſome of his Papers; wherein it will appear, that he has taken the greateſt Liberty, I believe, that ever Man took. Libels uſed to come out by Stealth, and in the Dark; but theſe have been publiſhed openly, with all the Defiance imaginable. You may ſee how mild the Proſecution hath been, by what he has done ſince the Beginning of it: He has been writing in ſuch a Manner to prepare for the Trial, as, I think, never was done before. A Proſecution of this Nature is of the greateſt Conſequence; and, it may be, I may be blamed, being in the Office wherein I am, that there have not been more ſuch made. Here is the higheſt Reflection on the Government imaginable: There can be no Reflection on them that are in Office under Her Majeſty, but it muſt caſt ſome Reflections on the Queen, who employs them. I believe, there is hardly one, in any conſiderable Poſt under the Government, but has been criminated by him: Nothing eſcapes him. He cenſures all Mankind; writes magiſterially, and defies all Authority, and caſts the vileſt Reflections on the Government; as if we, who are in the Queen's Service, made it our Buſineſs to corrupt Juries; and makes Reflections on Sheriffs and Juries. Theſe are of the greateſt Conſequence in the World to the Government, and to every body: For if ſuch mercenary Writers may have the Liberty to reflect on whom they pleaſe, no Man's Reputation can be ſafe.

1704. 3 Annæ.

Gentlemen of the Jury, the Matter you are to enquire into, is, Whether the Defendant be the Author or Publiſher of theſe Libels? That is the Matter you are to try: What the Puniſhment muſt be, if you find him guilty, is in the Judgment of the Court. We will produce our Witneſſes, and doubt not, but you will do the Queen Juſtice.

The Evidence of How, the Printer.

The Evidence being called, Mr. How the Printer was ſworn, and teſtified, That the latter End of March, 1702, he treated with Mr. Tutchin about writing an Obſervator, to be publiſhed weekly: That the firſt was publiſhed in April, 1702, and all that had been publiſhed ſince, to that Time, he had from Mr. Tutchin: He was to give him half a Guinea for every Obſervator at firſt, and afterwards a Guinea; and had printed in all about 266, which he had paid him for.

That Tutchin bid him (the Printer) fear nothing; if any Danger happened, he would be a Rogue to himſelf and his Family if he did not diſcover him.

The Queen's Counſel then produced one of the Obſervators mentioned in the Information, and demanded of How, If he remembered the printing of it? and How anſwering, it was printed at his Houſe, the Defendant's Counſel asked, if he kept exactly to his Copy, or took the Liberty of inſerting and leaving out Words? How anſwered, ſometimes he had altered them himſelf, when he ſaw a Miſtake, and did not know where to find Tutchin; and he was not ſure that Paper was printed without ſome ſuch Alteration.

The Queen's Counſel demanding, If he had not publiſhed them in Volumes, ſince the firſt publiſhing of them? How anſwered, Tutchin ordered him to bind them up in three Volumes, and he made a Preface and Index to them, which he paid him for; and Tutchin ſet his Name to the Preface.

Then one of the Volumes being produced, the Defendant's Counſel demanded of How, Where that Book was delivered to him to be bound up? How anſwered, He could not ſay whether it was in London, Middleſex, or Surry.

Then the Priſoner's Counſel inſiſted, That they could not read the Paper produced as Tutchin's Paper; for whatever Papers How received from him were in Writing, and they muſt produce that very Writing, or a true Copy of it; and Mr. How declared he had often altered the Papers; and that might be made a Libel, by a very ſmall Alteration, that was not ſo before.

The Court demanding of How, If he had not the original Papers? he anſwered, Very few of them.

Whereupon Sir Thomas Powis obſerved, That thus, if the Author could get the Copy deſtroyed, ed, there could be no Evidence againſt him; for the Printer could never ſay, it agreed with the Copy to a Letter: He thought, however, they had given a fair Evidence that this was the ſame Paper that was brought to How, nor had they ſhewn that any thing was added to it, or diminiſhed from it: That the Printer teſtified, the Defendant avowed and juſtified all he had printed, ordered him to collect all thoſe Obſervations into Volumes, and owned them afterwards: It was obſerved alſo, that they were printed and publiſhed in London; and wherever the Agreement was made between the Author and Printer, they might charge the Defendant where the Papers were printed, purſuant to his Agreement; for this made the Compoſing and Printing his Act, eſpecially after he had made an Index and Preface to the Volume, and ſet his Name to it: This was, no doubt, a Publication and owning of them.

The Defendant's Counſel ſtill inſiſted, That the Papers ought not to be read, if they had not been examined with the written Copies ſent to the Printers: That it was true, every Copy of a Libel was a Libel; but whoſe Libel was it? And demanded of How, If Tutchin looked over all the Papers in the Book, and owned them? How anſwered, Tutchin ordered him to deliver them to the Lord Nottingham, about a Week after they were publiſhed, which was in April, 1703, and he delivered them to his Lordſhip accordingly.

Then two of the Obſervators in the Book were ordered to be read, namely, that of the 30th of May, 1702, were he ſays, At the ſame Time we conſider the French King's Succeſs, in his Bribery, &c. (as in the Information); and that of the 11th of July, 1702, where he ſays, And this is a Prerogative of ſingular Advantage, &c. (which ſee in the Information.)

How being asked who was the Author of theſe two Papers, anſwered, He had ſhewn Mr. Tutchin the ſame Numbers, and he had owned them an hundred Times.

Then it was demanded, If he carried all the Original Papers he had to Mr. Borret? and he anſwering he did, Mr. Borret was ſworn, and depoſed, That How brought the Original Paper of the 12th of June, 1703, to him, where he ſays, Take one Time with another, &c. (as in the Information): Then the Paſſage in The Obſervator of the 10th of July, 1703, was read, where he ſays, COUNTRYMAN, Truly Mr. Obſervator, I have no very good News for you, &c.

Mr. Borret alſo produced the Original Obſervator of the 20th of May, 1704, and teſtified he had it of Mr. How, and How teſtified he had it from Tutchin; wherein he ſays, COUNTRYMAN. Maſter Obſervator, there is another Plot againſt you, (as in the Information).

Here the Defendant's Counſel objected, That It was not yet proved theſe Papers were written in London, as laid in the Information; obſerving, that at the Biſhops Trial, though the Petition was proved to be under all their Hands, it was required they ſhould make it appear, that the Paper was written in the County of Middleſex.

The Queen's Counſel anſwered, they had proved his owning himſelf to be the Author, and his cauſing them to be printed in London.

1704. 3 Annæ.

The Court ſaid, that was not an Evidence of his writing them in London; and if he was guilty of a Fact in one County, they could not charge it in another; but if he cauſed it to be printed in London, no doubt but that was a Publication there.

The Queen's Counſel replied, If his owning himſelf to be the Author, and their proving the Copy to be received in London, was not Evidence that they were written there, they could hardly ever prove the Charge of Writing; for the Libeller was uſually alone when he wrote the Libel.

The Court demanding of How, If Tutchin wrote any of his Obſervators at his Houſe, in Gracechurch-Street? How anſwered, None that he knew of.

Tutchin's Defence by his Counſel

Then Mr. Montague, the Defendant's Counſel, made his Obſervations on the Evidence, and ſaid,

I can hardly ſay I am of Counſel for Mr. Tutchin, becauſe I have never ſeen him, but upon recording his Appearance in open Court; and he has not thought fit to ſend us any Inſtructions till this Morning: But, I ſuppoſe, this Remiſsneſs in his Temper proceeds from his Innocency of the Accuſation againſt him; and he has a Mind to let the World ſee how eaſy it is to make his Defence, ſince he has pitched upon me for his Advocate, and given me ſo little Time to prepare myſelf for it. But, as ſhort Notice as I have had of this Information againſt him, thus much I will beg leave to ſay of it in general; That it does by no Means come up to what the Gentemen on the other Side call it, A Charge of Writing and Publiſhing a falſe and ſcandalous Libel. My Lord Coke has given us a Definition, or rather a Deſcription of a Libel: Says he, Famoſus Libellus, ſeu in famatoria ſcriptura, is made either againſt a private Man, or a Magiſtrate. If it be a private Man it does deſerve to be puniſhed; becauſe it is likely to incite all the Family or Kindred of ſuch a Perſon to revenge the Injury, which tends to the Breach of the public Peace. If it be againſt a publick Perſon, as a Magiſtrate, it is a greater Offence; becauſe it concerns not only the Breach of the Peace, but it is a Scandal to the Government: And it matters not whether ſuch private Man, or Magiſtrate, be dead or alive at the making of ſuch Libel, becauſe the Friends and Relations of ſuch Perſons are incited thereby to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom. By all which Sayings of my Lord Coke, I do humbly ſuppoſe, that there can be no Libel, where no Perſon certain is reflected upon, or ſcandalized. A Libel that points at no body in particular, is like a Shot at Random, that ſeldom does any Miſchief: And therefore I do take it, with great Submiſſion, that in this Caſe Mr. Attorney ſhould have ſhewed us what Perſon (either publick or private) theſe Obſervators have aſperſed. My Lord Coke, in another Place, does liken Libelling to Poiſon, which ſecretly deſtroys a Man's Reputation, as the other does his Life: But certainly it would be thought a ſtrange Sort of Indictment, to charge a Man with being guilty of Murder, and not mention ſome one in particular, that has loſt his Life through the Defendant's Means or Procurement. Now, pray my Lord, how much does this Information differ from ſuch an Indictment? Here it is ſaid, that the Defendant has wrote and publiſhed a falſe and ſcandalous Libel, of and concerning this Kingdom of England, and the Officers and Miniſters of the Queen; but a National Reflection, that equally concerns every individual Perſon in the Kingdom with the Reflector himſelf, cannot excite and ſtir up the People to quarrel one with the other: And to tell me the Miniſters and Officers of the Queen are particularly concerned, does but give me Occaſion to ask, what Officers and Miniſters Mr. Attorney is taking care of? For I do not find any Miniſter of State, or other great Officer, ſo much as mentioned throughout this Record. A Bailiff or Conſtable is one of the Queen's Officers; and yet very few will think a Man ought to be puniſhed for Scandal, that ſhall ſay of ſuch Officers and Miniſters, they commit frequent Miſdemeanors, and are of mercenary Principles. Would it not have been eaſy for Mr. Attorney to have aſſigned the Particulars, if he knows of any Body that has been defamed by theſe Obſervators? But ſince the Information ſets forth no Particulars, I hope the Jury will take it for granted, that nothing in theſe Papers can be affixed to any Man's Door; but whatever has been writ is ſpent in the Air; and I hope this Accuſation will vaniſh there likewiſe.

Defen-

1704. 3 Annæ.

In the next Place, my Lord, I would beg leave to take Notice of the particular Papers, which have been ſeverally read in Evidence. And the firſt that has been produced, is one of the printed Obſervators, agreed on all Hands to have been publiſhed ſo long ago as the 30th of May, which was in the firſt Year of Her preſent Majeſty's Reign: And as to this, the Charge is, That the Defendant has written, compoſed, and publiſhed it; but how many of theſe three Particulars have been made out, muſt be obſerved: And as to the writing of it, Mr. How has ſworn, that there was an Agreement made betwixt him and the Defendant, (but where he cannot ſay) that Mr. Tutchin ſhould write a Paper, ſometimes once, ſometimes twice a Week, of the Publick Tranſactions; and ſuch a Paper has been writ by Mr. Tutchin; but where this Paper was wrote by Mr. Tutchin, or delivered, Mr. How cannot ſwear. However, ſo far he goes, that from theſe Papers of Mr. Tutchin he has printed, at his Houſe in London, theſe Papers that are now produced: But on this Evidence I muſt, with your Lordſhip's Favour, obſerve, That there are two different Sorts of Libels ſpoken of: The one is in writing, ſuppoſed to be written by Mr. Tutchin, but God knows where: The other in Print, owned by Mr. How, to be printed and publiſhed from the written Paper; which does not appear, and of which no true Copy has been proved. Now we hope, therefore, my Lord, that the Gentlemen of the Jury will rightly diſtinguiſh betwixt this firſt and ſecond Libel, and make a Difference betwixt the Act of Mr. How and that of Mr. Tutchin. The printed Papers here produced, are ſtiled The Obſervator; ſo were not the written ones, if Mr. How be to be believed: The printed Obſervators are ſold about for the ſole Benefit of Mr. How, and Mr. Tutchin receives only a ſmall Præmium for the writing once or twice in a Week. Mr. Tutchin only earns his weekly Subſiſtence, by making Obſervations in the Country; and it does not appear that he concerns himſelf further about the Printing or Publiſhing of them: If he gets his Money, Mr. How may do with his Papers as he thinks fit. So that I muſt humbly inſiſt upon it, that what Mr. How has done within this City of London, can never reach Mr. Tutchin into Surry or Eſſex. It has been ſaid, indeed, and I ſhall not contradict it, That the bare tranſcribing of a Libel will make a Man guilty of libelling: But for this Reaſon I do ſay, that Mr. How only has been guilty of making and publiſhing theſe printed Obſervators in London; and Mr. Tutchin, if he be guilty, muſt be convicted of the making and publiſhing that which can be ſworn to be his written Obſervations; eſpecially ſince it has plainly appeared, that the Papers written by Mr. Tutchin have been frequently altered by Mr. How, before they were printed off.

And if we conſider the Paſſages that have been produced, the Gentlemen of the Jury will perceive, a very little Alteration will make theſe Papers quite different from what they are: However, as they be, I hope there is no great Matter in any of them. The firſt Obſervator ſays, At the ſame Time, if we conſider the French King's Succeſs, in his Bribery and Corruption, we ought to lament the ſad State of our Country, which affords ſo many Inſtances of Treachery, &c. Now, pray who is We in this Caſe? Says Mr. Attorney, in his Innuendo, the People of England; but I hope an Innuendo ſhall not make a Man guilty of a Crime which otherwiſe cannot be affixed upon him. But ſuppoſing this ſame Paper were in Truth written with Relation to England; will any one ſay, that (no Times whatſoever) this Country has afforded any Inſtances of Treachery? And what Part of this Information does ſo much as fix the Time to which The Obſervator alludes? If all that is here ſet forth were written of a former Miniſtry, I do ſuppoſe there would not be ſo much Blame laid on the Author, as if he comes nearer the preſent Times: So the Time to which theſe Papers do refer, muſt certainly be material, and fit to be conſidered of, before any one can rightly judge of this Caſe; and for want of its being aſcertained and determined whither theſe Reflections may extend, I hope the Jury will not very much regard them.

The next Charge does ſet forth a wicked Aſſertion to have been made, de & concernen' poteſtat. Populi Anglicani. But we muſt be in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether the Paper that is produced does make out the Aſſertion to be juſt as it's laid: I take it with Submiſſion, that there is a manifeſt Variance betwixt the Charge and the Libel. The Charge makes him ſpeak of the Power of the People at large; when the Paper comes to be read, that ſpeaks of our Repreſentatives in Parliament: And ſurely there is a Difference, to ſay, The People at large can do ſo and ſo; and to ſay, Our Repreſentatives in Parliament can do it. For Inſtance; The making of Laws is not in the People diſperſed over England; but in their Repreſentatives in Parliament, in Concurrence with the Houſe of Lords, when the Royal Aſſent does likewiſe concur with them; therefore, I think, this Charge cannot affect us, upon Account of this Variance. The next Article then to be taken Notice of, is, that concerning the Navy.——

Mr. Solicitor interrupts him.

Here Mr. Solicitor obſerved, That Mr. Montague ſaid nothing of the Prerogative the People have; that their Repreſentatives were Judges of the Mal-Adminiſtration of their Governors; that they can call them in Queſtion for the ſame, and can appoint ſuch to wear the Crown who are fitteſt for Government; which they have often done: All this ſcandalous Matter he paſſed by.

Mr. Montague anſwered, I did ſo; and I did it on purpoſe, becauſe I looked upon it as a Matter not proper for you and I to talk of, as Advocates, in this Place: And I am apt to think, my Diſcretion, in paſſing it by, will be more eaſily juſtified than theirs that ſhall bring ſuch Points as theſe upon the Stage, to be talked on before this Aſſembly. I muſt declare, for my own Part, that I think the Rights of Princes, and the Power of the People, too high Topicks for me to meddle with; let others do as they think beſt. I ſhall paſs over to the next Article, concerning the Navy: Take one Time with another, the Miſmanagements of the Navy have been a greater Tax on the Merchants, than the Duties raiſed by Parliament: Now how does this relate only to the Navy Royal; it is no where ſaid, the Miſmanagement of the King's Navy, or the Queen's Navy; and the Word Navy does, in my poor Underſtanding, ſignify no more than a Number of Ships got together; and therefore, I do humbly conceive, there may be a Navy of Merchant Ships, as well as a Navy of Men of War; 'tis altogether uncertain what Navy the Author does allude to.

Here the Chief Juſtice obſerving, That by the Navy muſt be meant the Royal Navy; Mr. Montague anſwered, If it muſt, yet no body can ſay we never had any Miſmanagements in the Royal Navy; and whenever that has happened, the Merchants of England in all Probability have ſuffered by it.

Mr. Attorney replied, Such Diſcourſe was not to be allowed; and Mr. Solicitor added, When a Man complains of the Miſmanagement of the Government; and afterwards ſays, the People have a Power, inherent in them, to call their Governors to Account: What is this? Does it want an Expoſition, thus to poſſeſs the People with an Opinion of the Power they have, to call the King or Queen to an Account? What do ſuch Things tend to, but to raiſe in the People an Indignation againſt the Government?

Then Mr. Montague went on, and ſaid, The Thing I was inſiſting upon, was, that whatever is here ſet forth, is not brought within any Compaſs of Time, and there is no particular Reflection upon any Perſon whatever: Though Mention is made of divers Miſmanagements, and of ſeveral Miſcarriages; yet all thoſe Things may be ſaid of other Times long ſince: And, therefore, ſince this Exception goes to all the reſt of the Charges in the Information, I ſhall paſs by the other Particulars; and thereupon concluded; That they had done nothing as to the Printing of this Paper; that was done by How; they had nothing to do with it. The Chief Juſtice anſwered, It appeared that Tutchin delivered them to How, in London, to be printed; and How agreed to give him half a Guinea a Paper at firſt, and afterwards twenty Shillings; and this muſt be with a Deſign to have them printed. Mr. Montague replied, Tutchin did not care what How did with the Papers; he was only to have ſo much Money for them.

Then Mr. Attorney made his Obſervations on the Evidence for the Queen, and ſaid,

Mr. Attorney's Reply to this Defence.

My Lord, They are ſetting up a Doctrine that will make Libelling ſafe, ſo that no Man can ever be puniſhed for it. We have charged the Defendant with writing, compoſing, and publiſhing a Libel; we have proved the Agreement made with the Printer, be it in London, or out of London, is not very material. Now, if there be an Agreement made out of London for printing and publiſhing a Libel, wherever the Libel is printed and publiſhed, he is guilty; for whatever is done by his Agreement, he is guilty of it. As to the next Thing, I am much concerned to hear them ſay, that which I never before heard urged in any Court, That a Libel is not a Libel, unleſs they aſſign ſome particular Perſon: But I look upon it as the higheſt kind of Libels to reflect on publick Officers in general; on the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in general. I believe every one knows a Libel is a Libel, though particular Perſons are not named, if it reflect on Officers in general, as Miniſters of State, or Judges, or the like. Mr Montague would have it, that Reflections on the Miniſters of the Crown is not a Reflection on the Queen; and he would have it, that we ſhould have averred who thoſe Miniſters are, that were meant in the Libels. As to the firſt, certainly they that reflect on the publick Adminiſtration of Juſtice by the Queen's Officers, do reflect on Her Majeſty, who places and continues them in their Offices. And to the ſecond Reflection, being in general on the Miniſtry, we ought not, nor could, aver who, in particular, he meant in theſe Libels: The whole Adminiſtration under the Queen is reflected on, in placing in Officers in general; in the Management of the Navy, and placing in the Officers thereof; and in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in the Courts of Juſtice; and what can be more ſcandalous? There needs no Averment to explain theſe; in themſelves they appear to be Libels; and I hope ſuch Diſcourſes as have been made on this Occaſion, for the Defendant, will not meet with any Countenance: But I am ſurprized to hear it juſtified here, by a Counſel, That the People have Power to call their Governors to Account.

Mr. Montague anſwering, He did not ſay ſo; Mr. Attorney replied, Certainly what you did ſay, (viz.) That you ſhewed more Diſcretion, in paſſing it by, than we did, in queſtioning the Defendant for it; and that we wanted Diſcretion, in bringing this Matter on the Stage; could have no other Meaning, but that the Matter was juſtifiable, but you would not in Prudence do it; which, I muſt ſay, is the greateſt Liberty I have known taken by a Counſel.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, He did not hear him ſay ſo: And Mr. Montague added, I did not ſay ſo; I ſaid it was more diſcreet to paſs it by, than to take Notice of it.

Mr. Attorney replied, I will always proſe-cute

1704. 3 Annæ.

cute any Man that ſhall aſſert ſuch Doctrine; I think it my Duty, in the Station I am, always to take Notice of ſuch Diſcourſes as theſe, which no Counſel ought to preſume to make.

The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt proceeded to direct the Jury; and ſaid, This is an Information that is preferred by the Queen's Attorney-General againſt Mr. Tutchin, for writing, compoſing, and publiſhing, or cauſing to be written, compoſed, and publiſhed, ſeveral Libels againſt the Queen and Her Government, being ſix in Number; and entitled The Obſervator: The firſt of which was publiſhed on the 30th of May, 1702. Wherein he is charged with defaming the Government; and ſaying, "That corrupt and ignorant Officers were employed, that were not fit for their Places.

In the ſecond, with ſaying, That "This is a "Prerogative of ſingular Advantage to the People "That their Repreſentatives are the Judges of the "Mal-Adminiſtration of their Governors: That "they can call them in Queſtion for the ſame; "and can appoint ſuch to wear the Crown who are "fitteſt for the Government; which they have "often done; and, indeed, which is the Privi-"lege of all free People, who are authorized by the "Laws of God and Nature, to chuſe their own "Governors".

This, ſays the Chief Juſtice, is to poſſeſs the People, that they may, at their Will and Pleaſure, when they take a Fancy to it, diſſeiſe the Queen, and ſet up what Government they pleaſe. Now, it is moſt plain, that a Contract was made between Mr. Tutchin and Mr. How, for Mr. Tutchin to write and frame, and Mr. How to print theſe Papers: And no body can imagine, that Mr. How, the Printer, would give him Money for the written Copy, unleſs it was to be printed: Beſides, Mr. Tutchin afterwards owned theſe two, and divers others; ordered him to bind them up in a Volume, and wrote a Preface to them, and ſet his Name to it: So that here is full Proof that theſe were compoſed by Mr. Tutchin, in order to be printed; and they were printed afterwards, and he received Money for them.

The Chief Juſtice obſerved further, That the other four Obſervators in the Information, were of the ſame Nature as theſe two; and then goes on, and ſays, You have heard the Evidence, and are to conſider, whether you are ſatisfied Mr. Tutchin is guilty of writing, compoſing, or publiſhing theſe Libels: They ſay, they are innocent Papers, and no Libels; and they ſay, nothing is a Libel, but what reflects upon ſome particular Perſon: But this is a very ſtrange Doctrine, to ſay, it is not a Libel reflecting on the Government, endeavouring to poſſeſs the People, that the Government is mal-adminiſtered, by corrupt Perſons, that are employed in ſuch and ſuch Stations, either in the Navy or Army.

To ſay, that corrupt Officers are appointed to adminiſter Affairs, is certainly a Reflection on the Government. If Men ſhould not be called to Account, for poſſeſſing the People with an ill Opinion of the Government, no Government can ſubſiſt; for it is very neceſſary for every Government, that the People ſhould have a good Opinion of it: And nothing can be worſe to any Government, than to endeavour to procure Animoſities, as to the Management of it: This has been always looked upon as a Crime; and no Government can be ſafe without it be puniſhed.

Now, you are to conſider, whether theſe Paſſages in theſe Obſervators, do not tend to beget an ill Opinion of the Adminiſtration of the Government? To tell us, That thoſe that are employed, know nothing of the Matter, and thoſe that do know, are not employed: Men are not adapted to Offices, but Offices to Men, out of a particular Regard to their Intereſt, and not to their Fitneſs for the Places: This is the Purport of theſe Papers.

Now they, on his Behalf, inſiſt on theſe Things: Firſt, They ſay, You do not prove any Crime againſt him in London: Indeed, it is not proved, that he wrote them in London; but the Queſtion is, if there be not Proof of the compoſing and Publication in London? There is Proof that they were ſent to Mr. How in Order to print them in London. Now whether he received them in London, or no, (but ſuppoſe out of London) yet, if he received them to print them in London, that is a Publication in London. If they ſcruple that Matter, it ſhall be ſpecially found. If they were delivered to be printed in London, I muſt leave it to your Conſideration, whether you will not find him guilty of publiſhing them in London. They were ſome of them printed in Fenchurch-Street, and others in Gracechurch-Street: He knew where the Printer lived, the Contract was made, and he was paid for them. Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you: If you are ſatisfied that he is guilty of compoſing and publiſhing theſe Papers at London, you are to find him guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew; and after a quarter of an Hour's Receſs, brought the Defendant in GUILTY of compoſing and publiſhing, but not of writing the Libel. Tutchin convicted.

Mr. Tutchin appearing in Court on the 13th of November, Mr. Attorney ſaid, Mr. Tutchin had given him Notice, that he would bring an Appeal in Arreſt of Judgment; and, indeed, he had given publick Notice of it, for it was put into the News-Papers.

Mr. Montague, the Defendant's Counſel, then moved in Arreſt of Judgment: For that the Venire facias was awarded the laſt Trinity-Term, returnable, Die Lunæ prox' poſt tres ſeptimanas ſancti Michaelis; which was October the 23d, the firſt Day of Michaelmas-Term; and the Diſtringas, which ſhould have iſſued the ſame Day, was ſued out the 24th of October, being the Day after the Return of the Venire; ſo that there was a Diſcontinuance of the Proceſs. His Counſel move in Arreſt of Judgment, and aſſign a fatal Error in the Pleadings.

The Queen's Counſel ſaid, They believed this had been done on Purpoſe, and admitted it was an Error; but held, it was amendable; about which the Court were divided. Mr. Juſtice Gould and Mr. Juſtice Powis were of Opinion, it was amendable; but the Chief Juſtice, and Mr. Juſtice Powel, held, it could not be amended: Whereupon Mr. Attorney ſaid, The Court being divided, he knew no Rule to ſtop Judgment: But Mr. Juſtice Powis afterwards coming over to the Chief Juſtice which the Court held could not be amended. The Trial quaſhed.

Tutchin escapes.

tice and Mr. Juſtice Powel, it was agreed there muſt be a new Trial, and the former Trial was quaſhed: But I do not find the Suit was ever revived, and Tutchin continued to write his Obſervators, with uncommon Impudence, ſeveral Years afterwards.

Remarks on Tutchin's Trial.

Never did ſeditious Libeller meet with better Fortune, or rather better Supporters, than Mr. Tutchin, who had arraigned the Adminiſtration of the Government, for Months and Years together, in a Daily Paper, and yet never was puniſhed for it: Nay, he did not only tell the People, that there were Miſmanagements, but that they had a Right to call their Governors to Account for them; to diſplace the Miniſters, and even dethrone their Prince, and transfer their Allegiance to whom they pleaſed, when they did not approve the Adminiſtration: For this he had been reproved by the Parliament, and by the Secretaries of State, and admoniſhed to have a Care how he publiſhed ſuch treaſonable Papers: But ſtill he went on, and it was near two Years before he was proſecuted at all for them, and then only charged with a Miſdemeanor, though he was certainly guilty of Treaſon, if conſpiring the Deſtruction of his Sovereign, and inciting the People to depoſe Her, and ſet up another if ſhe did not alter her Miniſtry, was Treaſon. This was the perpetual Driſt of his Papers; which he durſt not have publiſhed, if he had not been, in a Manner, aſſured of Indemnity, from thoſe who put him upon writing them, furniſhed him with Materials, and, probably, were the real Authors of many of them.

For it was about this Time, that the Lords Marlborough and Godolphin thought fit to forſake their old Friends, and go over to the Whigs: And ſuch was their Influence at Court, that they procured moſt of thoſe that were well affected to the Church and the Monarchy, to be diſplaced, in the Fleet, the Army, and the Civil Government; and introduced ſcarce any in their Room, but thoſe that had ſhewed their Diſſaffection to the Conſtitution, both in Church and State; or thoſe who were ready to follow the Example their Leaders ſet them, and betray both: For which Conduct, I could never aſſign any other Cauſe, than the Ambition and Avarice of ſome Noble Peers.

The Whigs had expreſſed ſuch an Averſion to the Perſon, as well as the Succeſſion of Queen Anne, in the laſt Reign, that they were generally laid aſide when ſhe came to the Throne; and, I am confident, deſpaired of ever being imployed again, till they ſhould merit the Queen's Favour by their Submiſſion: But a certain Triumvirate of Lords, propoſing to engroſs the Adminiſtration to themſelves, during this Reign; and apprehending the Tories would never go their Lengths, to the Surprize of the Malcontents themſelves, offered to bring them into Play again, on Condition they would implicitly obey their Dictates; which was too advantageous an Offer not to be readily embraced. 1704. 3 Annæ.

Two great Difficulties however ſeemed to ſtand in their Way, and oppoſe their Views; (viz). The Queen's Affection for the Church, and the general Inclinations of the People to the preſent Adminiſtration: But both theſe Difficulties they found Means to ſurmount, or obviate: For the Lords above-mentioned, having the Queen's Ear entirely at this Time, and unſuſpected by her of any Deſigns in Favour of her Enemies, ſhe too eaſily reſigned herſelf to their Advice, conſented to diſplace her beſt Friends, and put thoſe that hated both Her and the Conſtitution, into the moſt conſiderable Poſts: And having proceeded thus far, procured the Parliament to be diſſolved, and another choſen by the Influence of the Treaſury, and the Officers and Magiſtrates they had brought in to ſerve their Deſigns, in every Part of the Kingdom: The Nobility alſo being at mortal Enmity with the laſt Houſe of Commons, did not a little promote the Choice of another Set of Men: And thus, in the Reign of a Queen, the beſt affected to the Church, of any Prince that ever ſat upon the Throne, were the Friends of the Eſtabliſhment oppreſſed, and their Enemies put in a Capacity of riding over their Heads. Towards which Change, The Obſervator, Defoe, and a numerous Tribe of Libellers, the Tools of the Faction, did not a little contribute; and their Maſters, in Gratitude for the Service they had done, ſkreened them from the Puniſhment they deſerved.

For it is amazing, when The Obſervator had plainly threatened, that the People would depoſe her Majeſty; and told her in Print, That they had a Right to do it, if ſhe did not change Hands, that he ſhould eſcape unpuniſhed. As to that Flaw in the Pleadings, of a Diſcontinuance of Proceſs, which brought him off at his Trial; I verily believe, as the Attorney-General ſaid in Court, That it was done by the Direction of ſome of his Great Friends on Purpoſe. However, this could not have ſaved him long; the Proſecution would have been revived, and he would infallibly have been puniſhed, had not his Friends ſoon after come into Play, the Attorney-General, and all his Proſecutors been diſplaced, and he ſecured by the Countenance and Protection of the Miniſters he ſerved.

The

1705. 4 Annæ. Green's Trial.

The Trial of Captain THOMAS GREEN, and his Crew, for Piracy, before the Court of Admiralty, in Scotland, on the 5th of March, 1705. 4 Annæ.

1705 4 Annæ.

The Indictment.

THERE were two Indictments preferred against them, the one against the Captain, by the Name of Captain Thomas Green, Commander of the Ship called The Worceſter, Captain John Madder chief Mate of the ſaid Ship, John Reynolds ſecond Mate, Thomas Linſteed Aſſiſtant to the Super-cargoe, James Burn, Boatſwain, James Sympſon Gunner, Andrew Robertſon Gunner's Mate, and John Brucklie and George Kitchen Seamen: The other Indictment was preferred againſt Henry Keigle Carpenter of the ſaid Ship, and Samuel Urline his Mate, George Haines Steward, Daniel Stringman Cook, Samuel Wilcocks Surgeon's Mate, and George Glen, Henry Barnes, Alexander Taylor, and John Bannantine, Seamen, (Foremaſt-Men) of the ſaid Ship The Worceſter, then lying in the Harbour of Bruntiſland.

Theſe Indictments were of the ſame Tenour; ſetting forth, That notwithſtanding, by the Law of God, and of this, and all other well-governed Nations, the Crimes of Piracy, Robbery, and Murder, were prohibited under the higheſt Pains; the ſame Captain Green and his Crew, had, nevertheleſs, dared to commit the ſame, in the following Manner, (viz). That having ſailed in the ſaid Ship from England to the Eaſt-Indies, under Pretence of Merchandizing; they did, in the Month of February, March, April, or May, in the Year 1703, encounter or meet with a Ship upon the Coaſt of Malabar, in the Eaſt-Indies, the ſaid Ship carrying a red Flag, and having Engliſh or Scotchmen on Board; and after having had ſome Diſcourſe with them, did, without any lawful Warrant, or juſt Cauſe, attack the ſaid Ship, firſt by their Sloop, which they had manned and furniſhed with Guns and other Arms, for that Purpoſe; and after they had engaged her ſome Time by their Sloop, the Ship The Worceſter boarded her; and having overcome the ſaid Ship, ſeized her Men, killed them, and threw them over-Board; and having plundered her afterwards, made Sale of the Ship and Goods: For which the Priſoners ought to be puniſhed with the Pains of Death, and Confiſcation of Moveables.

The Evidence of Antonio Ferdinando.

The Witneſſes for the Crown being called, Antonio Ferdinando, a Black, the Cook's Mate of the Ship The Worceſter, was ſworn, and teſtified, That he entered himſelf at Callicoiloan, on the Coaſt of Malabar, in the Service of Mr. Loveday, the Purſer of the Ship The Worceſter, about two Years and a half ſince, and was put on Board the Sloop belonging to The Worceſter: That about a Month after he came on Board, the ſaid Sloop and the Ship The Worceſter attacked another Ship, ſailed by white Men, carrying Engliſh Colours, and the Men on Board her ſpeaking Engliſh: That before the Fight, Captain Green, Mr. Loveday, and Coge Commodo an Indian Merchant, went on Board the ſaid Stranger's Ship, and ſtaid there the Space of a Glaſs, and then returned on Board The Worceſter: Immediately after which, the ſaid Sloop was manned with about twenty Men; among whom were Captain Green, Mr. Loveday, the Super-cargoe, the Gunner, and the Carpenter, and they took with them four great Guns and two Patereroes on Board the ſaid Sloop: That afterwards, Captain Madder, Chief Mate of The Worceſter, came on Board the Sloop, and they engaged the Stranger Ship in a running Fight two Days, and the third Day they boarded her with the Sloop, killed the Men in her with their Hatchets, and threw them over-Board: That during the Engagement between the Sloop and the ſaid Stranger Ship, the Ship The Worceſter came up, and fired at the Stranger Ship, but did not board her: That there were ten or twelve Men on Board the Ship that was taken, and but few Goods; and what Goods were found in her were carried on Board The Worceſter: That he (the Witneſs) was wounded in the Arm in the Fight, (he ſhewed the Scar in Court); and the Captain threatened to kill him, if ever he ſpoke of the Engagement, either to white or black Men: Adding, that the upper Coat he wore at the Trial, was taken on Board the ſaid Stranger Ship, and the ſaid Ship was carried into Callicoiloan, and ſold to Coge Commodo, who bought her for his Maſter, one of the Malabar Kings; and he thought the ſaid Ship might carry about twenty Guns.

That eight of the Priſoners at the Bar; viz. Haines, Bannantine, Bruckley, Wilcocks, Burn, Robinſon, Glen, and Taylor, were on Board The Worceſter during the Engagement, and Captain Green, Madder, Simpſon, Keigle, Kitchen, Linſteed, and the Witneſs, were on Board the Sloop; and he thought Reynolds was then on Shore at Callicoiloan, the Engagement being between Tillicherry and Callecut. This Witneſs declared he was born of Chriſtian Parents, and was a Chriſtian himſelf.

May the Surgeon's Evidence.

Charles May, Surgeon of the ſaid Ship The Worceſter, teſtified, That they ſailed from England, and arrived on the Coaſt of Malabar in the Eaſt-Indies, in January, 1703, having thirty-five or thirty-ſix Seamen on Board: And that he was ſet on Shore at the Ibeck (or Port) of Callicoiloan; from whence he went up to that Town, being ſome Miles diſtant from the Port: That about a Fortnight after he had been at Callicoiloan, he heard firing of Guns as at Sea: That meeting the ſame Day with Coge Commodo the Ship's Merchant, and Franciſco de Olivera, the Interpreter of The Worceſter, who were juſt come from the Ibeck (or Port); and asking, What that ſhooting meant? They anſwered, The Worceſter had an Engagement with another Ship: And that the Witneſs walking on the Shore next Morning, ſaw The Worceſter riding in her Birth, (or Station) where ſhe uſed to lie, and another Veſſel riding at her Stern, about four Miles diſtant from the Shore.

That ſeeing the Long-Boat of The Worceſter coming on Shore the ſame Morning, he aſked the Men the Reaſon of it, (for it was not uſual for Ship's Boats to come over the Bar, becauſe of the Surf, or great ſwelling Sea). They anſwered, Captain Madder ſent them for a Pinguetta (or Country-Boat) of freſh Water; for they had ſtaved, and ſpilt all their Water on Board, and there had been Buſking all Night: By which he underſtood, they had been hard at Work; ſuppoſing the Ship had been driven from her Anchor, and they had been getting it up again: They alſo told him, they had brought a Ship in with them; but ſaid nothing of a Fight. That the Witneſs going on Board for Medicines for the ſick Men he had on Shore, four or five Days afterwards, and ſeeing the Deck encumbered with Cheſts and Goods, he demanded of Captain Madder, What they had got there? Whereupon Madder curſed him, and bid him mind his Plaiſter-Box: That he afterwards underſtood, that the Ship which rode at the Stern of The Worceſter, was ſold to Coge Commodo, the Ship's Merchant at Keilon River, and Part of The Worceſter's Crew carried her thither, and left her here; and the Interpreter told him (the Witneſs) That Coge Commodo complained, he had bought the Ship too dear: That ſome Time after, Antonio Ferdinando, the laſt Witneſs, was ſent on Shore to the Deponent, being wounded in the Arm; and he found it to be a Fracture, and ſuppoſed it to be a Gun-ſhot: That Antonio told him, he had been ſet on Shore at Cochin, and a Dutch Surgeon ſet his Arm there: That he (the Witneſs) afterwards coming on Board The Worceſter, found two more of the Men wounded; and demanding, How they came by their Wounds? Madder bid him aſk no Queſtions, and would not ſuffer the Men to anſwer any; and ordered this Witneſs to go on Shore again immediately, and he never heard any of the Ship's Crew mention the taking of a Ship afterwards: That The Worceſter ſpringing a Leak on the Coaſt of Malabar, they carried her to Bengal to refit, though it was five or ſix Weeks Sail diſtant from thence; and they might have had her refitted at ſeveral Ports on the Coaſt of Malabar: That during theſe Tranſactions, Mr. Linſteed and Mr. Hammond were left on Shore at Keilon, about ſeven Leagues from Callicoiloan, to take Care of ſome of their Cargoe.

Antonio Franciſco's Evidence.

Antonio Franciſco, Captain Green's Black, being ſworn, teſtified, That his Miſtreſs he ſerved in Pegu cauſed him to be baptized, and he profeſſed himſelf a Chriſtian: That he wat taken into the Captain's Service at Delagoa in the Eaſt-Indies; and while they were upon the Coaſt of Malabar, he was chained down to the Deck two Months, in the Forecaſtle of the ſaid Ship, from whence ſix Guns were fired; but he heard no firing from any other Ship: That two Days after, he ſaw ſome Goods brought on Board The Worceſter; and asking Ferdinando, the other Black, about them, he ſaid, they were brought from on Board a Ship they had taken; and there were ten Men killed on Board the ſaid Ship that was taken; and ſhewed this Witneſs a Wound he received while he was in the Engagement on Board the Sloop; but charged the Witneſs not to mention the Fight to any Man: But that he (the Witneſs) did not ſee any other Men wounded beſides Ferdinando.

1705. 4 Annæ.

Wilkie's Evidence.

James Wilkie a Taylor in Edinburgh, teſtified, That going to Bruntiſland, after Captain Green's Ship arrived there, to enquire after his Brother Andrew Wilkie, who went with Captain Drummond to the Eaſt-Indies, he fell into the Company of George Haines, one of the Priſoners, at Mrs. Seaton's Houſe; whereupon he (the Witneſs) aſked him, If he had not ſeen Captain Drummond in that Voyage? And Haines anſwered him in a Paſſion, Damn you, what have I to do with Captain Drummond? But after they had drank together ſome Time, asking Haines again, Whether he had not heard of a Scotch Ship in his Paſſage to the Indies? Haines replied, That being upon the Coaſt of Malabar, where they took in the Black that was then with him, a Dutch Ship informed them, that one Captain Drummond, who commanded a Scotch Ship, was turned Pirate; whereupon they manned their Sloop, and made themſelves ready in caſe they ſhould be attacked; but they did not ſee the ſaid Scotch Ship: That Haines alſo acknowledged, when the Ship was ſeized in Leith Road, he had that in his Cuſtody, which he would not have had fallen into the Seizer's Hands for twice the Value of the Ship; and that he threw it over-board, ſaying, Let them ſeek it now at the Bottom of the Sea: He added, there was ſtill ſomething in the Ship that would never be found by the Seizers, unleſs they pulled her Board from Board; and he knew very well where it lay: That the Witneſs deſiring Mrs. Seaton to enquire further into this Matter, ſhe ſaid, Her Daughter was the propereſt Perſon, for ſhe was Haines's Sweetheart: And that her Daughter told them next Morning, Haines ſaid, he found they had a Deſign to pump him; but they ſhould never be the wiſer for him.

Mackenzie's Evidence.

Kenneth Mackenzie, being ſworn, teſtified, That he was in Company with Wilkie the former Witneſs, and Haines, at Mrs. Seaton's in Bruntiſland; and heard Wilkie ask Haines about Captain Drummond's Ship; at which Haines fell in a Paſſion: And that the ſame Night he heard Mrs. Wilkie intreat the Widow Seaton to get an Account from ſome of Captain Green's Crew of her Son, who went Doctor on Board Captain Drummond's Ship: And the next Morning, he heard Ann Seaton, her Daughter, ſay, That Haines told her, they had a Mind to pump him; but what he had ſaid, he had ſaid: And that ſhe aſking him, why he fell in a Paſſion on the mentioning Captain Drummond? He anſwered, He knew more of Captain Drummond than he would tell.

Wood's Evidence.

William Wood teſtified, That being in Company with one Henderſon, and the Priſoner Haines, at Bruntiſland, and Haines appearing melancholly, Henderſon demanded the Reaſon of it; and Haines anſwered, It is a Wonder, ſince we did not ſink at Sea, that God does not make the Ground open and ſwallow us up, now we are come on Shore, for the Wickedneſs that has been committed during the laſt Voyage, on Board that old Bitch Beſs, (pointing to the Ship Worceſter); and this Witneſs telling Haines, that Captain Madder's Uncle was boiled in Oil, for attempt-attempting to burn the Dutch Ships at Amſterdam; Haines replied, If what Madder had done the laſt Voyage were as well known, he deſerved as much as his Uncle had met with.

1705. 4 Annæ.

This Teſtimony of Wood was confirmed by Henderſon, who was preſent during that Converſation.

Seaton's Evidence.

Anne Seaton, the Daughter, alſo teſtified, That ſhe heard Haines uſe thoſe Expreſſions, It is a Wonder, ſince we did not ſink at Sea, that God does not make the Ground open and ſwallow us up, &c. And that Haines ſaid, he knew more of Captain Drummond, than he would reveal at that Time: That he told her alſo, he had that on Board, when the Ship was ſeiz'd in Leith Road, that he would not have had fallen into the Seizers' Hands for twice the Value of the Ship; and that he threw it over-board.

Brown's Evidence.

John Brown, Maſter of a Ship, teſtified, That he went on Board the Ship Worceſter by an Order of Council, and found the Hatches faſt ſealed; that he opened them, and ſaw the Goods on the Larboard Side were much damaged, and few of the packed Goods were marked or numbered, as was cuſtomary. Archibald Hodge, another Maſter of a Ship, who ſaw the Goods unloaded, teſtified the ſame.

Glen's Evidence.

John Glen, Goldſmith, teſtified, That being on Board The Worceſter, after ſhe came into Leith Road, Captain Madder took a Seal out of his Pocket, and asked him What he thought of the Scots African and India Companies Arms? and giving the Witneſs the Seal into his Hands, he found in it the St. Andrew's Croſs, a Camel, with a Caſtle on its Back, and a Ship, with the riſing Sun above the Helmet, and two wild Men as Supporters: That the Seal was about the Bigneſs of an Engliſh half-Crown, and the Handle of Lignum Vitæ; but that the Seal produced in Court was not the ſame which Captain Madder ſhewed him.

Papers found on Board.

The following Extracts of Books and Papers, found on Board the Ship Worceſter, were alſo made uſe of as Evidence, viz.

The Inſtructions or Orders given by the Freighters of The Worceſter, to Mr. Robert Callant, Supercargo, in which were theſe Words: We would have you write to us by all Opportunities, eſpecially from Sinde, by any Ships bound from thence to Perſia; and for the greater Secrecy, (eſpecially of the Letter to be ſent to Mauritius for us), here-under is an Alphabet for you to write to us by: Your Subſcription muſt be in common Engliſh, directing all ſuch Letters to Captain Thomas Bowrey, in Well-cloſe-Square, London.

(Note, At this Place the whole Alphabet is inſerted diſtinctly, and above each Letter a different Character is ſet down, to be uſed in Place of the Letters of the Alphabet).

When your Cargo for England is provided, or near compleated, then we would have you ſell the Sloop for what you can get, and inveſt the Produce in Goods for England.

And lower, among the ſame Orders, in another Article, are theſe Words.

You muſt engage the Maſter of the Sloop not to let any Letter from himſelf, or any other, be ſent to England, but only our Letter, in which you may inſert the Names of any dead: And for the Care and Secrecy of thoſe who go in the Sloop, in caſe no Letter or News comes to England, but our Letter concerning our Buſineſs, then we will, on the Return of the Ship, give the Maſter and Crew one Month's Pay gratis, and they ſhall alſo have their Shares of the Benefit promiſed the Ship's Company for the Whale Fiſhing.

By a Letter, dated London, the 3d of February, 170$\frac{1}{2}$, from Captain T. B-----y, to Mr. Callant, the ſaid Captain adviſes him in theſe Words:

For the greater Security of our Affairs, when you write by the Alphabet in your Inſtructions, I would have you carry the laſt Letter of each Word, to be in the Room of the firſt Letter to the next Word; as for Example:

Capt. Tho. Bowrey, Sir, we are all well.

Captai nthoma sbowre, yſi, rwe ear eal lwell.

Make no Title (as is uſual) to begin your Letter, nor no Date, nor Compliment, nor Name at laſt; but let all be comprehended in the Lines of your Letter, ſo as to make no Diſtinction; and make but one Paragraph of all your Letter, and if any Men be dead, ſet their Names immediately after your own Name, ſubſcribed to the Letter, all in Characters before directed; and pleaſe to keep this as Directions therein.

By another Letter from the ſaid Captain T. B-----y to the ſaid Mr. Callant, dated London, the 16th of February, 170$\frac{1}{2}$, he adds, concerning the aforeſaid Cypher, in theſe Words:

On further Conſideration, I think I have commited an Error in my Letter to you Yeſterday, it being wrote in it as, (viz.)

Captai nthoma sbowre yſi rwe ear eal lwell.

That is, Captain Thomas Bowrey, Sir, we are all well.

Now, I doubt the naming any Name in the Beginning, or making any Compliment there, may be a Means to find the Key of the Alphabet; therefore pray ſtrike out of the Letter I ſent you yeſterday, as above done, and begin directly with your Buſineſs, following the Directions given you. And whereas you are ordered to direct your ſaid Letter to me, I would not have you mention my Name in the Superſcription, but direct the ſaid Letter to Mr. Nicholas Pope, Scrivener, in Nicholas-Lane, London, to pay five Pounds to the Bearer, as in your Inſtructions.

Part of the Priſoners' Defence.

The Priſoners' Counſel made ſome Objections to the Form of the Indictment, which were over-ruled by the Court; they alſo made ſeveral Objections to the Evidence; as, that the two Blacks, that were produced as Evidence againſt them, were not Chriſtians, and that they were neither of them worth ten Pounds Scots. They alſo inſiſted, that Anne Seaton, being a Woman, was not a legal Witneſs.

Replied to.

To which the Counſel for the Queen anſwered, That though, by the Laws of Scotland, one who was not worth ten Pounds could not be a Witneſs in ſome Caſes, by the Laws of that Kingdom, yet in Crimes ſo atrocious and occult, and committed againſt the Law of Nations, this Rule did not hold: And, as to the Blacks not being Chriſtians, this was a Miſtake, for they profeſſed themſelves ſuch; and they inſiſted insisted also, that a Woman was a good Witness in Crimes of this Nature.

Sir David Dalrymple, the Queen's Solicitor, after the Evidence was concluded, made his Observations upon it, and afterwards the Prisoners' Counsel did the same; but the Scots have thought fit to suppress the Speeches made by the Prisoners' Counsel, and given us only Sir David Dalrymple's: In which Sir David, having shewn the Nature of the Crime, and the aggravating Circumstances this Case was attended with, observed, That the first Discovery of this Matter came from the Prisoners themselves, from Words dropped in Passion, or expressed under the Weight of Guilt, concerning the Villanies that had been perpetrated in this Voyage: That the Evidence of the Blacks was fortified by the Journals of the Ship Worcester, which gave an Account of the Sloops being furnished with Arms, in the Month of February, as the Indictment charged: That it appeared also, from the Journals, that The Worcester sprung a Leak upon the Coast of Malabar; and although they might have refitted her at Goa or Surat on that Coast, they chose rather to make a dangerous Voyage of seven or eight hundred Leagues, in a leaky Vessel, than refit her on the Malabar Coast, where they were apprehensive of a Discovery. That the Cypher which was given the Captain to write by to his Employers, and that extraordinary Secrecy enjoined (as appeared from the Papers found on Board), shewed, that from the Beginning some ill Design was intended; fair Trading required no such extraordinary Cautions.

Mr. Solicitor's Observations on the Evidence.

Another Inducement to believe the Ship Worcester was sent out upon an ill Design, was, that being of two hundred Tons Burthen, and manned by thirty six Men, her whole Cargo, outward bound, did not amount to the Value of a thousand Pounds; and the greatest Part of this Cargo consisted in Arms: That it seemed exceeding strange, a Voyage so hazardous and expensive, should be undertaken with so small a Stock, unless something else besides Trading was intended; concluding, upon the whole, that in so dark a Crime, committed in a Place so distant and solitary, a more convincing Proof could not be expected.

Minutes of the Observations made by the Prisoners' Counsel.

There are some short Notes added to this Trial, containing Minutes of what the Prisoners' Counsel insisted on; as, that the Witnesses against them did not agree in their Evidence; that the Blacks were evidently mistaken in the Times they had sworn to; and that it was highly improbable they should have acted the Part of Pirates, since they sent their Owners an Account of their Voyage from Time to Time, and were not afraid to be seen in any Port in Europe, and particularly in Scotland, the Nation they were supposed to have wronged: That Captain Green and his People were Men of fair Characters, and under no Necessity of turning Pirates; nor did they endeavour to fly or conceal themselves, as they would have done, if they had been conscious of any Guilt.

After the Counsel had concluded, the Jury were ordered to withdraw, and bring in their Verdict on the 16th of March, to which Day the Court adjourned; and on the Sixteenth of March the Jury brought in the following Verdict, (viz.)

1705. 4 Annæ.

That they, by Plurality of Voices, (being fifteen in Number) find, that there is one clear Witness as to the Piracy, Robbery, and Murder; and that there are accumulative and concurring Presumptions proved for the Piracy and Robbery; but find that John Reynolds, second Mate of the Ship Worcester, was on Shore at the Time of the Action.

All but Reynolds convicted.

The Court adjourning afterwards to the 21st of March, then pronounced Sentence on the following Prisoners, (viz.) on Captain Thomas Green, John Madder, James Simpson, Henry Keigle, George Haines, George Glen, Alexander Taylor, Andrew Robertson, George Kitchen, James Burn, John Bruckley, Samuel Wilcocks, John Bannantine, and Thomas Linsteed:

Sentence passed.

That they should be taken to the Sands of Leith, within the Flood-Mark, and there hanged till they were dead, (the first Five on the 4th of April, the next Four on the 11th of April, and the remaining Five on the 18th of April); and that all their moveable Goods and Geer, and particularly the Ship Worcester, should be forfeited to Her Majesty, saving to all Persons, claiming a Right to the said Cargo, their respective Claims.

But John Reynolds was acquitted, and the Court recommended Thomas Linsteed, Assistant to the Supercargo, to the Queen's Mercy, he being on Shore at the Time the said Ship was taken.

Linsteed reprieved.

Captain Green and the rest of the Prisoners, 'tis said, were afterwards executed, in Pursuance of the Sentence, (except Linsteed): But I am not certain how many of them were executed.

The rest executed.

The Scotch, as a further Evidence of the Prisoners' Guilt, have given us the Confessions of some of them, under their Hands, after they were convicted, and particularly Linsteed's, (the Assistant-Supercargo), whom they recommended to the Queen's Mercy.——He deposed on the 16th of March, before Sir James Stuart, the Queen's Advocate, that he was sent to Callicoiloan, with Mr. Hammond, to dispose of some Goods, in the Beginning of the Year 1703, and that they remained at the said Town of Callicoiloan about three Months, during which Time some Fishermen came thither, and reported that The Worcester had an Engagement with another Ship; and sending thereupon to know the Truth of it, were answered by the Officers of The Worcester, that they should mind their own Business, and not concern themselves about it. That Coge Commodo, the Ship's Merchant, afterwards told them, he had bought, of some Pirates, a Ship of an hundred Tons, and twelve or thirteen Guns, being of the Country Building; but they understood afterwards, from the Dutch and Portuguese, that the Ship Coge Commodo had bought, was brought into Keilon, in the Night-time, by some of The Worcester's Crew: And that when they went on Board again, their Men would give them no Account of the Matter.

Some Confessions by the Prisoners after Conviction.

Linsteed's Confession.

George Haines also confessed, on the 27th of March, before Mr. James Graham, Judge of the Admiralty, That, when The Worcester lay in the Downs outward-bound, he received several Letters, intimating, that it was reported Haines's Confession.

in London their Ship was going out upon ſome ill Deſign, and that thereupon he attempted to get on Shore, and leave her, but was prevented: That when they came upon the Coaſt of Malabar, ſome of their Crew talked of their turning Pirates; and, before they were a Month on that Coaſt, they endeavoured to take a Country Boat, but ſhe got away.

That having built and manned the Sloop, and put Guns on Board her, ſhe left the Ship about eight Days; and on her Return, John Roberts appearing melancholly, and he (Haines) asking the Reaſon of it, Roberts confeſſed he was acceſſary to the cutting off ſeveral Men's Heads at Sacrifice Rock, between Tillicherry and Callicut. That afterwards The Worceſter and the Sloop ſailed together, and took a Ship of about ſeventy Tons, ſquare-ſterned, and painted in the Quarters red and yellow, which was of Indian Building, but had about twelve or fourteen Men on Board, all white, and generally ſickly; and he heard afterwards they were Britons, but he knew not what became of them, being kept between Decks: He doubts they were murdered, becauſe they could not be put on Shore on that Coaſt, there being ſo many Engliſh and Dutch Factories ſtanding near each other.

The next Day after the Ship was taken, ſhe was carried by ſome of the Crew to Callicoiloan, and ſold to Coge Commodo for 1500 Roupees, (two Shillings and Threepence each): That ſome Bales of China Root and four Cheſts of Copper were taken out of her, and ſold afterwards to a Bannian Merchant at Bengal. That he underſtood Coge Commodo was a great Aſſiſter of Pirates, and bought Goods of Kidd and Avery when they were upon that Coaſt. That the Deponent kept a Journal during the Voyage, which contained the Subſtance of this Confeſſion; but when The Worceſter was ſeized in Leith Road, he threw it over-board, leſt it ſhould fall into the Seizers' Hands.——That he ſhould have made this Confeſſion ſooner, but was always aſſured by Captain Green's Agents, That the Defence made for the Crew would certainly bring them off; and if they all agreed in one Story, and kept themſelves reſerved, there would be no Fear; for nothing could be proved that could affect them; and Wilcocks, the Surgeon's Mate, informed him that he ſaw a Letter from the Owners of The Worceſter in London, directed to Captain Green, which ſaid, That although the Crew were condemned in Scotland, they had Pardons ready to ſend down for them.

The next Day, viz. the 28th of March, 1705, the ſaid George Haines added to the above Confeſſion, That after the ſaid Ship was taken on the Malabar Coaſt, he ſaw the Men therein killed and murdered with Pole-Axes and Cutlaces, and their dead Bodies put into the ſaid Sloop, and afterwards thrown over-board: That he heard the Men that were taken ſpeak Scotch before they were killed; and The Worceſter's Crew underſtood that it was Captain Drummond's Ship, particularly he heard Captain Madder, John Bruckley, and Edward Carry ſay ſo; and, laſtly, that he would have declared the Ship they took belonged to Captain Drummond in his former Examination, but he was afraid it would have induced the Government to have dealt the more ſeverely with him.

Bruckley, the Cooper's Confeſſion.

John Bruckley, Cooper of The Worceſter, confeſſed, on the 21ſt of March, 1705, before Mr. Graham, Judge Admiral, That ſome Time after they came upon the Coaſt of Malabar, both the Ship and Sloop gave Chaſe to a Country Boat, which eſcaped them by her Oars: That the Sloop being damaged by Worms, was refitted at Callecut, manned with ten Men, two Guns, and two Pattereroes, with ſmall Arms, and ordered to ſail towards Tillicherry; and ſix or eight Days afterwards the Sloop came back, chaſing another Ship; whereupon The Worceſter ſlipt her Anchors, and made out to Sea to meet them: That he ſaw the Sloop board the Stranger's Ship towards Night, and that Captain Madder then went off with the Longboat manned: That he ſaw the Men on Board the Prize were white Men, but knows not what became of them, becauſe he ſuppoſes they were put on Board the Sloop, which was ordered away next Morning: That the Prize was manned with ſome of The Worceſter's Crew, and ſailed with The Worceſter to Callicoiloan, where they met with the Sloop again; and they all three lay at an Anchor there, the Prize riding at the Stern of The Worceſter, and was afterwards ſent into the River of Callicoiloan, and ſold to Coge Commodo: That The Worceſter and the Sloop alſo took another Ship, on which were both Whites and Blacks aboard; but knew not what became of them, the Sloop going off ſoon after the Engagement, and not returning in three or four Days: That this Deponent was afterwards in a Mooriſh King's Houſe, with about ſix of The Worceſter's Crew, and ſuppoſed that King was Coge Commodo's Maſter, who bargained for one of the Ships that were taken.

The ſaid John Bruckley alſo, on the 3d of April, 1705, came before Sir Robert Forbes, Judge of the Admiralty, and confirmed his former Confeſſion; adding, That the Men on Board the Ship taken near Callicoiloan were twelve or fourteen in Number, moſt of them white Men, and he heard them ſpeak Engliſh: That they were put into the Sloop and killed there, and the Goods belonging to the ſaid Ship were brought on Board The Worceſter, conſiſting of China Root and four Cheſts of Copper; and the Copper was ſold at Bengal, to a Bannian Merchant; and that he heard Callant the Supercargo, Captain Madder, John Roberts, and Edward Carry ſay, that the Ship they took was Captain Drummond's Ship, and belonged to the Scotch African Company.—And, laſtly, that when The Worceſter ſailed from the Downs, he did not know whither they were bound; but frequently heard it ſaid, they were going upon a Diſcovery.

Remarks on Green's Trial.

I doubt we muſt give up our Countrymen, and acknowledge them guilty of this barbarous Fact; the Evidence ſeems to be too ſtrong to be reſiſted. Theſe are ſome of the Fruits of ſuffering Merchants to combine, and form themſelves into excluſive Companies, who ſeldom ſtick at any Villainy to monopolize a Trade to themſelves: Never was a Nation ſo cruelly and unjuſtly dealt with, as the Scots have been by our Eaſt-India Company.

It was by their Influence, their Bribery, and other deteſted Arts, that the Scots were driven from their Settlement on the Iſthmus of Darien, to the unſpeakable Damage of Great Britain in general, as well as of the Scots in particular; for had the Scots been enabled or permitted to maintain their Colony of New Edinburgh till the Beginning of Queen Anne's Reign, the Treaſures of the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies could never have been ſo effectually made uſe of by the Kings of France and Spain, to ſupport that War againſt the Confederates. We ſhould either have come in for a Share of thoſe Treaſures, or at leaſt have prevented their being brought to Europe, and employed againſt us. We ſuffered ſufficiently for countenancing and aſſiſting our Eaſt-India Company to drive the Scots from thence; and this piratical Enterprize was but a Continuance of the ſame Injuſtice and Oppreſſion, and was entered upon with the like View of expelling the Scots from the Eaſt-India Trade, by Force or Fraud.

The Eaſt-India Company, by Virtue of the Acts of Parliament, paſſed for their Eſtabliſhment after the Revolution, looked upon themſelves, poſſibly, to be authorized to exclude all other Nations from that Traffick, as well as their Fellow-Subjects; or what had they to do to fall upon the Scots in this Manner, who were then as independent of England as any other People? But this was a Leſſon they had learned from the Portugueſe and Dutch.

The Portugueſe, for many Years after they found out the Way to the Eaſt-Indies by the Cape of Good Hope, claimed theſe Seas as their own, and made no Scruple of ſeizing or ſinking Dutch and Engliſh Ships, or thoſe of any other Nation, that preſumed to trade with the People of China or India without their Leave; which gave the Engliſh and Dutch a fair Occaſion of aſſerting their Right of navigating thoſe Seas, and of trafficking and correſponding with the Indian Princes; and this at Length proved the Ruin of the Portugueſe in that Part of the World; the Engliſh and Dutch driving them from their principal Settlements, and planting themſelves in their Room. The Dutch afterwards treacherouſly and cruelly expelled the Engliſh from the Spice Iſlands, their moſt valuable Acquiſitions in India, and then ſet up the ſame Pretence the Portugueſe had done, that no Nation had a Right to intermeddle in the Spice Trade but themſelves; which we, their good-natured Bubbles, have permitted them to monopolize ever ſince; and though they will not ſuffer us to trade with any Country where the fine Spices grow at this Day, yet have they wheedled us into their Meaſures ſo far, that we are become their Bullies and Tools, to exclude the Emperor and all other Nations from a Share in that leſs profitable Trade which they are pleaſed to ſuffer us to carry on ſtill in India. I muſt confeſs, it is paſt my Comprehenſion, to underſtand what Right we or the Dutch have to exclude any European Nation from trading with the Princes and People of India, and to give Orders to ſink the Ships and murder the Men that frequent thoſe Seas without their Permiſſion; though I make no manner of Queſtion, that it was upon this ſuppoſed Right the Eaſt-India Company had, of excluding all other Nations from that Trade, that they fitted out The Worceſter to deſtroy Captain Drummond, who went out in the Service of the Scots Eaſt-India Company.

But here we find how dangerous it is to be the Inſtruments to execute ſuch inhuman Orders: Thoſe who employed theſe Wretches to perpetrate this Villany, pretended they would defend them, or at leaſt procure their Pardon if they were convicted; but I don't find they ever made any Application to the Throne in their Behalf: They were aſhamed of the Action, probably, and left their miſerable Agents to ſuffer for their Credulity. If there be no Truſt in Princes, in ſuch Caſes, much leſs can a Man confide in raſcally Companies.

It is impoſſible not to reflect on the Juſtice of Providence alſo in this Caſe, which brought theſe Villains, a great deal out of their Way, to the only Place in the World where their Crimes would have been enquired into, and puniſhed as they deſerved: No Nation in Europe, but the Scots, had been wronged by them, and no other People, therefore, could have had that Reaſon to ſee Juſtice executed upon them.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged, That the ſaid Robert Fielding, late of the Pariſh of St. James's, Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, did, on the 9th of November, 4th of Q. Anne, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, take to Wife Mary Wadſworth, Spinſter; and that afterwards, on the 25th of the ſame Month of November, he did, at the Pariſh of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the ſaid County, feloniouſly take to Wife the Moſt Noble Barbara Dutcheſs of Cleveland, his ſaid former Wife, Mary, being then alive; againſt the Queen's Peace, and the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

The Evidence.

It appeared, by the Evidence, that Mrs. Deleau, a beautiful young Widow, was left worth ſixty thouſand Pounds, by her late Husband Mr. Deleau; and that in Auguſt, 1705, Mr. Fielding, the Priſoner, applied himſelf to one Mrs. Streights, and conſulted her how he might procure Acceſs to that Lady. Mrs. Streights informed him, ſhe had little Knowledge of Mrs. Deleau herſelf, but that there was one Mrs. Villars, her Acquaintance, who uſed to cut the Lady's Hair, that might be ſerviceable to him in that Affair; and thereupon Mrs. Streights was authorized by Mr. Fielding to offer Mrs. Villars lars 500 l. if ſhe would uſe her Endeavours to promote a Match between Mr. Fielding and Mrs. Deleau. Mrs. Villars, it ſeems, undertook to ſerve the Major-General (Fielding); but finding he had little or no Knowledge of Mrs. Deleau, and that his Project was altogether romantick, ſhe introduced him to Mrs. Mary Wadſworth, an Acquaintance of hers, who had agreed with Mrs. Villars to perſonate Mrs. Deleau; and Mr. Fielding was married to Mrs. Mary Wadſworth, at his own Lodgings, by a Popiſh Prieſt, on the 9th of November, 1705; the Prieſt performing the Ceremony in Latin; only when he came to the contracting Part, Mrs. Wadſworth inſiſted, that this ſhould be in Engliſh, and the Prieſt accordingly demanded of Mr. Fielding, If he would have this Gentlewoman to be his wedded Wife? He anſwered, Yes, with all my Heart; and then asking Mrs. Wadſworth, If ſhe would have this Gentleman for her Huſband? She anſwered, Yes; and the Ceremony being concluded, they went to Bed together, and lay till Morning; and the Witneſſes ſaw them in Bed together ſeveral Times afterwards; nor did Mr. Fielding diſcover he had been impoſed upon till the May following, and yet did he in the Interim (though he believed himſelf married to that great Fortune Mrs. Deleau), marry the Dutcheſs of Cleveland, viz. on the 25th of the ſame Month of November, 1735; and lay ſometimes with the Dutcheſs, and ſometimes with Mrs. Wadſworth, at his own Lodgings; for Mrs. Wadſworth, who perſonated Mrs. Deleau, pretended, ſhe durſt not declare her Marriage publickly, and admit him to go to her Houſe, for fear of diſobliging her Father, from whom ſhe had great Expectations.

Mr. Fielding imagining he had been ſure of Mrs. Deleau's Fortune, uſed the Dutcheſs of Cleveland very barbarouſly, who complaining to ſome Noble Peers, her Sons, they diſcovered ſomething of his Marriage with Mrs. Wadſworth, and procured Mrs. Villars, and Boucher, Mr. Fielding's Man, to appear as Witneſſes againſt him; and Mr. Fielding being convicted of Felony, in marrying two Wives, the Dutcheſs was releaſed from her Tyrant; and the Beau had the Mortification to find himſelf tricked by two Women of the Town, on whom the cowardly Poltroon took his Revenge by beating them, but could never break the Shackles he had taken ſo much Pains to put on.

Convicted of Felony.

From this Tranſaction we may obſerve,

Remarks on Fielding's Trial.

1. That a Marriage by a Popiſh Prieſt is good in our Law.

2. That the Marriage-Contract may be performed without naming Names, even where one of the Parties perſonates another: If the Contract be mutual, and the Man ſays no more than, I take this Woman (or this Lady) to be my wedded Wife; and the Woman ſays, I take this Man (or this Gentleman) for my Huſband, it is a legal Marriage; they are Man and Wife to all Intents and Purpoſes.

Nay, if the Conſent of the Parties is not demanded by a Prieſt, but by a Layman, and they mutually conſent to be Man and Wife in Words of preſent Tenſe, it is ſuch a Contract (where there is Proof of it) as can never be avoided: And if it be not a perfect Marriage, yet either Party may compel the other to ſolemnize ſuch a Marriage in a Church; and if either Party ſhould marry another after ſuch a Contract, he or ſhe may be compelled to return to their firſt Spouſe; their Iſſue by any other are illegitimate.

A Complaint of his Sermons.

A Complaint was made in the Houſe of Commons on the 13th of December, 1709, of two printed Sermons; the one intitled, The Communication of Sin; preached at the Aſſizes at Derby, the 15th of Auguſt, 1709: And the other intitled, The Perils of falſe Brethren, both in Church and State; preached before the Lord Mayor and Citizens, at the Cathedral of St. Paul's, on the fifth of November, 1709, by Henry Sacheverell, D.D. And ſeveral Paragraphs thereof being read, it was reſolved,

Voted ſcandalous, &c:

That the ſaid Sermons were malicious, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Libels, highly reflecting on Her Majeſty and Her Government; on the late happy Revolution, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, and both Houſes of Parliament; tending to alienate the Affections of Her Majeſty's good Subjects, and to create Jealouſies and Diviſions amongſt them.

The Doctor being ordered to attend the Houſe next Day, was called, and examined, If he owned thoſe Sermons? Which he did, and then withdrew: When a Queſtion being propoſed, That Dr. Henry Sacheverell be impeached of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; it was thought proper to call him again firſt, and demand, If he had any thing to offer to the Houſe in his Excuſe? Whereupon the Doctor ſaid,

Mr. Speaker,

"I AM very ſorry I am fallen under the "Diſpleaſure of this Houſe: I did not i-"magine any Expreſſions in my Sermons were "liable to ſuch a Cenſure as you have paſſed "upon them. If you had been pleaſed to have "favoured me ſo far as to have heard me be-"fore you paſſed it, I hope I ſhould have ex-"plained myſelf ſo as to have prevented it".

He is impeached.

After which, the Doctor was ordered to withdraw; and it was reſolved to impeach him of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors: And Mr. Dolben accordingly carried up the Impeachment to the Lords; acquainting them, That the Commons would, in due Time, exhibit Articles againſt him.

Not ſuffered to be bailed.

And the Doctor, with his Bookſeller, Mr. Henry Clements, were taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms: And though the Doctor petitioned the Commons to be admitted to Bail, they refuſed it, there being but 79 Yeas to 114 Noes, when the Queſtion was put.

Debates thereupon.

There were great Debates in the Houſe on bailing the Doctor: Some were of Opinion, they had no Power to take Bail; others inſiſted, they had a diſcretionary Power; while a third Party ſaid, If they had it in their Power, the Doctor did not deſerve ſo much Indulgence: Others ſaid, in Favour of Liberty, If they could, they ought to admit him to Bail: And that they could bail a Priſoner, they argued from the Equity and Reaſonableneſs of the Thing, That thoſe who could commit, might bail him; and produced two Precedents, viz. The Caſe of Mr. Seymour, and that of the Smugglers, impeached for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors; in one of which, the Perſons impeached and committed by the Houſe of Commons, were admitted to Bail; in the other, the Commons, upon their Petition, conſented to bail them; and they had been bailed, but the Sureties made Objections to the Condition of their Bonds, and would not ſubmit to it. Beſides, it was urged, that this Caſe was in itſelf bailable; and ſo agreed by all Gentlemen: And that the Doctor's Hardſhip might be the greater, becauſe it was probable, if the Commons did not bail him, he muſt lie in Cuſtody, when bailable by Law, till after the Receſs of Parliament: For the Articles not being exhibited to the Lords againſt him, it was thought, the Lords would not take him out of the Cuſtody of the Commons, and commit him upon a general Charge; and till they committed him, they could not bail him: This was his Caſe; for upon Application to the Lords, they refuſed to commit him, till the Commons had exhibited their Articles. The Lords ſaid, The Commons might never exhibit any; and they would not do ſo unreaſonable a Thing, as to commit any one on a general Charge. And ſo he lay a Priſoner, by the Commitment of the Houſe of Commons, in a Caſe bailable by Law, (and for which there were Precedents of the Commons admitting to Bail), from December the 14th, to January the 12th.

Articles carried up.

Mr. Dolben carried up the Articles to the Lords on the 12th of January; and the Serjeant at Arms, at the ſame Time, delivered the Doctor to the Deputy Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod: And the Doctor petitioning the Houſe of Peers to be admitted to Bail, and that he might have Counſel aſſigned him, and a Copy of the Articles; their Lordſhips granted all his Requeſts: And, on the 25th of January, Dr. Sacheverell attended the Houſe of Lords, and delivered in his Anſwer to the Articles of Impeachment againſt him; which their Lordſhips having communicated to the Commons, they ſent up their Reply on the third of February: And the next Day, the Lords ſent a Meſſage to the Commons, acquainting them, That they had appointed the Thurſday following for the Trial of Dr. Sacheverell, at the Bar of the Houſe: But the Commons reſolving afterwards, that they would be preſent at the Trial, as a Committee of the whole Houſe, and acquainting their Lordſhips with it, and deſiring convenient Accomodations might be made for them; the Houſe of Peers ordered the Lords with White Staves, to move Her Majeſty, to give Orders for preparing a Place in Weſtminſter-Hall for the Trial: And Her Majeſty thereupon gave Orders for preparing a Court in Weſtminſter-Hall; which which taking up ſome Time, the Lords put off the Trial till Monday the 27th of February.

The Trial appointed. Managers for the Commons.

The Commons thereupon appointed the Gentlemen, who had been of the Committee for drawing up Articles againſt the Doctor, to be their Managers at the Trial, viz. Sir John Holland Comptroller of Her Majeſty's Houſhold, Mr. Secretary Boyle, Mr. Smith Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir James Montague Attorney-General, Robert Eyre, Eſq; Solicitor-General, Robert Walpole, Eſq; Treaſurer of the Navy, Sir Joſeph Jekyll, Mr. Lechmere, Mr. Dolben, Sir Thomas Parker, Sir Peter King Recorder of the City of London, Sir John Hawles, the Lord William Paulet, the Lord Coningsby, Mr. Spencer Cowper, Mr. Thompſon, Lieutenant-General Stanhope, Lieutenant-General Mordaunt, Mr. Compton, and Sir David Dalrymple.

The firſt Day of the Trial.

On Monday the 27th of February, being the Day appointed for the Trial, the Lords came down from their Houſe, about Noon, to the Court erected in Weſtminſter-Hall: And the Commons having taken the Places provided for them, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for the Doctor to appear and ſave his Bail; whereupon he came to the Bar, and kneeled; his Counſel, Sir Simon Harcourt, Mr. Dodd, Mr. Phipps, Mr. Dee, and Dr. Henchman, ſtanding near him.

The Lord Chancellor Cowper then commanded the Doctor to riſe; and Proclamation being made for the Proſecutors to appear and make good their Charge, the Lord Chancellor acquainted the Doctor, that it was unneceſſary to give him any Directions for his Defence, the Lords having aſſigned him Counſel; adding, That they had alſo made an Order for ſummoning his Witneſſes, and admitted him to Bail, on the firſt Application, that he might be the better able to provide for his Defence; and that he had all the Time he deſired to prepare himſelf; and ought ever to remember their Lordſhips Indulgence to him.

The Tenor of the Articles.

Then the Articles of Impeachment were read: The Preamble whereof recites, That the late King William, when Prince of Orange, undertook, with an armed Force, a glorious Enterprize, for delivering this Kingdom from Popery and Arbitrary Power; in which he was joined and aſſiſted by many Subjects of this Realm, well affected to their Country: And that God being pleaſed to crown it with Succeſs, the late happy Revolution took Effect, and was eſtabliſhed: And whereas the ſaid glorious Enterprize had been approved by ſeveral Acts of Parliament, declared to be neceſſary, and that the ſame ought to be juſtified; and the happy Conſequences of it were the Enjoyment of God's true Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom; the uniting the Subjects in Intereſt and Affection, by a Toleration of Diſſenters; the Preſervation of Her Majeſty, the Succeſſion of the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, and the Union of the two Kingdoms: And whereas the Lords and Commons, did, by their Addreſs of 17 Dec. 1705, lay before Her Majeſty their Reſolution, That the Church of England, which was reſcued from the extremeſt Danger by King William III. was, by God's Bleſſing, under Her Majeſty in a moſt ſafe and flouriſhing Condition; and that whoever goes about to inſinuate, that the Church is in Danger under Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, is an Enemy to the Queen, the Church, and Kingdom: And did beſeech Her Majeſty to take effectual Meaſures for puniſhing the Authors of ſuch Reports: And Her Majeſty iſſued Her Proclamation accordingly; yet the ſaid Henry Sacheverell had preached two Sermons, and printed them, with a wicked, malicious, and ſeditious Intention to ſubvert Her Majeſty's Government and the Proteſtant Succeſſion; to defame Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration to aſperſe the Memory of his late Majeſty, to condemn the Revolution, arraign the Reſolutions of both Houſes of Parliament, create Jealouſies and Diviſions among Her Majeſty's Subjects, and incite them to Sedition and Rebellion.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Art. 1. That the ſaid Henry Sacheverell, in his Sermon preached at St. Paul's, doth ſuggeſt and maintain, That the neceſſary Means uſed to bring about the Revolution, were odious and unjuſtifiable: That his late Majeſty in his Declaration, diſclaimed the leaſt Imputation of Reſiſtance: And that to impute Reſiſtance to the Revolution, is to caſt black and odious Colours upon his late Majeſty and the ſaid Revolution.

Art. 2. Was in Subſtance, That he had ſuggeſted and maintained, That the Toleration was unreaſonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; and reflected on Archbiſhop Grindall.

Art. 3. Imported, That he did falſly and ſeditiouſly ſuggeſt and aſſert, That the Church of England was in great Peril and Adverſity under Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, contrary to the Votes of both Houſes.

Art. 4. That he did falſly and maliciouſly ſuggeſt, That Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, both in Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Affairs, tended to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution: And, that there were Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, who were falſe Bretheren; and did themſelves undermine, and betray, and encourage and impower others to undermine and betray the Conſtitution: That as a publick Incendiary, he fomented Diviſions, and excited Her Majeſty's Subjects to Arms and Violence: And that his ſeditious Suggeſtions might make the ſtronger Impreſſions, he did wreſt and pervert divers Paſſages of holy Scripture.

All which they were ready to prove, from the ſaid Sermons.

Then the Doctor's Anſwer was read, wherein he denies, he preached or printed the ſaid Sermons with a malicious Intent, as the Preamble to the Articles charges; but ſays, he was induced to print the Derby Sermon at the Requeſt of the Grand Jury, who declared their Approbation of it; and the ſaid Lord Mayor having expreſſed his Liking of the Sermon preached at St. Paul's, he did, at his Requeſt, cauſe that Sermon to be printed, and dedicated to him.

Anſwer to the firſt Article.

1. And in anſwer to the firſt Article, he denies, That he ſuggeſted, that the neceſſary Means uſed to bring about the Revolution were odious, and unjuſtifiable; but, on the contrary, endeavoured to clear the Revolution, and his late Majeſty, from the black and odious Colours caſt upon both.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

That he had, indeed, maintained, that his late Majeſty diſclaimed the Imputation of Reſiſtance: But it was ſuch a Reſiſtance as tended to a Conqueſt, as appeared from that Part of the Declaration he referred to; and, as he deſigned this for the Honour of the late King, it could not be taken as a Reflection on him: And obſerved that his Majeſty in that Declaration affirmed, That his Expedition was intended for no other Deſign but to have a free and lawful Parliament.

As to his (the Doctor's) maintaining in his Sermons, That thoſe who imputed Reſiſtance to the Revolution, caſt black and odious Colours on the Revolution, and his late Majeſty; he anſwered, that thoſe whom he deſcribed, as caſting black and odious Colours on the Revolution, were not thoſe who imputed Reſiſtance to it, but thoſe who taught, contrary to Law and Goſpel, that the People were the Original of Power, could cancel their Allegiance at Pleaſure, and call their Sovereign to Account for High-Treaſon againſt his Subjects, and even dethrone and murder him for a Criminal; as they did the Royal Martyr.

That he could not find he had given the leaſt Colour for the Accuſation exhibited in this Article, unleſs by his aſſerting, The utter Illegality of Reſiſtance to the Supreme Power, upon any Pretence whatſoever; for which Aſſertion he had the Authority of the Church of England in her Homilies, ready to be produced; and was adviſed, that the ſaid Aſſertion was agreeable to, and warranted by the Laws of the Land, and divers Acts of Parliament now in Force; and therefore hoped he ſhould not ſuffer for aſſerting the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance to the Supreme Powers. But if this Doctrine was declared erroneous, and he ſhould ſuffer for aſſerting it, he truſted that God would enable him to ſhew his Steady Belief of this Doctrine, by a meek and patient Reſignation to whatever ſhould befall him on that Account.

Anſwer to Art. 2.

2. In anſwer to the 2d Article, which charged him with maintaining, That the Toleration granted by Law was unreaſonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable; he could not inform himſelf, that a Toleration had been granted; but admitted, an Act paſſed 1 W. & M. exempting their Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects from the Penalties of certain Laws; which Exemption he no where ſuggeſted to be unreaſonable, or the Allowance of it unwarrantable.

But he did, indeed, ſuggeſt it to be one Part of the Characters of a Falſe Brother, upon all Occaſions to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conſcience, and, to excuſe the Separation, lay the Fault upon the true Sons of the Church, for carrying Matters too high.

And as to his reflecting on Archbiſhop Grindall, he hoped he might be excuſed; becauſe the Archbiſhop had incurred the Diſpleaſure of ſo good and pious a Princeſs as Queen Elizabeth; and was ſuſpended till the Day of his Death for permitting Innovations in the Church. However, he hoped, that no Words ſpoken of an Archbiſhop 120 Years after he was dead, would amount to a High Crime and Miſdemeanor.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Anſwer to Art. 3.

3. To the third Article, he anſwered, That he denied he aſſerted the Church of England was in Danger under Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, or intended to arraign the Vote of both Houſes: But he acknowledged he had ſuggeſted, that the Church was in Danger from our National Sins, from Vice and Infidelity, as it was declared to be by an Act of Parliament 9 & 10 W. III. And he conceived, ſince the paſſing of that Act, the deteſtable Crimes, for the Suppreſſing whereof that Act was made, were greatly encreaſed.

That the Vote of both Houſes, made four Years ago, concerned thoſe only who then inſinuated the Church was in Danger from her Majeſty's Adminiſtration; and could not be preſumed to affect thoſe who now ſuggeſted the Chriſtian Faith was endangered by thoſe Atheiſtical and Irreligious Principles which were daily propagated from the Preſs amongſt us.

Anſwer to Art. 4.

4. To that Part of the 4th Article, which charges him with ſuggeſting that her Majeſty's Adminiſtration tends to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution; he anſwers, he hath not mentioned her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, or her Miniſters, in either of his Sermons; and was ſo far from cenſuring it, that he had reckoned it among the ineſtimable Bleſſings that were owing to our Deliverance commemorated on the 5th of November, That Her Majeſty, the good and pious Relict of the Royal Family, ſits now happily upon the Throne of her Anceſtors; and prays, that God may long preſerve Her, for the Comfort and Support of the Church; and profeſſes, that what he ſpoke, proceeded from a tender Concern for Her Majeſty's Perſon and Government.

As to his ſuggeſting that there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, that do weaken, undermine, and betray the Church, &c. He denies he ſuggeſts ſuch Things of Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State. For where he ſpeaks of thoſe who weaken, undermine, and betray, and encourage and put it in the Power of our profeſſed Enemies, to overturn and deſtroy the Conſtitution; there Men of Characters and Stations were not mentioned by him: And when he mentions Men of Characters and Stations, twelve Pages afterwards, he ſays nothing of weakening, undermining, or betraying, or putting it in the Power of others to overturn the Conſtitution; and hopes he ſhall not be anſwerable for a ſuppoſed Reflection, which depends upon the Conjunction of Paſſages widely diſtant, and ſo little relating to each other.

And as to that Part of the Charge in this Article, That as a publick Incendiary, he perſuaded Her Majeſty's Subjects to keep up Diſtinctions of Factions and Parties, and fomented Diviſions; he had, on the contrary, in that Sermon, complained of thoſe who had villainouſly divided us with knaviſh Diſtinctions of High and Low Churchmen; and wiſhed that thoſe invidious Diſtinctions were loſt: And had condemned thoſe, who by falſe Inſinuations, and raiſing groundleſs Jealouſies and Fears, embroiled the Publick, and would bring us into Confuſion: And was ſo far from exciting or ſtirring up Her Majeſty's Subjects to Arms and Violence, that he had aſſerted the utter Ille-

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Illegallity of Reſiſtance to the Supreme Power upon any Pretence whatſoever; which he apprehended to be the chief, if not the only Ground, of the Charge exhibited againſt him in the firſt Article.

That he hoped what he had ſaid in the Dedication of the Derby Sermon, That there are not wanting ſome to preach the Truth, and others to ſupport it, at the Expence of their Lives and Fortunes; would not be conſtrued, as exciting Her Majeſty's Subjects to Sedition and Rebellion; ſince that Truth which he commends ſome for Preaching, and others for Supporting, is by him oppoſed to the Attempts of thoſe who betray and run down the Principles and Intereſts of our Church and Conſtitution; and ſince he there deſervedly commends the High Sheriff of that County, on account of his ſteady Loyalty and Zeal to ſerve her Majeſty and the Government, for which he hath been ſo remarkably diſtinguiſhed.

In the Sermon preached at St. Paul's, he doth indeed excite Chriſtians, To put on the whole Armour of God, as wreſtling, not only againſt Fleſh and Blood, but againſt Principalities, againſt Powers, againſt the Rulers of the Darkneſs of this World; againſt Spiritual Wickedneſs in High Places: But he hath learned from the ſame St. Paul, That the Arms of Reſiſtance taken up by Subjects againſt the Higher Powers, are no Part of that Spiritual Armour; and the Principalities and Powers by him mentioned, being plainly diſtinguiſhed from Fleſh and Blood, cannot, he thinks, be ſo far miſinterpreted, as to be underſtood of Earthly Potentates and Rulers.

And as to ſo much of the ſaid 4th Article, whereby it is charged, that he, the ſaid Henry Sacheverell doth wickedly wreſt and pervert divers Texts and Paſſages of Holy Scripture, that his ſaid malicious and ſeditious Suggeſtions may make the ſtronger Impreſſions upon the Minds of Her Majeſty's Subjects; the ſaid Henry Sacheverell ſays, That having no malicious or ſeditious Suggeſtions to imprint, he could not intend to wreſt any Paſſages of the Holy Scripture to that wicked Purpoſe. And hard is the Lot of the Miniſters of the Goſpel, if, when they cite the Word of God in their general Exhortations to Piety and Virtue, or in their Reproofs of Men's Tranſgreſſions, or where they are lamenting the Difficulties and Conflicts with which the Church of Chriſt, whilſt Militant here on Earth, muſt always ſtruggle; the ſeveral Texts and Paſſages by them cited, ſhall be ſaid to have been by them meant of particular Perſons and Things, and ſhall be conſtrued in the moſt Criminal Senſe, and be made, by ſuch Conſtruction, one Ground of an Impeachment for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

The Replication of the Commons.

Then the Replication of the Commons to the Doctor's Anſwer was read, wherein they aver the Charge againſt the ſaid Henry Sacheverell to be true, and that he his guilty in ſuch Manner as he ſtands impeached.

After which the Lord Chancellor intimating to the Commons, that they might proceed with their Evidence, Mr. Attorney General, (one of the Managers) ſaid,

Mr. Attorney opens the Cauſe.

My Lords, by Command of the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled, we appear in Behalf of all the Commons of Great Britain, to make good the Impeachment againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, Doctor Henry Sacheverell.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

The Miſdemeanors he ſtands accuſed of, are ſpecified in the Articles which have been juſt now read to your Lordſhips; and the Facts there charged, are ſaid to have been done with a wicked, malicious, ſeditious Intention, to undermine and ſubvert Her Majeſty's Government, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, as by Law eſtabliſhed; to defame Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration; to aſperſe the Memory of His late Majeſty King William; to traduce and condemn the late happy Revolution; to contradict and arraign the Reſolution of both Houſes of Parliament; to create Jealouſies and Diviſions amongſt Her Majeſty's Subjects; and to incite them to Sedition and Rebellion.

My Lords, if this Charge be made good, (as I am apt to think it will) I may preſume to ſay, no Words can either aggravate or alleviate the Offence.

My Lords, our Proofs in this Caſe will ariſe from Evidence which cannot be liable to the Imputation of being over-awed by the Weight of the Proſecutors, or corrupted, or perverted; for out of his own Mouth we ſhall charge him, and by his own Words and Sermons we ſhall convict him.

My Lords, I can with Truth ſay, That it is no ſmall Trouble to the Commons of Great Britain, to have this Occaſion of coming in this Manner before your Lordſhips: Could they have ſatisfied themſelves that Her Majeſty's Honour, the Safety of her People, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion as by Law eſtabliſhed, were not highly concerned to bring this Man to ſpeedy Juſtice, they could very willingly have ſpared your Lordſhips this Trouble.

But when they conſidered, of what import it was to the Nation, how much it concerned the very Being of our Conſtitution, to diſcountenance and put an End to ſuch ſort of ſeditious Proceedings, as the Doctor and ſome others of his Brethren have been lately practiſing in divers Parts of the Kingdom, they could not think otherwiſe, than that it was Matter fit for the Grand Inqueſt of the Nation to take Notice of: And finding it to be a Cauſe of ſo great Moment to the Publick, they judged it fit to be taken under their own Management, and not truſt it to the Deciſion of any inferior Tribunal. And, my Lords, it muſt be agreed, that your Lordſhips are the only proper Judges, when the whole Commons of Great Britain find it neceſſary to be the Proſecutors: Nor can Dr. Sacheverel have any juſt Cauſe to complain of this Manner of Proceeding, when it gives him ſo publick an Opportunity of defending himſelf (if his Innocence can clear him); and what can he deſire more, when he lies under ſo heavy an Accuſation, than to have your Lordſhips for his Judges, who have already ſhewn your great Indulgence to him, by allowing him (as the Noble Lord from the Woolpack juſt now obſerved) all the Advantages a Man under his Circumſtances can ask, or deſire to have?

My Lords, this Proſecution took its Riſe from a Complaint that was made in the Houſe of Commons the 13th of December laſt, of two Books

1709-10. 8 Annæ. Books which had been lately printed and publiſhed, under the Name of Dr. Henry Sacheverell. The Books being delivered in, ſeveral Paragraphs were read, and, by divers Paſſages, too many for me now to enumerate to your Lordſhips, it did plainly appear, that both Books did contain very ſcandalous and ſeditious Matter, highly reflecting upon the Queen, and Her Adminiſtration.

Hereupon the Doctor was ordered to attend; which he did accordingly the next Day, and, at the Bar of the Commons Houſe, owned and avowed both Books to be his; that they were Sermons he himſelf had preached; and that he had cauſed them to be printed and publiſhed.

After ſuch a Confeſſion, your Lordſhips may imagine Her Majeſty's dutiful Commons did expreſs their juſt Reſentments of the great Wrong and Injuries that were done to Her Majeſty, and all that were in Authority under Her, and imediately ordered this Impeachment.

Your Lordſhips will perceive, by Peruſal of the Sermons and Epiſtles Dedicatory, that the Deſign and Drift of the ſame is to poſſeſs the People with ſtrange Notions, and terrible Apprehenſions of the Danger they are in by a general Mal-Adminiſtration of the Publick Affairs both in Church and State.

That both theſe Sermons were preached upon publick Occaſions; and had, ſince the printing thereof, been handed about with more than ordinary Application.

One of theſe Books is intitled, The Communication of Sin, being a Sermon preached at the Aſſizes held at Derby, in Auguſt laſt: And becauſe the Doctor though the had not ſaid enough againſt the Queen and Her Government in the Sermon, he affixes a Dedication to it, wherein he affirms, That the Principles of our Church and Conſtitution are ſhamefully betrayed and run down; that both are perſecuted, on the one Side by rude and preſumptuous Inſults, and baſe undermining Treachery on the other; and that this Perſecution is carried on by aſſociated Malignants.

The other Sermon was preached at St. Paul's, London, on the 5th of November, which is a Day ſet apart for a general Day of Thankſgiving, for two very great Deliverances vouchſafed to this Nation, by the Diſcovery of the Gunpowder-Plot, and the Arrival of his late Majeſty King William, to redeem us from Popiſh Tyranny and Arbitrary Power.

My Lords, when ye come to hear this Sermon read, I am confident that it muſt appear very ſtrange to find that, when there were two ſuch memorable Occaſions for the Doctor to have ſet forth his Eloquence, in a Thankſgiving Sermon, he ſhould in a great Meaſure paſs by both the Buſineſſes of the Day, and entertain his Audience with a long Harangue of the deplorable Condition the Church was in; not ſo much from Papiſts, the avowed Enemies of the Church, as from her pretended Friends, as he calls them, the falſe Sons of the Church, who were crept into her Bowels, and had ſhewn themſelves to be perfidious Brethren, by defending Toleration and Liberty of Conſcience, and favouring the Diſſenters.

And to ſhew his little Liking of the great Work which was begun to be wrought on that on that Day, by the Arrival of his late Majeſty, the chief Turn of his Diſcourſe is to cry up Non-reſiſtance and Paſſive Obedience. 1709-10. 8 Annæ.

And to make it moſt evident, that what he ſaid of Non-reſiſtance was to caſt black and odious Colours upon the Revolution, he lays down a general Poſition, That it was not lawful, upon any Pretence whatſoever, to make Reſiſtance to the Supreme Power; which Supreme Power, by other Paſſages, he explains to be the Regal Power.

And being apprehenſive that every one that heard him talking in that Manner againſt Reſiſtance, would ſee plainly he was cenſuring and condemning the Means that brought about the Revolution, and being deſirous to caſt as heavy Reflections as he could upon the Memory of King William; he aſſerts, that the Prince of Orange, in his Declaration, utterly diſclaimed all Manner of Reſiſtance.

My Lords, every Body knows, that knows any Thing of the Revolution, That the Prince of Orange came over hither with an armed Force; and that in ſeveral Paragraphs of his Declaration, (the Doctor ſpeaks of) His late Majeſty invites and requires all Peers of the Realm, both Spiritual and Temporal Lords, all Gentlemen, Citizens, and other Commoners, to come in and aſſiſt him, in order to the executing that Deſign he had then undertook, againſt all that ſhould endeavour to oppoſe him.

Therefore it muſt be accounted very ridiculous for the Doctor to advance ſuch a Poſition, if he had no further Meaning in it, than to give an Account of the Prince of Orange's Deſign in coming over here into England.

And this will make it neceſſary for your Lordſhips to conſider what is the true Meaning of this Aſſertion: Is it not plainly to make the Prince of Orange ſay one Thing, and at the ſame Time do directly another? And can this be done with any other Deſign than to aſperſe the Memory of the late King William?

Then as to his Diſcourſe concerning Paſſive Obedience and Non-reſiſtance, in ſuch Latitude as is there mentioned, what could it tend to, but to caſt Reflections upon that Reſiſtance which was the Means that brought about the Revolution?

For was there any Occaſion at that Time to be ſo earneſt to cry down Reſiſtance, and preach up Paſſive Obedience?

Can any one pretend to ſay there were any Symptoms of Diſcontent throughout the Nation, in any Parts thereof?

No: To our Comfort be it ſpoken, no Reign, no Age, no Hiſtory can give a better Account of the good Diſpoſitions of the People to their Sovereign. Therefore, ſince the Preaching theſe Doctrines was needleſs, it does ſavour of ſome wicked Deſign to be talking ſo unſeaſonably of this Subject.

If what the Doctor very frequently aſſerts in this Sermon be true, That all are falſe Sons of the Church who aſſiſted in bringing about the Revolution, or that joined in the Oppoſition that was made to the Encroachments which were begun by evil Miniſters, in the Reign of King James II. againſt our Religion and Liberties; let the Doctor a little conſider how far his Character of a falſe Brother may be carried.

Every

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Every Body knows, that lived in thoſe Days, that the Body of the Clergy of the Church of England, made a noble Stand againſt the Encroachments which were then making, and appeared as active as any of the Laity.

And was it not by their Writings, Preaching, and Example, that the Nobility and Gentry were animated to maintain and defend their Rights, Religion, and Liberties? And as an undoubted Monument, that this was the Senſe of the whole Kingdom at that Time of the Revolution, it is entered in the Journal of the Houſe of Commons on the Firſt of February, 1688,

That the Unanimous Thanks of the Houſe was given, nemine contradicente, to the Clergy of the Church of England, for the great Services they had done their Religion and Country, by the Oppoſition they had made to the Execution of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, and their refuſing to read the King's Declaration for a Toleration, which was then founded upon the Diſpenſing Power.

And how did the Archbiſhops receive the Meſſage, that was ſent them upon this Occaſion, that they might communicate that Reſolution to the Clergy in their reſpective Dioceſes?

Our Journal tells us, That Mr. Leveſon Gower the next Day acquainted the Houſe of Commons, that he had attended the two Archbiſhops, according to Order, with the Thanks of the Houſe; and that Archbiſhop Sancroft, and the then Archbiſhop of York, returned their Thanks to the Commons for themſelves, and in Behalf of all the Clergy, for their favourable Vote.

Your Lordſhips ſee, the Commons were then happy enough to be thought favourable to the Clergy of the Church of England; and yet thoſe very Commons were the Men who paſſed the Toleration-Act, for exempting Proteſtant Diſſenters from the Penalties of certain Laws, as one of the moſt neceſſary Acts for the Good of the Kingdom.

And were they not encouraged to go about that charitable Work by the Petition of the ſeven Biſhops, preſented to King James; wherein they acquainted him, That it was not for want of a due Tenderneſs to Diſſenters, which made them refuſe reading his Declaration for Toleration to Diſſenters; in Relation to whom they were willing to come to ſuch a Temper as ſhould be thought fit, when the ſame came to be conſidered in Parliament.

But now the ſame hath been conſidered in Parliament, and the Toleration hath been ſettled and eſtabliſhed by the Legiſlative Authority of the Kingdom, and hath been ratified and approved of in this Reign, by Her Majeſty and both Houſes of Parliament; Dr. Sacheverell, belike, diſapproves of it, and is pleaſed to tell us, in a moſt extraordinary Manner, That a Man muſt be very weak, or ſomething worſe, that thinks or pretends the Diſſenters are to be gained by any other Grants and Indulgences, than giving up our whole Conſtitution: And he that recedes the leaſt Tittle from it, to ſatisfy and ingratiate with theſe clamorous, inſatiable, Church-devouring Malignants, knows not what Spirit they are of.

After ſuch an ample Declaration of his Opinion, what fatal Conſequences will attend the granting Indulgences to Diſſenters, can the Doctor imagine, that his ſaying, in his Anſwer to the Articles, That he intends not to caſt the leaſt invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence the Government has condeſcended to give them, will take off the hard Cenſures he hath paſſeed upon Diſſenters?

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

And, my Lords, if an Archbiſhop, who hath been dead almoſt a hundred and twenty Years, cannot be permitted to reſt quiet in his Grave, but muſt have foul Aſperſions caſt upon his Memory, as being a falſe Son, and a perfidious Prelate of the Church, for interceding (as Dr. Sacheverell ſays) with Queen Elizabeth for the Diſſenters in thoſe Days; what muſt the preſent Archbiſhops and Biſhops of our Church expect from Dr. Henry Sacheverell, if they do not thunder out their Eccleſiaſtical Anathema's againſt Diſſenters, as often as the Doctor ſhall think there is Occaſion for them?

My Lords, I perceive the Doctor hopes to ſalve all he hath ſaid againſt Toleration to Diſſenters, by a nice Diſtinction he hath hit upon, between an Indulgence and a Toleration.

Therefore he tells your Lordſhips, That upon the moſt diligent Enquiry, he hath not been able to inform himſelf that a Toleration hath been granted by Law.

Can the Doctor pretend to ſay, That this Word Toleration has never been made uſe of, to expreſs the Religious Liberty and Indulgence that is granted and allowed to Diſſenters? If we wanted Authorities to juſtify the Uſe of the Word, after the Doctor has made uſe of it in the ſame Senſe over and over, in many Paſſages in his Sermon, as will be taken Notice of by the Gentlemen that are to make good the ſecond Article; the Doctor might be put in Mind that Her Majeſty, in Her Speech from the Throne, on the 17th of December, 1705, hath been pleaſed to declare, That ſhe will inviolably maintain Toleration.

My Lords, as the Time was moſt unſeaſonable for the Preaching ſuch Doctrines as theſe, ſo the Place was very improper for a Lecture of Politicks: For your Lordſhips do perceive this latter Sermon, which was preached on the Fifth of November laſt, was preached in the great Metropolis of this Kingdom, before the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of London; from whoſe ſteady Loyalty to Her Majeſty, and firm Affections to the Revolution, ſuch vaſt Sums have been contributed, for carrying on this long War againſt France, which hath proved ſo fatal to the French King, and other Enemies of this Kingdom.

And what more likely to give a fatal Wound to the Publick Credit at this Time, than ſuch a Doctrine, which tends to the Overthrow of all the Acts of Parliament which have been made in Support of this Conſtitution?

And how ſtrange an Attempt was it in the Doctor to preach againſt the Revolution, and this Government, before thoſe Citizens, who owe the Reſtoration of their Charters, and all their Franchiſes and Immunities to it!

But, to do Juſtice to the Doctor, he, in his Anſwer, denies he hath ſaid any Thing of the Means which brought about the Revolution.

And, if your Lordſhips can believe him, he says, He has endeavoured to vindicate the Revolution from the black and odious Colours, the Enemies of the Revolution would throw both upon that and his late Majesty.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

To what End and Purpose then are these Doctrines preached, with so much Vehemence at this Time, unless it be to reflect backwards upon what was done at the Time of the Revolution?

There is certainly no Occasion to preach Non-Resistance to Her Majesty's loyal and dutiful Subjects, who have never shewn the least Inclination to give Disturbances to this present Government.

Was there ever known a Time, in which there was so universal an Agreement, in all Ranks and Degrees amongst us? Does not every one almost strive to shew their Zeal and Affection for Her Majesty and Her Government? If there be any that are less quiet than their Neighbours, we shall find them amongst the Friends of Dr. Sacheverell, who are professedly no Friends to the Revolution. Nothing is more certain, than that all that are not satisfied with what was done at the Time of the Revolution, must be Enemies to the present Establishment: And it is from this Source, all these Declamations against Men of Character and Station, both in Church and State, do proceed.

But I would have the Doctor consider, that we have Laws to punish Spreaders of false News and horrible Stories of the great Men and great Officers of the Kingdom: And it is to put a Stop to these malicious Practices now on Foot, that this Delinquent is now brought to this Bar.

When we shall have read our several Proofs, which will justify every Particular charged on the Doctor in the Articles of Impeachment, the Commons will not doubt of your Lordships Judgment against this Defendant.

The Sermon read in Evidence.

Then the Dedication before the Derby Sermon was read, and the Sermon preached at St. Paul's, with the Dedication to the Lord Mayor, Sir Samuel Garrard; after which, the Court adjourned to the next Day.

The Arguments of the Managers on the first Article.

On Tuesday the 28th of February, the Managers for the Commons, Sir Joseph Jekyll, Mr. Solicitor Eyre, Sir John Holland, Mr. Walpole, Sir John Hawles, and Mr. Stanhope, proceeded to maintain the first Article; viz. That the Doctor did suggest and maintain, that the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable: And that to impute Resistance to the Revolution, was to cast black and odious Colours on his late Majesty, and the Revolution, &c.

Sir J. Jekyll.

Sir Joseph Jekyll among other Things, said, That it was far from the Intention of the Commons, to state the Bounds of the Subjects Submission; what the Law was wisely silent in, the Commons desired to be silent in too: Nor should they put any Case of a justifiable Resistance, but that of the Revolution only; and to make out the Justice of that, laid it down for a Maxim, That as the Law is the only Measure of the Prince's Authority and the People's Subjection; so that Law derives its Being and Efficacy from common Consent.

Religion had nothing to do to extend the Authority of the Prince, or the Submission of the Subject; but only secured the legal Authority of the one, and enforced the due Submission of the other, from the Consideration of higher Rewards and heavier Punishments.——That as the Doctrine of unlimited Non-Resistance, was implicitly renounced by the whole Nation at the Revolution, so had that Renunciation been expressed and confirmed by several Acts of Parliament since: And in the Prayers appointed for the Fifth of November, We thanked God for His late Majesty's safe Arrival; and making all Opposition fall before him, till he became our King and Governor: Notwithstanding all which, Dr. Sacheverell had condemned the Resistance, by which that Deliverance was wrought; and knowing that there was Resistance used at the Revolution, and that the late King and Parliament had avowed that Resistance; yet asserted, That those who say, There was any Resistance in it, cast black and odious Colours on the late King and the Revolution; consequently, he had condemned the Resistance used to bring about the Revolution, which was the Charge contained in the first Article.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Solicitor then cited several Passages out of the Sermon preached at St. Paul's, to prove the first Article; and observed, that the Doctor's Argument run thus: All Resistance is utterly illegal; the King disclaimed the least Imputation of Resistance: The Parliament set the Crown upon his Head, upon no other Title than that of the Vacancy of the Throne, and burnt a Book, because it asserted a Title by which Resistance was supposed: And therefore to impute Resistance to the Revolution, is to cast black and odious Colours upon it.

That the Doctor in his Answer, indeed, denied that he maintained the necessary Means used to bring about the Revolution, were odious and unjustifiable, or affirmed any thing concerning the necessary Means; and, it was true, the Words necessary Means were not used in his Sermon: But if Resistance was necessary, and the Means by which the Revolution was effected, then he had asserted the Means to be odious and unjustifiable, though he had done it in other Terms.

And as to the late King's disclaiming all Resistance, it was an apparent Scandal on his late Majesty, who was so far from disclaiming Resistance, that he declared he brought over sufficient Forces to defend himself against evil Councillors, and encouraged the People to join with him.

That had the Doctor the Authority of the Church of England, and of the Common and and Statute Law, to justify his Maxim of The utter Illegality of Resistance to the Supreme Power, there had been no Colour to charge him with maintaining it: The Resistance used at the Revolution, could not then be defended: But the Commons should think themselves ungrateful for that Deliverance, if they did not vindicate the Honour of the late King, and of those illustrious Persons, who, upon his Invitation, defended the Constitution at that Time by Resistance, and declare, that this Resistance was lawful, honourable, and just.

It could never be supposed, that the Laws were made to set up a despotick Power, to destroy themselves, and to warrant the Subversion of a Constitution they were designed to establish: And it appeared by the Act declaring the Rights

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Rights and Liberties of the Subjects, That at the Time of the Revolution, there was a total Subverſion of the Conſtitution in Church and State; which was a Caſe the Laws of England could never provide for, or have in View; and the ſame Anſwer might be applied to the general Doctrine of the Church, expreſſed in her Homilies.

Sir John Holland.

Sir John Holland, in Maintenance of the firſt Article, obſerved, That it was plain, there was a Reſiſtance at the Revolution; If the taking up Arms in moſt of the Counties of England, if the Deſertion of King James's own Troops to an invading Prince, and the turning their Arms againſt their Sovereign were Reſiſtance. And if Subjects were obliged to an abſolute unconditional Obedience, then the Convention of the States, the Settlement and Entail of the Crown by them, and the Settlement of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, in Purſuance of that Reſiſtance, was unlawful and void.

The Commons did not plead for a licentious Reſiſtance, or abet humourſome factious Arms: They acknowledged theſe to be Rebellions. But they maintained, that the Reſiſtance at the Revolution, was lawful and juſt; from the Neceſſity of it. They agreed alſo, that the Laws concerning Obedience, were very expreſs and poſitive, and the Homilies and Fathers of the Church, both dead and living, alſo expreſſed our Duty in general Terms; but it did not follow from thence, there could be no Exceptions to theſe general Rules.

That the Clergy at the Revolution, were ſo far from maintaining the Unlawfulneſs of Reſiſtance, that the true diſtinguiſhing Characteriſtick of a Church-of-England-Man, then was the wiſhing that Reſiſtance Succeſs: And yet the Doctor made this Exception, the Inſtance of an unjuſt Reſiſtance.

Mr. Walpole.

Mr. Walpole, among other Things, ſaid, He was very ſenſible of the Difficulty and Nicety that attended ſpeaking to this Point; for while a loyal Subject, and a faithful Servant of the beſt of Queen's, was ſpeaking in Defence of the neceſſary and commendable Reſiſtance uſed at the Revolution, his Arguments might be miſconſtrued and miſrepreſented, as maintaining Antimonarchical Schemes.

But to plead for that Reſiſtance which was concerned in this Debate, was to aſſert and maintain the very Being of the preſent Government: And to aſſert Non-Reſiſtance in that boundleſs and unlimited Senſe, Dr. Sacheverell preſumed to aſſert it, was to ſap and undermine the very Foundations of our Government.

If the general Poſition, laid down in the Sermon, of the utter Illegality of Reſiſtance upon any Pretence whatſoever, was ſtrictly true, then the aſſuming and exerciſing a Power of diſpenſing with the Laws; the Commitment and Proſecution of the Biſhops, the erecting a High Commiſſion Court, the levying Money by Pretence of Prerogative, the raiſing and keeping a Standing Army without Conſent of Parliament, the violating the Freedom of Elections of Members to ſerve in Parliament, and all the Grievances enumerated in the Bill of Rights, were all meer Pretences, and not ſufficient to juſtify what was done in Defence of the undoubted Rights and Liberties of the People at the Revolution; and which were ſince ratified and confirmed by ſeveral Acts of Parliament.

Reſiſtance, indeed, was no where enacted to be legal, but ſubjected to the greateſt Penalties, by all the Laws in Being; nor ought it to be deſcribed or affirmed to be excuſable, by any poſitive Law; or upon what Occaſions it may be exerciſed, it ought never to be thought of, but when an utter Subverſion of the Laws threatened the whole Frame of the Conſtitution, and no Redreſs could otherwiſe be hoped for.—But becauſe Men, out of Folly and Wantonneſs, might not commit Treaſon, or make their own Diſcontents, ill Principles, or diſguiſed Affections to another Intereſt, a Pretence to reſiſt the Supreme Power: Would it follow from thence, that the utmoſt Neceſſity ought not to ingage a Nation in its own Defence for the Preſervation of the whole? Or, on the other Side, becauſe the greateſt and moſt inexpreſſible Emergencies, did ſufficiently juſtify and warrant the Reſiſtance at the Revolution; would it be a Conſequence therefore, that, upon every ſlight Occaſion, the Laws that guarded againſt Treaſon ſhould be of no Effect? No; he hoped their Lordſhips juſt Judgment in this Caſe would convince the World, that every ſeditious, diſcontented, hot-headed, ungifted, unedifying Preacher, (the Doctor would pardon him for uſing one String of his Epithets) who had no Hopes of diſtinguiſhing himſelf in the World, but by a matchleſs Indiſcretion, ſhould not advance with Impunity, Doctrines deſtructive of the Peace and Quiet of Her Majeſty's Government and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, and prepare the Minds of the People for an Alteration, by giving them ill Impreſſions of the preſent Eſtabliſhment and Adminiſtration.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

If Reſiſtance was illegal, on any Pretence whatſoever; If it was a Sin, which unrepented of, by the Doctrine of the Church of England, carried ſure and certain Damnation, without making all poſſible Reſtitution; he begged their Lordſhips to conſider what a Duty was here preſſed, on the Peril of Damnation, upon every Man's Conſcience that knew or believed there was Reſiſtance in the Revolution, and was conſcious to himſelf of being any ways aſſiſting or conſenting to this damnable Sin; and what muſt be the Conſequence, if theſe Doctrines, without any Reſerve or Exception, were preached throughout the Kingdom with Impunity. All which he hoped was ſufficient to ſatisfy their Lordſhips, that Dr. Sacheverell was guilty of the Charge exhibited againſt him in the firſt Article; and from their Lordſhips Juſtice, the Commons hoped his Puniſhment would be adequate to the Heinouſneſs of his Offence.

Sir John Hawles.

Sir John Hawles, in Maintenance of the firſt Article, ſhewed, that the Roman Emperors, under whom our Saviour and the Apoſtles lived, were generally Uſurpers; and yet, when they were poſſeſſed of Sovereign Power, the Apoſtles taught, that they ought to be obeyed: The ſame he held of ſuch of our Kings as had uſurped the Throne.

He further ſuggeſted, that Allegiance was as much due to an Uſurper, as to a lawful Prince: Or in other Words, that every Man, that could find Means to aſcend he Throne, became a lawful Sovereign the Moment he poſſeſſed himſelf of it, and had depoſed his Predeceſſor. And he was of Opinion, That the Doctor's maintaining the Doctrine

1709-10. 7 Annæ.

Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance was High Treaſon; though the Commons had been ſo merciful as to impeach him only of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

Mr. Stanhope.

Mr. Stanhope, in Maintenance of the firſt Article, ſaid, That thoſe who aſſerted, in general Terms, the abſolute Illegality of Reſiſtance, muſt do it with a Deſign to overthrow Her Majeſty's Title and Government; ſince, at the ſame Time they skreened themſelves under the Notion of profeſſing abſolute Paſſive Obedience to the Supreme Power, they could not conceal, that the real Object of this darling Doctrine, was a Prince on the other Side the Water; they could not otherwiſe be conſiſtent with themſelves: For in the ſame Diſcourſe to preach Paſſive and Unlimited Obedience to Magiſtrates, and to revile and defame Magiſtrates; to preach Non-Reſiſtance on any Pretence, and to encourage Sedition, were ſuch Contradictions as could no otherwiſe be reconciled, than by concluding, That, however they were pleaſed to colour and diſguiſe their Diſcourſes, their true End was to alienate the Peoples Affections from their preſent Governors: To inſinuate, that the Revolution itſelf was an Uſurpation: That whatever had been built on that Foundation was wrong; and to repreſent thoſe who had a Hand in it as Rebels and Traitors.

That it was not material, what the Opinions of ſome Divines have been: It was ſufficiently known what the Practice of the Church of England had been, when ſhe found herſelf oppreſſed; and appealed to the Practice of all Churches and Nations, how they behaved themſelves, when they found their Civil and Religious Rights invaded and oppreſſed by Tyranny.

He believed, There was not that Government in the World but had its Beginning in Reſiſtance, or Compact: And if Compact was admitted, there muſt likewiſe be admitted a Right to defend thoſe Rights accruing by Compact: That Grotius, in his Treatiſe De Belli & Pacis, L. 1. Cap. 4. Sect. 13. ſays, If the King hath one Part of the Supreme Power, and the other Part is in the Senate, or People; when the King ſhall invade that Part that doth not belong to him, it ſhall be lawful to oppoſe a juſt Force to him, becauſe his Power doth not extend ſo far. Which Poſition I hold to be true, even though the Power of making War ſhould be veſted only in the King; which muſt be underſtood only to relate to Foreign War: For as for Home, it is impoſſible for any to have a Share in the Supreme Power, and not to have likewiſe a Right to defend that Share.

This was exactly adapted to the Conſtitution of England; for that the Lords and Commons, and every Subject of Great Britain, had Rights, could not be denied: And to ſay, that, when a Prince ſhall invade all theſe Rights, the whole Collective Body of the Nation has no Way to vindicate thoſe Rights, was ſo inconſiſtent, and contrary to Reaſon, that it was to be wondered it could ever enter into the Mind of Man.

That, at the Revolution, it was not thought a black and odious Crime, to take up Arms for Defence of the Conſtitution: Many of their Lordſhips, and the beſt Part of the Nation, were concerned in it; and it was with much Gratitude to the greateſt of Queens, they remembered how great a Share Her Majeſty had in the Revolution: And after this, for the Doctor to give the injurious Epithets of Republicans, of Enemies, and Traitors to Church and State, to thoſe who were concerned in that Reſiſtance, was not to be borne: It would have become him to have conſidered firſt, who were concerned, and who had a Share in it. 1709-10. 8 Annæ.

That the Principles broached by the Doctor well enough became profeſſed Jacobites; and had they confined themſelves to their own Conventicles, it might have been conſiſtent with the mildeſt Government to ſuffer them to enjoy the Toleration, how Deſtructive ſoever their Principles were. But when they ſhould vent their Treaſons abroad, and occaſionally conform and take the Oaths to the Government, the better to deſtroy it: When they ſhould abjure the pretended Prince of Wales, but not forget him; and when the Pulpit of our Metropolis ſhould be proſtituted and polluted by venting Sedition againſt the beſt of Queens, it was high Time for their Lordſhips to animadvert upon it.

And having made a Panegyrick on the then Miniſtry, who had, he ſaid, compelled the Enemy to ſue for Peace, and they were about to reap the Fruits of a long expenſive War; At ſuch a critical Juncture, when it behoved us more than ever to be united, then did this pious Son of the Church, this Loyal Subject, this Paſſive-Obedience Gentleman, endeavour to create groundleſs Miſtruſts and Jealouſies of the Adminiſtration.—— He was, indeed, but an inconſiderable Tool of a Party, not worth the Trouble they had given their Lordſhips: But they looked upon it, that their Lordſhips Judgment in this Caſe would be giving a Sanction, which would determine what Doctrines of this Kind ſhould or ſhould not be preached; and they hoped their Lordſhips would inflict ſuch Puniſhment on this Offender, as ſhould deter others from committing the like Inſolence.

Sir Peter King's Arguments on the 2d Art.

Sir Peter King being aſſigned to maintain the ſecond Article, which charges the Doctor with aſſerting, That the Toleration granted by Law was unreaſonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable, &c. ſaid, It was true, that the Word Toleration was not mentioned in the Act, as the Doctor had obſerved in his Anſwer; but every Body knew, that the Exemption granted to Diſſenters by 1 W. & M. was called The Toleration Act; and the Doctor himſelf, in the 14th Page of his Sermon, had called it, The Toleration, where he ſaid, the Toleration was never intended to indulge and cheriſh ſuch Monſters and Vipers in our Boſom: And, again, in the 19th Page, where he ſays, The Diſſenters had advanced themſelves from the Religious Liberty their Sovereign had indulged them in, to claim a civil Right, and juſtle the Church out of her Eſtabliſhment, by hoiſting their Toleration into its Place.

And for the Doctor to affirm, That Hetrodoxy, or a different Opinion from any of the Articles of the Faith of our Church, almoſt neceſſarily infers Rebellion and High-Treaſon in the State; What could be a more direct breaking in upon, and disavowing the Toleration, than this? Was not this to maintain the Toleration granted by Law to be unreasonable, and the Allowance of it unwarrantable, when he knew every Denomination of Dissenters differed from the Church in some of her Articles?

Breaking

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Another Reflection on the Toleration was in Page 16, where he says, What could not be gained by Comprehension and Toleration, must be brought about by Moderation and Occasional Conformity: That is, what they could not do by open Violence, they will not fail by secret Treachery to accomplish: &c.

Was not this calling the Toleration an open Violence to the Church, and affirming that it was made with an Intent to destroy the Church, and maintaining that the Toleration was unreasonable, &c?

And as to that Part of the 2d Article, which charges him with asserting, That he is a False Brother, with relation to God, Religion, and the Church, who defends Toleration and Liberty of Conscience; he cited the 8th Page of his Sermon, where the Doctor says, If to defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and under Pretence of Moderation, to excuse the Separation, and lay the Fault upon the true Sons of the Church; If to court the Fanaticks in private, and hear them rail at and blaspheme the Church, and, upon Occasion, to justify the King's Murder; If to flatter both the Dead and the Living in their Vices, and tell the World, if they have Wit and Money they need no Repentance, and that only Fools and Beggers are damned; If these are the modish and fashionable Criterions of a true Churchman, God deliver us from all such False Brethren!

Here he made it one Mark of False Brethren, To defend Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, which was an evident Declaration against the Justice and Expediency of the Toleration.

That by his Reflection on Archbishop Grindall, he also designed to censure the Toleration; for he says, Page 20, Have they not, ever since their first unhappy Plantation in this Kingdom, by the Intercession of that false Son of the Church, Bishop Grindall, always improved and rose upon their Demands in the Permission of the Government? Insomuch, that Queen Elizabeth, who was deluded by that perfidious Prelate, to the Toleration of the Genevian Discipline, (the Discipline and Polity of the Dissenters), found it such an headstrong and encroaching Monster, that she foresaw it would endanger the Monarchy as well as the Hierarchy; and, like a Queen of true Resolution and pious Zeal for both, pronounced, That such were the restless Spirits of that factious People, that no Quiet was to be expected from them, till they were utterly suppressed: Which, like a prudent Princess, she did by wholesome Severities, that the Crown for many Years sat easy and flourishing on her Head.

Here he called the Archbishop a false Son of the Church, and a perfidious Prelate, for persuading the Queen, to grant a Toleration to Dissenters: And what was this in Effect, but to declare the Parliament were in the Wrong in granting a Toleration to the Dissenters? and that the Bishops, who were for tolerating them, were neither Fathers or Sons of the Church, but corrupt and perfidious Prelates? And what could he do more to enflame the Government against the Dissenters, than by recommending it as a noble Resolution and pious Zeal in Queen Elizabeth, utterly to suppress the Dissenters; and to recommend the Severities used in her Reign, because they were wholesome, and of happy Consequence to that renowned Queen.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

The last Charge in this Article was, The Doctor's asserting it to be the Duty of the Superior Pastors, to thunder out their Ecclesiastical Anathema's against Persons entitled to the Benefit of the Toleration, and insolently defying any Power on Earth to reverse those Sentences: For which he referred to the 25th Page of the Sermon, and observed, that the Doctor did in his Answer own this Charge in Effect; for he there affirmed, That some Sentences pronounced by the Pastors of the Church were ratified in Heaven: That some Persons exempted from Punishment by the Laws of the Land, might yet, by the Laws of Christ, be liable to such Sentences: And that Schism, or a causeless Separation from a Church, enjoining no sinful Terms of Communion, was a Sin which exposed the Person guilty of it to the Censures of the Church.—— Which was not only a weakening and censuring the Toleration, but a direct impugning the Queen's Supremacy, which by the Canon he was bound to maintain.

Lord Will. Paulet.

The Lord William Paulet being assigned to assist in Maintenance of the 2d Article, said, That the Nation had seen the good Effects of the Toleration, many of the Dissenters since it passed having become sincere Converts to the Church: That the Prejudices of the Dissenters generally wore off, and the Numbers daily decreased; and yet the Doctor had set forth Toleration in the most odious Colours, and factiously endeavoured to stir up the People against it: He hoped, therefore, their Lordships would, by an Exemplary Punishment, suitable to so high a Crime, vindicate the Authority of Parliaments, and effectually discourage such turbulent and seditious Preachers.

Mr. Cowper.

Mr. Cowper also was assigned to assist in maintaining the 2d Article; but there being nothing in his Argument but what Sir Peter King had already insisted on, it may very well be omitted here; though the Managers might think it proper at the Trial to enforce and inculcate the same Things over and over again, that they might make the deeper Impression on the Audience.

Mr. Thompson on the 3d Art.

The Court assembling again on Wednesday the 1st of March, Mr. Thompson endeavoured to maintain the Charge in the 3d Article, viz. That the Doctor had asserted, in Contradiction to a Vote of both Houses, That the Church was in a Condition of great Peril and Adversity under Her Majesty's Administration; and insinuated, that the Members who passed that Vote were themselves conspiring the Ruin of the Church, while they voted it out of Danger; alluding, by way of Parallel to that Assembly, who voted the Person of King Charles I. out of Danger, at the same Time they were conspiring his Destruction.

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

To prove this Part of the Charge he quoted a Paſſage in the 5th Page of the Doctor's Sermon; where he ſays of the Church of England, Her Holy Communion has been rent and divided by factious and Schiſmatical Impoſtors, her pure Doctrine corrupted and defiled, her primitive Worſhip and Diſcipline prophaned and abuſed, her ſacred Orders denied and villified, her Prieſts and Profeſſors, like St. Paul, calumniated, miſrepreſented, and ridiculed; her Altars and Sacraments proſtituted to Hypocrites, Deiſts, Socinians, and Atheiſts; and this done, I wiſh I could not ſay, without Diſcouragement, I am ſure with Impunity, not only by our profeſſed Enemies, but, which is worſe, by our pretended Friends and falſe Brethren.

Here the Manager obſerved, That none could proſtitute Altars, Sacraments, &c. to Deiſts and Atheiſts, but thoſe of his own Order; thoſe who were to puniſh ſuch Offences among the Clergy, their Spiritual Superiors; and whether they were not Part of Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, he ſubmitted to their Lordſhips.

Another Paſſage he cited for Proof of this Article, was in Page 18; where the Doctor ſays, Falſhood alway implies Treachery, and whether this was a Qualification for any one to be truſted, eſpecially with the Guardianſhip of our Church and Crown, let our Governors conſider: Whether this Reflection did not aim higher than the Adminiſtration, he ſubmitted to their Lordſhips.

The next Paſſage cited is in Page 20; where he ſays, And now are we under no Danger in theſe deplorable Circumſtances? Muſt we lull ourſelves under this ſad Repoſe, and in ſuch a ſtupid lethargick Security embrace our Ruin? When Eliſha, the great Prophet of God, was ſurrounded with an Hoſt of Enemies that ſought his Life, his blind Servant beheld not the Peril his Maſter was in, till his Eyes were opened by a Miracle, and he found himſelf in the Midſt of Horſes and Chariots of Fire: I pray God we be out of Danger; but we may remember the King's Perſon was voted to be ſo, at the Time his Murderers were conſpiring his Death.

That the Doctor would excuſe himſelf, indeed, in his Anſwer, by ſaying, that theſe deplorable Circumſtances proceeded from the Maturity of National Sins, &c. But it was plain he inſinuated and aſſerted, that this Danger was occaſioned by the Diſſention from the Church, which the Legiſlature apprehended to be no Danger to it, and therefore it did not become him to aſſert the contrary: And as to the Parallel between the Aſſembly who voted King Charles I. out of Danger, and the Members who voted the Church out of Danger, though the Doctor ſaid he meant no Reflection on the Members who paſſed that Vote, becauſe he never mentioned that Vote, and that they were not the ſame People who voted King Charles out of Danger, that conſpired his Ruin; the Doctor could not be ignorant, that it was in November, 1648, that King Charles was voted out of Danger; and how ſoon after the King's Trial and Death happened every Body knew; and though there might be ſome Alteration made in that Aſſembly, during that Time, the Perſons who conſpired his Deſtruction, were Part of that Aſſembly who voted him out of Danger; and it was not to be doubted but the Doctor intended his Alluſion in the ſame Manner. 1709-10. 8 Annæ.

And as to the Place of Scripture quoted by the Doctor, viz. That the blind Servant beheld not the Peril his Maſter Eliſha was in, till his Eyes were opened by a Miracle, and he found himſelf in the midſt of Horſes and Chariots of Fire. Theſe Horſes and Chariots of Fire, he obſerved, were not the Prophet's Enemies; ſo that he plainly perverted the Senſe of the Text, to make a ſtronger Impreſſion, and more effectually to delude the People.

The laſt Paſſage he cited to maintain this Article, was in the laſt Page, where ſpeaking of the Danger of the Church, the Doctor quotes a Text out of Lamentations, viz. Though ſhe lies bleeding of the Wounds ſhe received in the Houſe of her Friends; this Text, he ſaid, he could not find, and therefore it ſeemed to be a Lamentation of the Doctor's own making. Then, he obſerves, the Doctor goes on, Though the Ways of Sion may mourn for a Time, and her Gates be deſolate, her Prieſts ſigh, and ſhe in Bitterneſs, becauſe her Adverſaries be Chief, and her Enemies at preſent proſper; though among all her Lovers ſhe has few to comfort her, and many of her Friends have dealt treacherouſly with her, and are become her Enemies.

Theſe Paſſages he ſaid, he mentioned only to ſhew that the Doctor, by the moſt pathetick Expreſſions of his own, mixed with theſe Texts of Scripture, endeavoured to repreſent the Church of England to be in the utmoſt Danger.

And as to the Doctor's Pretence, That the Vote concerning the Church's Danger could not concern him, becauſe it was made four Years ago; he ſhould have obſerved, that the Words were, Whoſoever ſhall go about to inſinuate that the Church is in Danger, under Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration; and therefore it muſt relate to any Time during Her Majeſty's Reign.

And that the Doctor (whoſe Education would not permit us to preſume he ſinned through Ignorance) ſhould take upon him, in his private Capacity, to contradict the Senſe of the whole Nation, and caſt ſuch Aſperſions on his Superiors, this immoderate Zeal could only be intended to animate a deluded People to the Execution of ſeditious Deſigns.

But the Commons were ſo well ſatisfied of their Lordſhips true Concern for the Preſervation of the Conſtitution, that they could not imagine they would ſuffer ſuch Attempts to paſs without condign Puniſhment.

Mr. Compton alſo being aſſigned to maintain the third Article, ſaid, It had been one of the conſtant Artifices of the Enemies of the preſent happy Eſtabliſhment, to inſinuate that the Church was in a Condition of great Peril and Adverſity, in order to cover Deſigns they durſt not own; but this Aſſertion was never ſo boldly maintained, or with ſuch invidious and aggravating Circumſtances, as by the Criminal at their Lordſhips' Bar.——That, notwithſtanding the great Benefits the Church (of which he was a Member) reaped by the Revolution, he made that the very Period of Time when the Enemies of the Church firſt entertained Hopes of delivering her up to her worſt Adverſaries, and that, ever ſince, there had been a continued Series of Contrivances to ruin it: At the Revo- Mr. Compton.

lution by open Violence, and now, under Her Majesty's Administration, by secret Treachery: And, since neither the late nor the present Reign could escape his Invectives, it was evident for what Person he reserved his Panegyricks.

That there were no Grounds to compare the dutiful Proceedings of the late Parliament, who had Her Majesty's Thanks for their Unanimity and Zeal in her Service, to that Parliament with which he would maliciously draw a Parallel; nor was there the least Resemblance between Her Majesty's glorious Reign, and that unfortunate Administration; unless it were, that then, as now, the Ministers of the Church, though by by their Function Messengers of Peace, set up to be Trumpeters of Sedition, and Incendiaries to Rebellion: But the Commons hoped, that even this Resemblance would be determined, by their Lordships fixing such an Exemplary Punishment on this Offender, as should deter others from endeavouring to distract the Kingdom, by groundless Distrusts and Jealousies.

Lord Conings-by.

Lord Coningsby being assigned also to maintain the third Article, observed, That the Doctor's Sermon, preached at St. Paul's, from the Title Page to the Conclusion, was one malicious and seditious Assertion, that the Church of England was in the utmost Peril and Danger in the last Reign and the present; and was preached with an Intention to bring in the Pretender and Popery.

Mr. Dolben.

Mr. Dolben, in Maintenance of the third Article, observed, That the wicked Parallel of the Doctor's, might justly be turned upon him; for it was beyond a Suspicion, that he, and all his Abettors, were conspiring the Ruin and Destruction of the Church, while under the Disguise of a false Zeal, they prostituted her sacred Name, to carry on dark Designs, fatal to Church and State: And that they might take up a much juster Complaint, than that in the Doctor's Answer; namely, That hard was the Fate of that People, who, after twenty Years War, in Conjunction with so many great Allies, and with the Expence of so much Blood and Treasure, had been contending against Tyranny and Oppression, and which they might justly hope they had at last subdued; should then see all Europe enjoy the Fruits of their Labours, and they themselves only must be rendered incapable of the common Blessing; betrayed at Home to a Condition of perpetual Bondage, by such false Brethren as are at your Lordships Bar; (where then stood some of the greatest Divines in England, to countenance the Doctor and his Cause, viz. Dr. Stanhope, Dr. Atterbury, Dr. Smalridge, and Dr. Moss): Whereupon Lord Haversham moved the Lords to adjourn; and after their Return, the Lord Chancellor acquainted Mr. Dolben, That the Words as are at your Lordships Bar, needed Explanation: And Mr. Dolben answered, Thy had Relation only to the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr Serj. Parker on the fourth Article.

Mr. Serjeant Parker being assigned to make good the Charge in the fourth Article, viz. That the Doctor does falsly and maliciously suggest, That Her Majesty's Administration, both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Destruction of the Constitution: And that there are Men of Characters and Stations, both in Church and State, who are false Brethren, and do themselves weaken, undermine, and betray, and do encourage, and put in the Power of others, who are professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment. And chargeth Her Majesty, and those in Authority under Her, with a general Mal-Administration; and, as a publick Incendiary, he perswades Her Majesty's Subjects to keep up a Distinction of Factions and Parties, instils groundless Jealousies, and foments destructive Divisions among them, and excites and stirs them up to Arms and Violence: And that his said seditious and malicious Suggestions may make the stronger Impressions upon the Minds of Her Majesty's Subjects, he the said Henry Sacheverell does wickedly wrest and pervert divers Texts and Passages of Holy Scripture:

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

Observed, That the avowed Design of this Sermon, was to represent the extreme Perils and Distresses of the Church and Constitution, from false Brethren that are in the Administration, and countenanced by it. And beginning with the second Clause in this Article, viz. That he did falsly and maliciously suggest, That there are Men of Characters and Stations in Church and State, who are false Brethren, and do weaken, undermine, and betray, &c. To prove this, he cited p. 15. where the Doctor says, That they weaken, undermine, and betray in themselves, and encourage and put it in the Power of our professed Enemies, to overturn and destroy the Constitution and Establishment: That this run through his whole Discourse; and being affirmed of false Brethren in general, must be applied to every Sort of false Brother; and consequently, if there were Men of Characters and Stations, whom he represented as false Brethren, then he affirmed of them, and had undertaken to prove, That they did weaken, undermine, and betray the Constitution, &c.

That Pag. 21. he said, What a vast Scandal and Offence it must be, to see Men of Characters and Stations, thus shift and prevaricate with their Principles! What can unwary Persons conclude from this Tergiversation and Hypocrisy, but that all Religion is State of Craft and Imposture; that all Godliness is Gain; and that the Doctrines of the Church lie not so much in her Articles as her Honours and Revenues?

This was a full Charge of False Brotherhood upon Persons of Characters and Stations: And, according to the Description he had given above of False Brethren, that they did weaken, undermine, and betray, &c. he had charged Men of Characters and Stations, with Weakening, Undermining, and Betraying, &c.

That this was a general Arraignment of the Government: And, to put the Matter beyond all Doubt, he said, in Scripture-Words, Page 26, That the Church's Adversaries are Chief.

As to the 3d Clause in this Article, That he charged Her Majesty, and those in Authority, with a general Mal-Administration, he cited Page 14, where he said, These False Brethren in our Government do not singly, in private, spread their Poison, but (what is lamentable to be spoken) are suffered to combine into Bodies, and Seminaries, wherein Atheism, Deism, Tritheism, Socinianism, with all the hellish Principles of Fanaticism, Regicide, and Anarchy, are openly professed and taught, to corrupt and debauch the Youth of the Nation, in all Parts of it, down down to Poſterity, to the preſent Reproach and future Extirpation of our Laws and Religion.

That, Page 23, a Falſe Brother is repreſented, as relinquiſhing his old Friends and Principles, and betraying his own Party, for the little ſordid Lucre of Place or Preferment. And that the Falſe Brethren he mentions, as put into Places, are put in by our Governors, he plainly ſuggeſts, Page 18, when he bids the Governors conſider, whether they are fit to be entruſted, eſpecially with the Guardianſhip of our Church and Crown.

As to the firſt Clauſe in this Article, which charges him with ſuggeſting that Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration in Church and State tended to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution: This he obſerved was made out by what had been ſaid of the other two. All thoſe fatal Miſchiefs complained of in them, aroſe from the Adminiſtration; which therefore plainly tended to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution.

As to that Clauſe, which charged the Doctor as a publick Incendiary, with fomenting Factions and Parties, inſtilling groundleſs Fears and Jealouſies, &c. he ſaid, His Language of Forſaking old Friends and Principles, and betraying their Party, could have no other Drift, but the keeping up Diſtinctions, and inſtilling groundleſs Jealouſies; and though he pretended to approve of an Indulgence to ſcrupulous Conſciences, in Reality he approved of none; ſince he did not admit any one to have a Conſcience truly ſcrupulous, who differed from him; but all ſuch were Falſe Bretheren, and Villains, and to be ſtigmatized with all the other Names of Reproach was ſo liberal of.

And as to his inciting Her Majeſty's Subjects to Arms and Violence, this was moſt manifeſt from his ſpreading ſuch hideous Repreſentations of the Government, ſuch Outcries of the Church and true Religion being undermined, betrayed, and expoſed by thoſe in the Adminiſtration. This naturally tended to Rebellion; and therefore at Common Law, To bear the People in Hand, that the King's Government was erroneous, heretical, or unjuſt, whereby the Manner of the Government was arraigned or impeached, was held to be High Treaſon. Roll's Rep. p. 89, 90.

The laſt Part of the Charge, his perverting Texts of Scripture, he proved from the Paſſage concerning Eliſha, mentioned before by Mr. Thompſon, Page 21. And whether he ſhould impute that Miſtake to the Doctor's Ignorance, and taking it upon Hearſay, or to his Reſolution knowingly to pervert it, he left to the Doctor's Choice.

And whereas the Doctor ſaid, he was, to his great Comfort, charged in this Article only with ſuggeſting, and not maintaining, that Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration tended to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution, and hoped that bare Suggeſtions and Inſinuations ſhould not involve an Engliſh Subject in the Guilt and Puniſhment of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

He replied, That although this Charge had not been poſitive (as it was), it would be very extraordinary to imagine that, let a Man caſt never ſo many Scandals and Reproaches on the Government, if it were done by Way of Suggeſtion and Inſinuation, and the Charges were expreſsly maintained and avowed, there ſhould be no Crime in it, or not a high one: This was to ſay that Sedition and expoſing the Government were lawful, only the Manner was to be taken care of; that if you do it by Suggeſtions, which every Body will underſtand, and which will have their full Effect, yet you may be ſafe; for thoſe who come to judge you are not to underſtand you, though every Body elſe does. 1709-10. 8 Annæ.

That his Lamentation with which he concluded his Anſwer, That hard was the Lot of the Miniſters of the Goſpel, &c. was a moſt inſolent Reflection on the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, and was not inſerted by Way of Defence, but to inſinuate that Dr. Sacheverell had been proſecuted only for doing his Duty as a Clergyman.—— But was the Story of Eliſha, as he told it, an honeſt Quotation? Were the Enemies that were Chief, and the Adverſaries that at preſent proſpered, no particular Perſons now in being? Was his Sermon an Exhortation to Piety and Virtue? Was it not manifeſtly a Trumpet of Rebellion? an expoſing the Faults of his Governors to make their Perſons hated?—The Commons had the greateſt Veneration for the Clergy of the Church of England, who were glorious through the whole Chriſtian World, for their Preaching and Writing, and their Steadineſs to the Proteſtant Religion in the utmoſt Danger; and, it was with Regret and Trouble, that they found themſelves obliged to bring before their Lordſhips Bar one of that Order: But when they conſidered Dr. Sacheverell diveſting himſelf of all the becoming Qualities proper for his Order, of all that peaceful, charitable Temper, Chriſtianity requires; and, with Rancour and Malice, branding all who differed from him (though through Ignorance) with the Titles of Hypocrites, Rebels, Traitors, Devils; reviling and expoſing them, conducting them to Hell, and leaving them there, &c. and doing this at a Time when all Europe was in War, and nothing could preſerve us from falling into the Hands of the Grand Enemy and Oppreſſor, but our Unanimity: That he ſhould labour to ſap the Eſtabliſhment, railing and declaiming againſt the Government, crying, To Arms; and blowing a Trumpet in Sion, to engage his Country in Seditions and Tumults, and overthrow the beſt Conſtitution, and betray the beſt Queen that ever made a People happy; and this with Scripture in his Mouth.——The Commons looked upon it, that he had ſevered himſelf from the reſt of the Clergy; and were in no Fear of being thought Diſcouragers of thoſe who preach Virtue and Piety, becauſe they proſecuted him who preached Sedition and Rebellion; or to have any Deſign to leſſen the Reſpect and Honour that is due to the Clergy, by bringing him to Puniſhment who diſgraced the Order.

Mr. Secretary Boyle, and Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, aſſiſted alſo in maintaining the Charge in the fourth Article; but there being nothing material in their Arguments that had not been touched on before, they are deſignedly omitted; and, indeed, if all the Invectives and ill Language were weeded out of this Trial, it would have come into a much narrower Compaſs.

On

1709-10. 8 Annæ.

The Managers conclude.

On Thurſday the 2d of March, the Court being met again, Mr. Lechmere obſerved, That the Commons had made their Impeachment good in every Part: And having given a ſhort Abſtract of the Managers Arguments, he added, That the Commons had gone through their Charge together, that their Lordſhips might have it entire; but they reſerved to themſelves the Liberty of Replying, and every other legal Advantage that ſhould ariſe to them in the Progreſs of their Impeachment.

The Court meeting again on Friday the 3d of March; and the Doctor's Counſel, being directed to proceed in his Defence, ſaid,

The Defence made by the Doctor's Counſel.

As to the Charge contained in the firſt Article, viz. His maintaining unlimited Non-Reſiſtance, the Doctor had indeed affirmed the utter Illegality of Reſiſtance to the Supreme Power, on any Pretence whatſoever: But this could never be interpreted as a Reflection on the neceſſary Means uſed to bring about the Revolution; for the Supreme Power was the Legiſlative Power, which was not then reſiſted, the Revolution taking Effect by the Lords and Commons concurring and aſſiſting in it.

That, by the happy Conſtitution under which we live, a Subject of England, was not to be made Criminal, by a laboured Conſtruction of doubtful Words; or, when that would not ſerve, by reſorting to his Meaning. That it had been Reſolved by their Lordſhips, in Sir Samuel Barnardiſton's Caſe, That Inuendo's, or ſuppoſed or forced Conſtructions ought not to be allowed; and if there were any Doubt or Uncertainty in the Doctor's Expreſſions, they hoped the moſt favourable Conſtruction would be put upon them.

But the main Objection they obſerved was, That the Doctor's Aſſertion of the Illegality of Reſiſtance muſt neceſſarily be underſtood of the Executive Power: If it be utterly unlawful to Reſiſt in any Caſe, then it was ſo at the Revolution; and from thence the Conſequence was drawn, That the Doctor was guilty of maintaining, That the neceſſary Means uſed to bring about the Revolution were odious and unjuſtifiable. To this they anſwered, That the Doctor had not, in any Part of his Sermon, applied this general Aſſertion to the Revolution; and 'twas one Thing expreſly to affirm the Revolution was ſuch a Caſe as ought not to be excepted out of the general Rule; and another Thing not to make the Exception: That extraordinary Caſes, Caſes of Neceſſity were always implied, though not expreſſed in the General Rule: That the General Rule ought always to be preſſed, but the Exceptions were never to be particularly ſtated. To point out every ſuch Caſe before-hand, was as impoſſible, as it was for a Man in his Senſes not to perceive plainly when ſuch a Caſe happens.

That the ſame Apoſtle, who enjoined Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance to the Higher Powers, commanded alſo Servants to obey their Maſters, and Children to obey their Parents in all Things. Notwithſtanding which general Precepts, many Caſes might happen wherein it might be not only unfit, but ſinful, for Servants to obey their Maſters, or Children to obey their Parents; and yet the Apoſtle never thought it proper to ſtate or mention thoſe Caſes; but contented himſelf to preſs the Duty of Subjection in general, leaving ſuch Caſes (when they happened) to juſtify themſelves. 1709-10. 8 Annæ.

That the Doctor's Aſſertion of the Illegality of Reſiſtance to the ſupreme Power, on any Pretence whatſoever, in general Terms, without expreſſing any Exception, was alſo warranted by the Authority of the Church, and was agreeable to the Laws of England: That the Doctor was by Law obliged to read the Homilies, in which this Duty was preſſed in much ſtronger Terms, without any Limitation or Exception; and was it Criminal for a Man to preach that Doctrine which 'twas his Duty to read?

That had this ſlaviſh Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance been firſt branded with its indelible Mark of Infamy, and the Right and indiſpenſible Duty of Reſiſtance plainly ſhewn; had all the ſlaviſh Notions of the Common Law diſperſed in our Law Books, which gave Countenance to this Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance been firſt weeded out, and ſome few Acts of Parliament, entirely agreeable with this ſlaviſh Doctrine, firſt repealed; had the People been ſet right in the Notions of their Obedience, and the Miniſters of the Goſpel inſtructed by an Act of Parliament, what Doctrine they ought to preach, and what not, and the Doctor had afterwards erred, their Lordſhips might then have looked upon him as an obſtinate Offender.

But as this Doctrine of the Illegality of Reſiſtance on any Pretence whatſoever, was the Doctrine of the Church, it had alſo been confirmed by the Legiſlature, without making any particular Exception: And whatever Meaſures might have been taken by the People, in Caſes of the laſt Neceſſity, to preſerve their Liberties; yet in no Age could an Inſtance be given, no not in the Reigns of thoſe Princes who had been depoſed, That this Doctrine of the Right of Reſiſtance, was ever permitted to be aſſerted by any particular Perſon: But on the contrary, in the Reign of King Edward II. when an Act of Parliament paſſed for the Baniſhment of the two Spencers, the Reaſon of their Baniſhment is recited to be, for that they had affirmed and publiſhed in Writing, that Homage and Allegiance was due more by reaſon of the Crown, than by reaſon of the Perſon of the King; and that if the King did not demean himſelf according to Reaſon, in the Exerciſe of his Government, his Subjects might remove him: And ſince that Removal could not be by Courſe of Law, they might therefore remove him by Force. And my Lord Coke in his Reports, in Calvin's Caſe, ſtiles the Opinion of the Spencers, a damned Opinion. Here many Acts of Parliament were recited, that condemned Reſiſtance, and particularly, the Act for the Attainder of the Regicides, wherein it is declared, That by the undoubted and Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor both together, in Parliament, or out of Parliament; nor the People, collectively or repreſentatively, nor any other Perſons whatſoever, ever had, have, hath, or ought to have, any coercive Power over the Kings of this Realm. And by the 13th of Car. 2. Seſſ. 2. cap. 1. all Officers in Corporations are required to ſwear, That it is not lawful upon any Pretence, to take up Arms againſt the King. And by the 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. Several Officers and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, are required to ſubſcribe the Truth of this Aſſertion: And though it might be objected, That this Oath was now diſpenſed with, the Act was not yet repealed; and if it was, the Propoſition was never the leſs true, becauſe it was not ſworn: If it was true when it was ſworn, the Propoſition was equally true before and after: And ſince that Oath had been taken by ſo many of the Peers and Commons, no Man would pretend to queſtion the Truth of the Propoſition.

As to that Part of the Charge, that King William in his Declaration diſclaimed the leaſt Imputation of Reſiſtance; though the Doctor had ſpoken impróperly, yet he had ſpoken innocently: For the Reſiſtance the Doctor mentions his late Majeſty to have diſclaimed, could have no ſuch Meaning as the Managers would put upon it: He was a Sovereign Prince, and might reſiſt when he pleaſed; and the Doctor had elſewhere ſhewn, he meant Conqueſt by Reſiſtance: And that the Words caſting black and odious Colours, were ſo far from referring to his late Majeſty's diſclaiming the Imputation of Reſiſtance, that they conclude the Sentence that went before it.

The Doctor's Counſel afterwards defended him againſt the Charge in the remaining three Articles, but the Doctor having given us an Abſtract of their Arguments himſelf in the following Speech, after his Counſel had concluded, I ſhall content my ſelf with giving that Speech entire, which is eſteemed one of the fineſt Pieces of Oratory we have in Engliſh.

The Defence made by the Doctor himſelf;

Dr. SACHEVERELL. My Lords, the Defence made by my Counſel has been ſo full and particular, and the Trial it ſelf drawn out into ſo great a Length, that I ſhould not add to your Lordſhips Trouble, by ſaying any Thing for my ſelf, did I not think that in ſuch a Cauſe as this (wherein the Doctrine of our Church, the Dignity of that Holy Order to which I belong, and even the common Intereſt of Chriſtianity it ſelf, are ſo nearly concerned) it becomes me not to be altogether ſilent.

For, my Lords, It has been owned by ſome of the Managers for the Honourable Houſe of Commons, that though I am the Perſon impeached, yet my Condemnation is not the Thing principally aimed at. I am it ſeems, an inſignificant Tool of a Party, not worth regarding; the avowed Deſign of my Impeachment is, by the Means of it to procure an eternal and indelible Brand of Infamy to be fixed, in a Parliamentary Way, on all thoſe who maintain the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance, and to have the Clergy directed what Doctrines they are to preach, and what not: And therefore, as inſignificant as I am in my ſelf, yet the Conſequences of my Trial (if rightly repreſented to your Lordſhips by ſome of thoſe Gentlemen) are of the higheſt Moment and Importance. 1709 10. 9 Annæ.

Since I am the unfortunate Occaſion of bringing theſe Matters in Judgment before your Lordſhips, it will behoove me, I think, after what has been pleaded in my Behalf by my Counſel learned in the Law, to ſay ſomewhat alſo for my ſelf, in Order to clear the Innocence of my Intentions, and remove that Load of Guilt and Infamy which may be laid upon me, ſhould your Lordſhips determine (as I truſt in God you will not) that the Articles of Impeachment exhibited, have been made good againſt me.

With your Lordſhips Permiſſion then, I ſhall lay before you ſome few General Remarks, which, in my humble Opinion, may be added to what my Counſel have already obſerved, concerning the Methods taken by the Managers for the Honourable Houſe of Commons, to prove and ſupport the Articles of their Charge: And ſhall then, with your Lordſhips Leave, ſay ſomewhat ſeverally to the Articles themſelves, which may ſerve to remind your Lordſhips of what my Counſel before offered more at large, and with greater Advantage.

My Lords, the Charge brought againſt me in theſe Articles, is of a very high and heinous Nature; and had it been as clearly made out, as it has been ſtrongly affirmed, it would juſtly have expoſed me to a very ſevere Sentence: But the more heinous the Charge is, the more evident and undeniable, I ſhould think, the Proof ought to be. And how, my Lords, has this Charge been ſupported in the ſeveral Articles of it? By plain, direct, and expreſs Paſſages, produced and read to your Lordſhips out of my Sermons; or by Intendments, unneceſſary Implications, and ſtrained Conſtructions? By laying entire Sentences before your Lordſhips, and relying upon what was manifeſtly contained in them; or by piecing broken Sentences, and conjoining diſtant and independent Paſſages, in order to make me ſpeak what I never thought of?

I am unacquainted, my Lords, with the Methods of legal Proof, and little thought I ſhould have had this Occaſion of enquiring into them. But, as far as I am able to comprehend any Thing of this Nature, I ſhould think, that there cannot be a clearer Indication that I am not guilty of having aſſerted, what I am charged by the ſeveral Articles to have ſaid, than that ſo many Hours Learning and Eloquence have been employed in proving me to have ſaid it. Had I really affirmed thoſe Propoſitions for which I am accuſed, my Sermons being before your Lordſhips, the Places wherein ſuch Propoſitions were directly contained, might have been referred to, and read, with the ſame Eaſe as my Counſel referred to the Paſſages contained in the ſeveral Writings and Sermons of the Reverend Fathers, and other eminent Divines of our Church, wherein they taught the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance in the ſame Extent as I maintained it, or in Terms much ſtronger.

Theſe Paſſages produced by my Counſel, were barely read to your Lordſhips: No Argument, no Colours were uſed, becauſe none were neceſſary, to prove what Propoſitions were laid down down in thoſe Paſſages. Whereas, to prove me guilty of having aſſerted what is laid to my Charge, after my Sermons and Prefaces were read to your Lordſhips, much Art and Induſtry were uſed to perſuade your Lordſhips, that ſuch Aſſertions were really contained in them.

My Lords, When my Words were capable of two Senſes, the worſt and moſt invidious, though at the ſame Time the moſt ſtrained and unnatural Conſtruction, has been always made of them. Nay, when my Words were ſo plain and expreſs, that it was impoſſible to put any Criminal Gloſſes or Colours upon them, I have been accuſed of meaning the direct contrary to what I have ſaid: And when I preſſed the Duty of Allegiance to the Queen, your Lordſhips were told, that it was moſt certain I meant the Pretender.

To aggravate my Guilt, I have been accuſed, not only for what I am ſuppoſed to have ſaid, but for what I am allowed not to have ſaid; not only for what I have taken Notice of in my Sermons, but for what I have paſſed by unobſerved: I have been charged with Negative Crimes; as if what I omitted to ſay, had been omitted with Deſign, and my Silence it ſelf were Criminal.

Theſe, my Lords, are the Methods that have been made uſe of to prove me guilty of Crimes, which, if proved, might affect my Liberty and Fortune: No favourable Allowances have been made to a Miniſter of the Goſpel, diſcharging the Duty of his Function, and rebuking Vice and Irreligion, with an honeſt and well-meant Zeal; but ſometimes perhaps carrying him into Expreſſions too open and unguarded. I could add, my Lords, if ſuch a Complaint might not be thought improper from one in my Circumſtances, that, in the Courſe of my Accuſation, I have been ſtiled a Criminal, and treated as ſuch by ſome of theſe Honourable Gentlemen, with a Degree of Scorn and Indignity, from which I hoped my Sacred Profeſſion, my preſent unhappy Condition, and a Regard to this ſolemn and awful Judicature, might have ſcreened me.

But, my Lords, I lay aſide all Complaints of this Nature, and with your Lordſhips Leave, ſhall proceed to make ſome few, ſhort Obſervations upon the ſeveral Branches of the Charge exhibited againſt me.

to the 1ſt Article;

I am charged, my Lords, in the firſt Article, with having maintained, That the neceſſary Means, uſed to bring about the late happy Revolution, were odious and unjuſtifiable; in Proof of which it has been urged, That I have in General Terms aſſerted, the utter Illegality of Reſiſtance to the Supreme Power, upon any Pretence whatſoever. My Lords, the Reſiſtance in that Paſſage by me condemned, is no where by me applied to the Revolution; nor is it applicable to the Caſe of the Revolution, the Supreme Power not being then reſiſted.

My Lords, I neither expreſly applied my Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance to the Caſe of the Revolution, nor had I the leaſt Thoughts of including the Revolution under my general Aſſertion. I expreſſed this Doctrine in the ſame general Terms in which I found it delivered by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, I taught it, as I had learnt it, from the Homilies of our Church, and as I was enjoined to teach it, by the Articles of our Religion: I uſed no other Language than what had been uſed by our firſt Reformers, by a continued Series of Right Reverend Prelates, and other celebrated Divines now with God, and by many of thoſe venerable Fathers before whom I ſtand, and what is perfectly agreeable to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm. I had little Reaſon to apprehend that I could ever have been accuſed by the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons to your Lordſhips as a Criminal, or as an Aſperſer of the Memory of the late King, for preaching this Doctrine; when others, who preached the ſame Doctrine, in the ſame Terms before their late Majeſties, before our preſent Gracious Sovereign, (whom I pray God long to preſerve!) before each Houſe of Parliament, before this very Houſe of Commons, have met with publick Approbation. But ſince it is my ſingular Misfortune to be accuſed, for what others have received Thanks, in ſome Inſtances conveyed to them by ſeveral of the Managers themſelves, I do with all humble Confidence rely upon your Lordſhip's Juſtice; not doubting but that the learned Judges, if thought neceſſary to be conſulted, will declare what I have in this Caſe aſſerted to be warranted by Law, and the Right Reverend the Biſhops will affirm it to be the Doctrine of the Goſpel.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

The Doctrine I preached being the Doctrine of the Homilies of our Church, not expreſſed only in a few particular Paſſages of thoſe Homilies, but perfectly agreeable to the whole Tenor, the main Scope and Deſign of them; and thoſe Homilies being eſtabliſhed by the Thirty-Nine Articles, as containing godly and wholeſome Doctrine; and thoſe Articles being confirmed by the 13th of Queen Elizabeth; and that Statute being made perpetual and fundamental to our Conſtitution by the late Act of Union; I leave it to your Lordſhips to conſider, how far the Condemnation of me, on the Account of that Doctrine, may affect, and ſhake the preſent Frame of the Britiſh Conſtitution in Church and State, and tend to diſſolve the Union of the Two Kingdoms.

to the 2d Article;

My Lords, Upon the Second Article, I would humbly pray your Lordſhips to conſider, that I have no where in my Sermon ſhewn any the leaſt Diſlike of the Indulgence granted by Law to Diſſenters; that, on the contrary, I have declared my Approbation of it in the moſt expreſs Terms imaginable, which I beg Leave once more to repeat to your Lordſhips out of my Sermon preached at St. Paul's. I would not (I there ſay) be miſunderſtood, as if I intended to caſt the leaſt invidious Reflection upon that Indulgence, which the Government hath condeſcended to give them; which, I am ſure, all thoſe who wiſh well to our Church are ready to grant to Conſciences truly ſcrupulous; let them enjoy it in the full Limits the Law hath preſcribed.

My

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

My Lords, This then was, and ſtill is my ſincere Opinion; nor am I conſcious that I have uttered one Word inconſiſtent with it. I have indeed blamed, and perhaps with ſome Warmth and Earneſtneſs blamed, the Abuſes which Men of no Conſcience have made, of the legal Exemption granted to Conſciences truly ſcrupulous: Nor could I think that thoſe Reprehenſions of mine, would have drawn upon me the Diſpleaſure of any ſincere Chriſtian, which were levelled againſt Hypocrites, Socinians, Deiſts, and ſuch as, under the Umbrage of that Act, which permits Proteſtant Diſſenters, and thoſe only, to ſerve God, every Man in his own Way, think themſelves at Liberty to be of no Proteſtant Congregation, of no Religion at all. I will farther ingenuouſly own to your Lordſhips, that I had in my Eye ſome Abuſes made of that Act by the Diſſenters themſelves; who, I am told, do (both Paſtors and People) rarely obſerve the Qualifications preſcribed by that Act; and who erect Seminaries for educating Youth in Principles oppoſite to the Doctrine, Diſcipline and Worſhip of our Church: Whereas that Act was intended for the Eaſe of thoſe, whoſe Minds, through the unhappy Prejudices of Education, were already eſtranged from the Church; not, as I humbly conceive, to indulge Men in taking the moſt effectual Methods to propagate and perpetuate their Schiſm.

My Lords, of any Favours to Diſſenters granted, or intended by the Law, I have no where complained. Of Toleration, a Word unknown to our Laws, and implying, as I am informed, much more than our Law-givers deſigned, if I have ſaid any Thing offenſive, I may, I hope, reaſonably preſume, that it will not be judged by your Lordſhips in any wiſe to reflect on that Act of Exemption, which I have ſpoken of in Terms, no ways, I think, misbecoming a good Subject, or betraying any Want of Chriſtian Moderation. Nor is there, my Lords, any Want of it, I conceive, in affirming that this Act, which relieves ſome Diſſenters from legal Puniſhments, to which they were before obnoxious, hath not anyways altered the Nature of Schiſm, or extinguiſhed the Obligations to Church-Communion; which is an Evangelical Duty, incumbent on all Chriſtians by the Rules of the Goſpel, antecedent to all ſecular Laws, and can by no human Power be diſpenſed with. If the Church of England, my Lords, impoſes no unlawful Terms of Communion, as ſhe certainly does not, then all Separatiſts from her Communion, will, notwithſtanding the Indulgence, continue to be guilty of Schiſm; The Conſequence of which Guilt may ſtill reſt upon their Souls, however it may ceaſe to affect their Bodies or Eſtates. For, as no human Law can render that lawful which God hath forbidden, ſo neither can it make that void, which God hath commanded.

My Lords, I am accuſed under this Head, of maintaining, That it is the Duty of ſuperior Paſtors to thunder out their Eccleſiaſtical Anathema's againſt Perſons entitled to the Benefit of the Toleration: I hope it hath evidently appeared to your Lordſhips, that I advance no ſuch Poſition. Sure I am, that my Words do not in themſelves carry ſuch a Meaning, nor does the Connection of my Diſcourſe require that Senſe, or eaſily admit it. Schiſmaticks, my Lords, are not the only Perſons againſt whom Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures may be denounced; the Works of Darkneſs, which I referred to, as fit to be reproved, in that Part of my Sermon, where I ſpeak of theſe Cenſures, are of the ſame Kind with thoſe mentioned by the Apoſtle, whoſe Words I produced, all lewd and immoral Practices: Againſt theſe, my Lords, and againſt Hereſies, and Blaſphemies, (a black Catalogue of which has been diſplayed before your Lordſhips) I thought the Anathema's of the Church would be well employed; ſuch Anathema's, I doubt not, my Lords, would be ratified in Heaven, and would therefore, by any Power on Earth, be irreverſible.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

As to Archbiſhop Grindall, though I may ſeem to have uſed ſome undue Aſperity of Expreſſion concerning him, yet I charged him with nothing but what I had good Grounds for, from our Hiſtorians. It hath been made appear to your Lordſhips, that, on the Account of his Remiſſneſs in Church-Government, he lived and died under the High Diſpleaſure of Queen Elizabeth; and whether therefore he, or that Glorious Queen, ſhall bare the Blame of his Diſgrace and Sufferings, is with all Humility ſubmitted to your Lordſhips.

I hope, my Lords, I ſtand clear in your Opinions of the Charge advanced againſt me, in the two firſt Articles; and as my own Conſcience acquits, ſo I truſt your Lordſhips will acquit me, of whatever is laid to my Charge in the Third.

to the 3d Article.

My Lords, I neither have ſuggeſted, nor do in my Conſcience believe, that the Church is in the leaſt Peril or Adverſity from Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration: So far am I from any ſuch Thoughts, that I am entirely ſatisfied of Her being a moſt affectionate Nurſing-Mother to it. But I hope I may ſay, without Offence, that the Church may be in Peril from other Cauſes, without any Reflection upon Her Majeſty's Government, or any Contradiction to Her Royal Proclamation, and the Reſolution of both Houſes of Parliament, four Years ago. If the Church be in Danger, when the Chriſtian Religion is evidently ſo, I hope it will be thought no Crime to ſay, It has ſcarce ever been in greater Danger than it is now, ſince Chriſt had a Church upon Earth. For, beſides that Deluge of Profaneneſs and Immorality, which overſpreads the whole Kingdom; beſides the Variety and growing Strength of thoſe Schiſms which weaken and divide us, and of thoſe Heterodox Opinions, and damnable Hereſies, which are daily publiſhed and propagated among us; I verily believe, that never were the Miniſters of Chriſt ſo abuſed and vilified; never was the Divine Authority of the Holy Scriptures ſo arraigned and ridiculed; never was Infidelity and Atheiſm it ſelf ſo impudent and bare-faced; never was ſuch horrid Blaſphemies printed in any Chriſtian State, from the Foundation of Chriſtianity to this Day.

Out

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

Out of the many Inſtances of this Kind, which, being ready at Hand, I could have produced to your Lordſhips, I have ſelected a few only; but thoſe ſuch, as I am perſuaded, your Lordſhips could not hear without Horror and Aſtoniſhment. Pardon me, my Lords, if my Apprehenſion of the ſad Conſequences we may expect from ſuch crying Abominations, have forced from me ſome Expreſſions, which, upon a leſs Occaſion, might ſeem too harſh and vehement. A Man that dreads no Danger from ſuch unparalleled Iniquities, that do as it were call down God's ſevereſt Judgments upon that poor Church and Nation, wherein they are openly and daringly committed, muſt be dead in his Love for his Country and Religion. If I have diſcloſed ſuch a frightful and deteſtable Scene of Impiety, which by reaſon of your Lordſhips high Stations and great Employments, might poſſibly lie undiſcovered to your Sight before; I ſhall think my ſelf happy, whatever ſhall befall me, if I may by God's Grace become the mean Inſtrument of putting a Stop to that Overflowing of Ungodlineſs and Blaſphemy which as yet no Laws, no Proclamations, how well ſoever deſigned, and how often ſoever repeated, have been able to reſtrain.

Nor ought I, my Lords, to forget, though it was forgotten by the honourable Managers, another Ground of Danger ariſing to this Church, from the Attempts of Popiſh Emiſſaries, by me mentioned, I hope without the leaſt Offence, in my Sermon at St. Paul's; where I ſay, It were highly to be wiſhed, that thoſe excellent Laws, made for the Defence and Security of the Church, were at preſent put ſtrictly in Execution; for the Roman Catholick Agents, and Miſſionaries, that ſwarm about this great City, as 'twere in Defiance and Contempt of them, were never more buſy in making Proſelytes to their Superſtition and Idolatry, and perverting and debauching Her Majeſty's Subjects in every Corner of our Streets. I have not, my Lords, been called upon to prove the Truth of this Paſſage, nor has it been reckoned among the falſe Inſinuations I have made, That the Church is in Danger. I pray God the Church may be in no Danger, upon any of theſe Accounts! Her Majeſty, your Lordſhips, and the Commons, have indeed provided againſt theſe Dangers by wholeſome Laws, and I hope I did not exceed the Limits of my Function, when, being called to preach before Magiſtrates, I exhorted them to prevent theſe Dangers, by putting thoſe Laws ſtrictly in Execution.

Juſt had been the Indignation of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, juſt would be your Lordſhips moſt ſevere Reſentments, if by any Parallel by me drawn, I had inſinuated that the Members of both Houſes, who paſſed the Vote concerning the ſafe and flouriſhing Condition of the Church, had been then conſpiring its Ruin. I have already purged myſelf from this Imputation, by obſerving that the Parallel, aſcribed to me, implies, that they who voted King Charles I. to be out of Danger, and thoſe who conſpired his Death, were the very ſame Perſons, whereas it is certain they were not; for, my Lords, the Vote about the King's Safety, was paſſed by Lords and Commons an Year and half before his execrable Murther, which had been contrived by the Army, and was perpetrated by a pretended Ordinance of a ſmall Remnant of the Houſe of Commons (not a tenth Part of the whole), after the reſt of the Members had been impriſoned or ſecluded, and without the Concurrence of the Houſe of Peers, who totally rejected it. You have had, my Lords, a very different Repreſentation of this Fact made by one of the learned Managers: But this, my Lords, is the real Truth, as recited in the Act of Parliament for the Attainder of the King's Murtherers; and is an Evidence, that I could not poſſibly mean by any odious Parallel to inſinuate, that the Members of both Houſes, who paſſed the Vote concerning the Safety of the Church, were then conſpiring its Ruin.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

I humbly crave your Lordſhips Patience yet a little farther, whilſt I ſpeak what is alledged in the fourth Article, which charges me with many Crimes of a very high and flagrant Nature; none of which have been endeavoured to be proved upon me, otherwiſe than from ſuppoſed Suggeſtions, and undetermined Expreſſions; and I muſt ſtill, with your Lordſhips Leave, humbly inſiſt upon it, that where the Expreſſions are doubtful, there the favourable Senſe is always to be preferred. to the 4th Article;

After all that has been ſaid by the learned Managers for the Commons, What Miniſter of State, I beſeech your Lordſhips, have I been proved to reflect upon, directly or indirectly? Where, and how, do I, by any Suggeſtion, charge Her Majeſty, or thoſe in Authority under Her, with a general Mal-Adminiſtration? How do I perſuade Her Subjects to keep up a Diſtinction of Parties and Factions, while I reprove thoſe who divide us by knaviſh Diſtinctions, and while I perſuade my Fellow-Subjects to loſe and forget them? How is it poſſible, I ſhould ſtir up the People to Arms and Violence, when I am endeavouring to convince them of the utter Illegality of Reſiſtance upon any Pretence whatſoever? Theſe Things, my Lords, ſeem to be inconſiſtent, unleſs a Man may be thought a Rebel for recommending Loyalty, or ſeditious for preaching againſt Sedition.

I remember, indeed, at the Opening of this Charge againſt me, that one of the Managers for the Houſe of Commons, vouchſafed to offer his charitable Aſſiſtance towards reconciling this ſeeming Inconſiſtency; for he was pleaſed to ſuppoſe that, when I ſpake againſt reſiſting the Sovereign, I had not our Gracious Queen, but ſome other Perſon in View; and that I might therefore, agreeably to my Principles of Non-Reſiſtance, ſtir up the People to Arms and Violence againſt Her Sacred Majeſty. Your Lordſhips will once more pardon my Earneſtneſs, if I call God to Witneſs, that I utterly deteſt any ſuch traitorous Intention, and I ſhould, in my own Opinion, be unworthy of the Name of a Chriſtian, if I could give my ſelf Leave to caſt ſuch a black and groundleſs Imputation upon any one in like Circumſtances with mine, who had given all poſſible Evidence of his Duty and Affection to the preſent Government. My Lords, I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance to Her Majeſty, and that of Abjuration againſt the Pretender; and when therefore I preached the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance, it is moſt apparent, that the Government, which I perſuaded my Fellow-Subjects not to reſiſt, is the preſent Government; and I humbly conceive, that the preſent Government can never be overturned, if it be never reſiſted.

How true a Zeal and Affection I have always borne to Her Majeſty's Perſon and Government, I leave to be judged by your Lordſhips, and the whole World, from thoſe publick Demonſtrations which I have given of it, at all Times, when I had Occaſion to make mention of either. I hope your Lordſhips will pardon me, if I refer to ſome of my own printed Expreſſions, as an evident Proof of my unfeigned Duty and Allegiance. If to call it the moſt ineſtimable Bleſſing this Nation could enjoy, that Her Majeſty, the good and pious Relict of the Royal Family, ſits now happily upon the Throne of Her Anceſtors; If to pray that God may long preſerve Her for the Comfort and Support of the Church, as the only Security, under God, it has to depend upon; If earneſtly to contend for the Safety, Rights, and Eſtabliſhment of Her Majeſty, together with thoſe of the Church; If to vindicate Her Majeſty's Title to the Crown againſt the Uſurpations, Pretences and Encroachments of Her Adverſaries, and to aſſert Her Right to the Throne to have been ſo clear, manifeſt, and undoubted, that even Her worſt Enemies (could ſuch a Pious Princeſs be ſuppos'd to have any) muſt acknowledge it; That ſhe was proclaimed as 'twere by the Voice of God, in the univerſal Joy, Satisfaction, and Unanimity of Her Subjects; That Her perſonal Merit exempted from that, made Her worthy of a brighter Diadem than ſhe wears; If to perſuade Her Subjects, with the moſt hearty Zeal, and Generoſity, to enter into a neceſſary War, for the Defence of Her Majeſty, and the Common Preſervation of our Church, Liberties, and Conſtitution, againſt a powerful Adverſary; If to beſeech God to proſper ſo good an Undertaking, to give an happy Event and Iſſue to ſuch a Righteful Cauſe, to crown our Arms with Victory, and to make them as ſucceſsful, as they are juſt and honourable; and that, in order to this, we are all bound, both in Duty to God and our Sovereign, as well as by our own Intereſt, unanimouſly and heartily to aſſiſt and ſupport Her under this great Undertaking, as far as our Prayers, and Eſtates, Lives, and Fortunes, can ſerve Her; If to perſuade Her Subjects, that the great and threatning Dangers of our Enemies, ſhould have that juſt Effect upon us, to unite us, as much in our Reſolutions and Affections, as they do in our common Intereſts, Apprehenſions, and Troubles; If to ſet out the Bleſſings we enjoy in the wiſe Conſtitution of our Government and Laws, in the moſt refined Policies of our Parliament and Miniſtry, in the Strength and Number of our Armies, Fleets, and Confederates, in the Care and watchful Vigilance, the Courage, Reſolution, and Conduct of our General, and, above all, in the Piety, and Prudence of our Moſt Gracious QUEEN; If to affirm that She daily gives freſh Inſtances of Her Wiſdom, in the happy Adminiſtration of her Government, and in nothing more ſhews Her Policy, and diſtinguiſhing Judgment, than in making Choice of ſuch Miniſters of State, who are acceptable to their Country, and expreſs ſuch a Zeal and Steadineſs in its Service and true Intereſts, and whom nothing could Bride, or betray into a Party, wherein it might any ways ſeem to be endangered; If, with the moſt ardent Requeſts to implore God's Providence, which through ſo many Dangers and Difficulties has raiſed up, and preſerved Her Majeſty, to carry on theſe glorious Undertakings with Succeſs, that She may be able to reſtore and ſettle the Peace of Europe, in its juſt Rights and Limitations; and that, as God has beſtowed a Crown upon Her in this World, as the Reward of theſe heroick and pious Deſigns, ſo after a long Reign here, he would advance Her to a higher Throne in Heaven, and dignify Her with a glorious and immortal Crown hereafter: If this, my Lords, I ſay, is falſely and maliciouſly to ſuggeſt, that Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, both in Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Affairs, tends to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution; If this be charging Her Majeſty, and thoſe in Authority under Her, both in Church and State, with a general Mal-Adminiſtration; If this be, as an Incendiary, to perſuade Her Subjects to keep up Diſtinctions of Factions and Parties; If this be inſtilling groundleſs Jealouſies, fomenting deſtructive Diviſions, and ſtirring up Her Majeſty's Subjects to Arms and Violence, againſt any but Her Enemies; then, my Lords, I am guilty of this Article of Impeachment; otherwiſe I am innocent.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

My Lords, I have always thought it my Duty, upon all publick Occaſions, to aſſert the Principles of Loyalty and Subjection to the Supreme Power, whenever I had a proper Call ſo to do; of this there are numberleſs Witneſſes in thoſe ſeveral Places to which I have belonged. One of theſe I beg Leave of your Lordſhips particularly to mention, Magdalen College in Oxford, whereof I am at preſent an unworthy Member, and which by the known Sufferings of the whole Body for the Church and Conſtitution, contributed as much towards the late happy Revolution, as any Society in the Kingdom: To which Honourable Society I humbly appeal for my Character and Behaviour. I could alſo appeal for the ſame to a Right Reverend Lord, that now ſits on the Bench of Biſhops.

Had it been fit to have troubled your Lordſhips with Evidences of my hearty Affection to the preſent Government, I could have produced them in great Abundance, from the Perſons with whom I have converſed, from the Gentlemen whom I have bred up, and from the Congregations to which I have preached. If my Principles had any Tendency towards Alienating the Affections of Her Majeſty's Subjects, ſurely ſome one Inſtance of my Diſloyalty to the QUEEN, ſome favourable Expreſſions toward the Pretender, ſome Indications of my Diſlike to the preſent Settlement, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, might have been pitched upon, and expoſed to your Lordſhips, in order to juſtifie the Charge of Sedition against me. But I cannot but with Pleaſure obſerve to your your Lordſhips, that from the whole Courſe of my Actions, no one Inſtance of that kind is alledged, or ſo much as pretended.

My Lords, the Charge of wickedly wreſting divers Texts of Scripture lies very heavy upon me, as a Chriſtian and Miniſter of Chriſt. If I am guilty of it, there is another Tribunal, another Bar, at which I am to appear, and where, by that Scripture which I have wreſted, I ſhall be judged and condemned. In the mean Time, my Lords, I hope that thoſe, whoſe particular Profeſſion and Studies qualify them to be the moſt competent Judges of ſuch Matters, will abſolve me in this Particular.

Upon the whole, therefore, my Lords, I hope it appears, that I am not guilty of any of the Crimes of which I am accuſed; that I have tranſgreſſed no Law of the Land, neither Statute, nor Common Law, relating either to Her Majeſty, or to my Fellow-Subjects, to the Church, or to the State: And that I may with all Humility apply to my own Caſe, the Words of that bleſſed Apoſtle, whoſe Doctrine I defend, and whoſe Example I hope I ſhall have the Grace to follow, Neither againſt the Law, nor againſt the Temple, nor againſt Cæſar, have I offended any thing at all.

What I have hitherto humbly offered to your Lordſhips, relates to my Words and Actions; and as to the Thoughts and Intentions of my Heart, which are known only to God, and my own Conſcience, and which are affirmed in my Impeachment to be wicked, ſeditious, and malicious; I call the Searcher of Hearts to Witneſs, in the moſt ſolemn and religious Manner, as I expect to be acquitted before God and his holy Angels, at that dreadful Tribunal, before which, not only I, but all the World, even your Lordſhips, who now ſit in Judgment upon me, muſt appear, to be acquitted or condemned; that I had no ſuch wicked, ſeditious, or malicious Intentions; that there is nothing upon Earth I more deteſt and abhorr: That my Deſigns were, in every Reſpect, directly contrary. I had no Intention to aſperſe the Memory of his late Majeſty, to traduce or condemn the late happy Revolution, or to arraign the Reſolutions of both Houſes of Parliament. So far was I from deſigning to undermine and ſubvert Her Majeſty's Government, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion as by Law eſtabliſhed, that it was my ſincere Intention to exert my beſt Endeavours for their Security. So far was I from intending to perſuade Her Majeſty's Subjects to keep up a Diſtinction of Parties and Factions, from inſtilling groundleſs Jealouſies, fomenting deſtructive Diviſions among them, or exciting and ſtirring them up to Arms and Violence, that my Aim was to perſwade them to lay aſide all Diſtinctions, to unite in one well-compacted Body, to be obedient to their Governors, and to ſupport the preſent Eſtabliſhment. So far was I from deſigning to defame Her Majeſty's Adminiſtration, or to infuſe any undutiful Thoughts of Her, that I not only pay Her all Honour and Obedience, but am, from the Bottom of my Soul, zealouſly and affectionately Loyal to Her; being entirely perſuaded, that the Church is ſo far from being in Danger from Her, that She is as heartily affected to its Eſtabliſhment and Proſperity, as I hope I have always ſhewed my ſelf to be to Her Sacred Perſon and Government.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

As to the Proteſtant Succeſſion by Law eſtabliſhed, though the Doctrine which I preached tends to the Security of it (as I heartily deſire every thing by me ſpoken ſhould tend); yet having no Occaſion in either of my Sermons to take Notice of it, I do no where in thoſe Sermons mention it, nor ſay any thing that can be interpreted to have any View towards it. Therefore, though I cannot with my beſt Application apprehend, how it comes to be ſaid in the Preamble to my Impeachment, that I had deſigned to undermine and ſubvert it; yet I ſhall gladly take this Opportunity of declaring my ſelf before your Lordſhips upon that Subject. It is my ſincere and hearty Prayer, that God would prolong the Life of Her moſt Sacred Majeſty, whoſe exemplary Goodneſs and Piety, give us the beſt Hopes we have of averting that Vengeance, which is due to the Wickedneſs of the Age we live in; that he would bleſs Her Councils at Home, and Her Arms abroad, and make Her Reign exceed that of Her Renowned Predeceſſor Queen Elizabeth, in Length as well as Glory. But when the Inheritrix of the Bleſſed Martyr's Crown and Piety, when She, the Deſire of our Eyes, and the Breath of our Noſtrils, ſhall, full of Years and Honour, be gathered to Her Fathers, and exchange Her Temporal for an Immortal Crown; (ſince we are deprived of that Prince, Her Royal Offſpring, whoſe Loſs no true Lover of his Country, and of the Royal Family, can reflect upon without a bleeding Heart, and whom God in his Anger took from us, becauſe we were unworthy of ſo ineſtimable a Bleſſing,) I earneſtly beſeech God, in Defect of future Iſſue from Her Majeſty, to perpetuate the Succeſſion of the Crown, as it eſtabliſhed in the moſt Illuſtrious Houſe of Hanover, which I look upon as, next to His Providence, the beſt Guard we have againſt Popery and Arbitrary Power, the beſt Security of our Church, and of the Conſtitution of our Government, which is the Glory and Happineſs of our own Nation, and the Envy of all others. And I cannot yet apprehend, how the Doctrine which I have taught, tends to weaken or undermine it; nor, on the other Side, how the Doctrine of Reſiſtance, which brought Her Majeſty's Royal Grand-father to the Block, (ſuppoſing it a true Doctrine) comes to be mentioned, or thought of; much leſs to be induſtriouſly maintained, as a neceſſary and indiſpenſible Duty, under the moſt mild and gracious Adminiſtration of the beſt of Queens. Nothing ſeems more ſtrange, than that Reſiſtance ſhould be ſo carefully taught under ſuch a Government, unleſs it be that Non-Reſiſtance ſhould overturn it.

So far was I therefore from having any of thoſe wicked, malicious, and ſeditious Deſigns, which are laid to my Charge, that my Intentions were, on the contrary, to inſtill the Principles of Loyalty and Obedience into my Fellow-Subjects, and withal, to put a Stop to that Torrent of Lewdneſs, Irreligion, and Atheiſm, of which I have given your Lordſhips ſo many flagrant Teſtimonies.

Thoſe outrageous Inſults upon God, and Goodneſs, are ſo provoking, that they may excuſe ſome Heat and Severity of Expreſſion in a Miniſter of Chriſt, who has a juſt Senſe of Religion, a due Concern for the Diſcharge of his Holy Function, or for the Honour of his Maker and Redeemer. And if any Objection be made againſt me, for treating with an unbecoming Bitterneſs ſuch daring Rabſhekahs, who defy the Living God; I beg Leave to reply, in the Words of a Reverend Father of our Church, Let them conſider what Moderation, and Temper, a Man had need be of, that in this Nation, and this Age, ſhall ſpeak againſt Faction, and Rebellion, (I add Deiſm, Tritheiſm, and all Sorts of Hereſy, Blaſphemy, and Atheiſm) without extraordinary Severity. Nay, it is our Duty, in ſuch Caſes, to expreſs our ſelves with Warmth and Sharpneſs, according to the Example of our Bleſſed Saviour, who, though Meekneſs it ſelf, could not but ſhew the utmoſt Indignation at the Prophaning the Houſe of God. This is not, my Lords, to rail, but to rebuke; and thoſe who ridicule, or cenſure us for it, either have not, I preſume, or will not own they have, a right Notion of the Dignity of our Office; will not conſider, that we are the Ambaſſadors of Chriſt, that we are commanded, in His Name, to exhort and rebuke with all Authority; and that our Authority is derived from thoſe to whom it was ſaid by our Bleſſed Saviour, He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me; and he that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth him that ſent me. Whatever Expreſſions, therefore, in my Sermons may have ſlipt from me, which ſeem ſo far liable to Exception, as to carry a Senſe I never intended (as he muſt be an happy Speaker indeed, whoſe Words are altogether unexceptionable) yet, I humbly hope, the above-mentioned Provocation will plead my Excuſe, or that, at the very worſt, ſome haſty, or even violent Expreſſions, ſhall not be deemed High Crimes and Miſdemeanors. I deſire it may be farther conſidered by your Lordſhips, that I could have no Temporal Intereſts to ſerve by the Doctrines I advanced; and therefore could have no Deſign in View, but to diſcharge my Duty to God, as a Miniſter of Chriſt, and to my Sovereign, as a Faithful and Loyal Subject.

My Lords, theſe Things being humbly offered to the Conſideration of your Lordſhips, I hope, that what I have already ſuffered, as a ſuppoſed Criminal, will be thought ſufficient Puniſhment for one, who has offended againſt no Law yet in Being. It muſt be thought no little Grief and Vexation to any ingenuous Man, to be brought to this Bar, under the leaſt Suſpicion of ſuch Crimes as are laid to my Charge: But for a Perſon of my Function to have an Accuſation of this Nature alledged againſt him, ſo heinouſly reflecting upon his Holy Character, is ſuch a foul Blot, as, though his Innocence ſhould at laſt be cleared by your Lordſhips, upon the moſt undeniable Evidence, muſt leave a Scar upon his good Name; which is to all Men dear, but much more ſo to thoſe, whoſe whole Capacity of doing good in the World principally depends upon it.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

My Lords, as the Matter of my Charge was highly criminal, ſo the Form and Manner of it ran in ſuch general and uncertain Terms, that 'twas impoſſible to know the Grounds of my Accuſation; or how to defend my ſelf, when I knew not where I ſhould be attacked. So that, after I had provided as particular an Anſwer as ſuch a general Accuſation would admit of, the Commons were pleaſed in their Replication to ſay, That there were ſeveral Things in it foreign to the Charge. To the great Misfortune of falling under the Diſpleaſure of that Honourable Houſe, I might add, That of a long and cloſe Confinement, and of an Expence no ways proportioned to my Circumſtances. Theſe, my Lords, are Afflictions, which can be conceived by no body ſo well as by him, who has been ſo unhappy as to feel the Weight of them. And among theſe I reckon it not the leaſt of my Sufferings, that I have been for ſo long a Time debarred from taking Heed to that Flock, over which the Holy Ghoſt hath made me an Overſeer. For, ever ſince I have had my Liberty, by the Favour of your Lordſhips admitting me to Bail, I have purpoſely avoided doing any Part of the Duty of my Function, or even appearing in Publick, leſt it ſhould occaſion any Tumult or Diſturbance; as my neceſſary Attendance on your Lordſhips from Time to Time has ſince been thought unhappily to have done, without any Fault of mine, or the leaſt Degree of Encouragement given by me, which I profeſs, in the Preſence of God, to abhor.

All theſe Circumſtances, my Lords, being conſidered, together with the publick Manner, the Length and Solemnity of my Trial, before ſo Auguſt a Court of Judicature, by which Means I am made a Gazing-ſtock, both by Reproaches, and Afflictions, and a Spectacle to the whole World; I have ſtood in this Place, Day after Day, to hear my ſelf accuſed of the blackeſt Crimes, and openly reviled; I have been repreſented as a Papiſt in Diſguiſe, as a Rebel, as an Enemy to Her Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and a Favourer of the Pretender, though I have abjured him, (but not forgot him, as a learned Perſon was pleaſed to ſay); that is, as the worſt of Perjured Villains. I have been called an inſignificant Tool of a Party on the one hand, and a moſt dangerous Incendiary on the other; nay, an Angel, that is, a Devil, detached from the Infernal Regions. All theſe Things, I ſay, being conſidered, (and your Lordſhips, I am ſure, in tender Compaſſion to me, will conſider them), it is moſt certain, that whatever be your Lordſhips Determination concerning me, I cannot eſcape without being a very great Sufferer; and I ſhall have been abundantly puniſhed, though I ſhall have the Happineſs to be by your Lordſhips at laſt acquitted.

Yet I cannot reflect without Comfort, (the greateſt of Comforts, next to that of a good Cauſe, and a good Conſcience) that I anſwer for my my ſelf, this Day, before the moſt Illuſtrious Aſſembly in the World, the whole Body of the Nobility of Great Britain, whoſe princely Extraction, and high Quality, whoſe magnificent Titles, and ſplendid Fortunes, whoſe hereditary Candor and Generoſity, inherent in Noble Blood, inſeparable from the Birth and Education of Peers; in a Word, whoſe ſolid Judgment, and exact Skill in the Laws of this Realm, ſo eminently qualify them for the final Determination of Juſtice; who are neither to be ſwayed by Hopes, over-ruled by Fears, nor miſled by any falſe Prejudice or Paſſion. If it muſt be a Man's Misfortune to labour under ſuch hard Circumſtances as mine, it is no ſmall Mitigation of them, that he pleads his Cauſe before ſuch Judges, who, he knows, will decide it with the ſtricteſt Impartiality, Equity, and Honour.

And when I conſider, that I now ſtand, and am judged for ſome of the Doctrines of that Goſpel which God delivered unto our Fathers, and you, my Lords the Biſhops, their Succeſſors, have received from Chriſt and His Apoſtles, as the ſacred Depoſitum of the Church, to be maintained inviolably in its primitive Simplicity: When I conſider, what is the Cauſe for which I am this Day called in Queſtion; that it is one of thoſe Eternal Truths, which you are ſo ſolemnly commiſſioned to teach, and earneſtly contend for: When I conſider, that 'tis what our Bleſſed Lord and his Apoſtles ſealed with their precious Blood, and ſo many primitive Martyrs maintained even in the midſt of Flames; ſo many learned Biſhops and Confeſſors recommended to Poſterity in their immortal Writings, as the diſtinguiſhing Badge and Glory of our Reformation; nay, when I conſider that 'tis what you your ſelves have already ſupported with inconteſtable Reaſon and Authority, it is no ſmall Satisfaction to me to think, that as your Lordſhips are my Judges, ſo, I hope in God, you muſt be my Advocates. What a Guilt, as well as Diſgrace, would it juſtly devolve upon the Clergy, to recede from any Principle of our excellent Church, eſpecially from what has been ſo long retained, and boaſted of, as its peculiar Character! By abandoning which, we muſt relapſe into ſome of the worſt Doctrines even of Popery it ſelf, and render our ſelves the moſt contemptible, as well as inconſiſtent Church of the World! I think I may therefore, with Confidence, uſe the Words of the great Apoſtle to his Accuſers, Having obtained Help from God, I continue unto this Day, witneſſing both to ſmall and great; ſaying none other Things than thoſe which the Prophets and Moſes (I may add, Chriſt and his Apoſtles), did ſay.

For, my Lords, if I have committed any Faults or Errors in Expreſſion, yet, as I inſiſt upon my Innocence with Reſpect to all the high Crimes laid to my Charge, ſo I muſt ſtill inſiſt upon all the Doctrines which I have taught, as being agreeable to the Word of God, and to the Doctrine of our moſt excellent and truly Apoſtolical Church, and which we of the Clergy are obliged, both by Subſcription and Oath, to acknowledge and defend. And how hard are our Circumſtances, if we muſt be puniſhed in this World for doing that, which, if we do not, we ſhall be more heavily puniſhed in the next! What a Condition are we in, if we are commanded to cry aloud and ſpare not, to exhort, rebuke, in Seaſon and out of Seaſon, on the one hand, and proſecuted, impriſoned, ruined on the other! If this be our Caſe, who, indeed, is ſufficient for theſe Things? And how truly may we of the Miniſtry, above all Men living, apply to our ſelves thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, If in this Life only we have Hope in Chriſt, we are of all Men moſt miſerable: But our Comfort is, that our Hope in Chriſt is not only in this Life. Juſtly might we be reproached, and deſerve ſome of thoſe Reflections, which in theſe licentious Times are ſo plentifully poured upon us, were we not ready to practiſe the Doctrines we preach, of Self-Denial, taking up our Croſs, and patient Submiſſion to Sufferings and Afflictions. For my own Part, it matters not what becomes of me, nor is my Deliverance, or Ruin, of any Moment to the World; or, if it be, I am not only ready to be bound, but to die, could I by that do Service to my Queen, my Church, or my Country: Neither count I my Life dear, ſo that I might finiſh my Courſe with Joy, and the Miniſtry which I have received of the Lord Jeſus. But may God ſo direct your Lordſhips, that through me a Wound may not be given to the Doctrines of the Scriptures, and of the Church, which Chriſt hath purchaſed with his own Blood.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

And ſo, with all Humility and Reſignation, I ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhips Judgment, be it what it will. One Thing, I am ſure, it can never take from me, the Power of wiſhing and praying, and (whether in Proſperity or Adverſity, whether I am acquitted, or condemned) I ſhall always pray for the Queen my Sovereign, for your Lordſhips my Judges, and for the Commons my Accuſers; moſt earneſtly beſeeching Almighty God, to deliver all Orders, and Degrees of Men amongſt us, from all falſe Doctrine, Hereſy and Schiſm, from Hardneſs of Heart, from Contempt of His Word, and Commandment; from Envy, Hatred and Malice, and all Uncharitableneſs.

Reply to the Doctor's Defence.

The Managers, in their Reply to the Doctor's Defence, took Notice of the Conceſſions made by his Counſel, viz. 1. That Neceſſity creates an Exception to the General Rule of Submiſſion to the Prince. 2. That this Exception was underſtood, or implied in the Laws that require ſuch Submiſſion. And, 3. That the Caſe of the Revolution was a Caſe of Neceſſity. They ſaid, Theſe Conceſſions fully anſwered the Commons Meaning, and they could not forbear congratulating them upon the Succeſs of their Impeachment; that in full Parliament this erroneous Doctrine of unlimited Non-Reſiſtance was given up and diſclaimed: But though the Doctor, for Fear of impending Puniſhment, had tolerated his Counſel to make theſe unwilling Conceſſions, yet, ſince he himſelf did not expreſsly come into theſe Conceſſions, they thought they ought not to avail him.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

That he was not impeached for preaching the general Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance, as his Counſel ſuggeſted; but for preaching againſt an excepted Caſe, after he had ſtated the Exception. This was not preaching the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance in the General Terms uſed by the Apoſtles, and Fathers of the Church, where Caſes of Neceſſity might be underſtood to be excepted by a tacit Implication, as his Counſel allowed: But 'twas preaching directly againſt the Reſiſtance uſed at the Revolution, and muſt be deſigned to bring an Odium upon the Revolution, and thoſe who were concerned in it; he would otherwiſe have ſhewn, That the Reſiſtance uſed at the Revolution was abſolutely neceſſary, and the only Means left to revive the Conſtitution: But, inſtead of this, he denied there was any Reſiſtance in the Revolution; and ſaid, They were the greateſt Enemies to it, who caſt ſuch black and odious Colours upon it.

Therefore the Security of the Government, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, the undeceiving of the People, the quieting the Minds of the Proteſtant Diſſenters, the vindicating the Honour of the late Revolution, and the Glory of their great Deliverer, and to baniſh Sedition from the Pulpit, which ought to be Sacred to Divine Purpoſes; theſe Things did require the Commons to demand their Lordſhips Judgment on this Offender.

Nor was his Puniſhment, as the Doctor obſerved, all they aimed at; but what they expected from their Lordſhips Juſtice was, the ſupporting the Eſtabliſhment, and the preventing all Attempts to ſap its Foundation for the future.

2. If the very Words, ſuppoſed Criminal, ought not to have been laid.

The Lords being adjourned to their Houſe, it was propounded to the Judges, Whether by the Law of England, and conſtant Practice in all Proſecutions, by Indictment, or Information, for Crimes and Miſdemeanors, by writing or ſpeaking the particular Words ſuppoſed to be Criminal, muſt not be expreſsly ſpecified in ſuch Indictment or Information? and the Judges unanimouſly declared, That the particular Words, ſuppoſed to be Criminal, ought to be ſpecified in ſuch Indictment or Information.

However, it was carried by a Majority in the Houſe of Peers, That, by the Law and Uſage of Parliament in Proſecution by Impeachments for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, by writing or ſpeaking the particular Words ſuppoſed to be Criminal, were not neceſſary to be expreſsly ſpecified in ſuch Impeachment.

Proteſt of ſome Peers.

Againſt this Reſolution ſeveral Peers proteſted for the following Reaſons, (viz.)

1. Becauſe we conceive the Law of the Land is as much the Rule of Judicature in Parliament as it is in inferior Courts of Juſtice; and ſince by the Opinions of all the Judges, in all Proſecutions by Information, or Indictment, for writing and ſpeaking the particular Words, ſuppoſed to be Criminal, muſt be expreſsly ſpecified, in ſuch Information or Indictment; and that this is the Law of the Land, confirmed by conſtant Practice: We conceive that there is the ſame Reaſon and Juſtice for ſpecifying in Impeachments the particular Words, ſuppoſed to be Criminal; for otherwiſe a Perſon, who is innocent and ſafe by the Law, out of Parliament, may, nevertheleſs, be condemned in Parliament.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

For we conceive, that ſome Reaſons of Law and Juſtice, why the Words, ſuppoſed Criminal, muſt be ſpecified in Informations and Indictments, may be, that the Party accuſed may certainly know his Charge, and be thereby enabled to defend his Innocence; that the Jury may know it too, and be enabled thereby the better to apply the Evidence given by the Witneſſes to the Matter of ſuch Charge; and that the Judges themſelves may the better judge of the Nature of the Crime, and of a Puniſhment adequate to it, which, in Caſes of Miſdemeanors, which are indefinite and innumerable, muſt extremely vary, according to the Heinouſneſs of the Offence: And, finally, that the Houſe of Lords, upon Complaint to them, may alſo judge whether the Fine, which is uſually one of the Puniſhments for Miſdemeanors, do not exceed the Demerit; eſpecially ſince by the Bill of Rights exorbitant Fines are declared to be illegal: Which Reaſons ſeem to be fully as ſtrong in the Caſe of Impeachments as in Indictments, or Informations; for the particular Words are as neceſſary to enable the Lords to determine uprightly, and impartially, as the Jury, or Judges, and as neceſſary for the Defence of the accuſed here, as in the Courts below; and, if there were to be a Difference, it ſeems more neceſſary in this High Court; for the weightier the Proſecution is, the more Need has an unfortunate Man of Indulgence, and all lawful Favour; and ſurely there cannot be a heavier Load upon a Man, than an Accuſation by all the Commons of Great Britain.

2. We do not remember any Precedent inſiſted on for the Maintenance of this Reſolution, ſave only the Caſe of Doctor Manwaring, which, we conceive, could not warrant this Reſolution: For, firſt, the Words charged upon him by the Commons Declaration, were not compared with the Sermon, though it was deſired, and conſequently no Lord could ſay, They were not the Words of the Sermon; and therefore, upon ſuch Uncertainty, we conceive, we could not ground a poſitive Reſolution. 2*dly*, The Charge upon him, taken out of his Sermon on the 4th of May 1628, ſeems to be the very Words by him ſpoken; for they were atteſted by Ear-Witneſſes, who ſurely never were, nor could be admitted to atteſt their own Conjectures of the Scope of a Sermon, and not ſpecify the very Words; for that would be to make the Witneſſes the Judges. 3*dly*, Beſides, in ſuch a Caſe as this, where the Party did not inſiſt upon any legal and juſt Exceptions, of which he might have taken Advantage, if he had made his Defence, which he did not, but ſubmitted and begged Pardon; this ought not to be looked upon as a Precedent, or Authority, to juſtify the Illegality of the Form of that Impeachment.

3. But although this Precedent were full and expreſs to the Point reſolved, we humbly conceive, That one Precedent is not ſufficient to ſupport a Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, nor 1709-10. 9 Annæ. nor consequently a Resolution declaring it; for surely there is a great Difference between a single Instance, and a Law and Custom.

4. Since we conceive, that in all the Precedents, at least all that have appeared to us for four Hundred Years, of the Prosecutions in Parliament, the particular Words, charged as Criminal, have been constantly expressed in the Articles, or Declarations of Impeachment.

Upon the whole therefore, we humbly conceive, that so great a Number of Precedents is sufficient to out-weigh the single Instance of Dr. Manwaring's Case, how opposite soever it may seem to be to the present Case; which, for the Reasons we have mentioned, is far from being plain and clear, or having the full Authority of a Precedent: And the Law and Custom of Parliaments, as we conceive, is to be determined by constant Course and Practice, and not one Precedent occasioned by such odious Doctrines as those of Dr. Manwaring: Nor can the contrary Assertion to the aboveſaid Resolution be of any ill Consequence to Impeachments of the Commons; because it is easy for them to specify the Words which offend them, but extremely difficult for the accused to defend himself without knowing them: And as all who are charged Criminally, have Leave to make their Defence, so they should also have allowed to them all lawful Means for it.

Names of the Protesting Lords. Jo. Ebor. Scarborough, Northampton, N. Duresme, W. Cestriens', Jersey, Sussex, Stawell, North and Grey, Scarsdale, Conway, Willoughby Br. Plymouth, Guilford, Craven, R. Ferrers, Lempster, Osborne, Beaufort, H. London, Howard, Denbigh, Leeds, Guernsey, Yarmouth, Thanet, Nottingham, Rochester, Anglesey, Berkshire, Weymouth, Abingdon.

The Question being put in the House, That the Commons had made good their first Article of Impeachment, as also the 2d, 3d, and 4th, it was, as to every Article, Resolved in the Affirmative.

On Monday, March the 20th, the Lords being come down to the Court, erected in the Hall, the Question was again put to every Peer, beginning with my Lord Pelham, the Junior Baron; and having delivered their respective Opinions, the Lord Chancellor numbered them, and declared, That there were one Hundred and Twenty of their Lordships present, of whom Sixty-eight had found Dr. Sacheverell GUILTY of the High Crimes and Misdemeanors charged on him by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, and Fifty-two had found him Not Guilty.

The Doctor convicted, moves in Arrest of Judgment.

Then the Doctor was brought to the Bar and kneeled till the Lord Chancellor bid him rise; after which he moved in Arrest of Judgment. 1. That no entire Clause, Sentence, or Expression, contained in either of his Sermons, or Dedications, was particularly set forth in the Impeachment. 2. That the Articles were said to be only by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, leaving out Commissioners of Shires, and Boroughs, which was neither agreeable to the Impeachment, nor to the Title of the House of Commons since the Union.

Then the Lords adjourned to their House: And on the 23d of March, the Commons came up with their Speaker to the House of Lords, to demand Judgment; and the Dr. being brought to the Bar, kneeled till the Lord Chancellor bid him stand up; and the Speaker of the Commons having demanded Judgment, 1709-10. 9 Annæ.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the Dr. that his Exceptions in Arrest of Judgment had been over-ruled; and then proceeded to pronounce the following Judgment, viz.

His Sentence. That you Henry Sacheverell, Dr. in Divinity, shall be, and you are hereby enjoin'd not to Preach during the Term of three Years next ensuing: That your two printed Sermons, referred to by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, shall be burnt before the Royal Exchange in London, between the Hours of One and Two of the Clock on the 27th of this Instant March, by the Hands of the Common Hangman, in the Presence of the Lord Mayor of London, and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. And the Doctor being withdrawn, an Order was made, directed to the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs to see the Sentence executed.

Historical Remarks on Doctor Sacheverell's Trial.

This favourable Sentence was looked upon by the Doctor's Friends, rather as an Acquittal than a Condemnation, and as a certain Indication of the Impotence of his Enemies: And that Night several of the Streets of London and Westminster were illuminated, and Bonfires made, where every one that passed by was compelled to drink the Doctor's Health.

The Lord Mayor insisted, That, as he was a Member of the House of Commons, he was excused from attending at the burning of the Sermons pursuant to their Lordships Sentence; and so left the Execution of the Sentence to the Sheriffs.

During the Trial, the Doctor was daily attended from the Temple, where he then resided, to Westminster-Hall, by vast Numbers of People huzzaing, and praying for his Deliverance; and many that were not much his Friends were obliged to pull off their Hats, and Huzza with them as the Coach went by, among whom were several Members of Parliament; and as the Queen was one Day going to Westminster in her Chair, the People gathered about her, and cryed out: God bless Your Majesty, and the Church! We hope Your Majesty is for Dr. Sacheverell: For the People generally looked upon this Prosecution as an Attempt to overturn the Church, and establish the Dissenters. And as at the Revolution, when they thought their Religion to be in Danger from the Papists, they pulled down several Mass-Houses, and others whose owners were mark'd as Zealots of that Persuasion: So now when they looked upon the Church to be in as imminent Danger from the Fanaticks, they in like Manner expressed their Resentment against the Dissenters, and particularly on the first of March, when they resorted to Mr. Burgess's Meeting-House, with more Zeal than Devotion, and having pulled down the Pulpit, Pews, Wainscot, and all that was combustible, they carried them into Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and made a Bonfire of them, crying out, High Church, and Sacheverell! Several other Meeting-Houses also suffered by their Hands: And 'tis said, they began to threaten the Houses

Houſes of ſome Whig Patriots; and particularly the Lord Chancellor's, the Earl of Wharton's, the Biſhop of Sarum's, Mr. Dolben's, Mr. Hoadley's, &c. But if they had any ſuch Intentions, they were prevented, being diſperſed by a Detachment of the Horſe-Guards; and the Guards were afterwards doubled, and the Trained-Bands commanded to their Arms, while the Trial laſted, in order to prevent further Miſchief. This however is a Specimen what fine Work a Whig Principle will make, when reduced to Practice. It was once their avowed Opinion, that when we apprehend our Religion, or Civil Rights in Danger, we may, nay, we lie under an indiſpenſable Obligation to defend them: That we may, and ought to do our ſelves Juſtice without, and even upon, our Governors, when they invade our Properties, or decline to comply with our Demands. The Whigs, indeed, were pleaſed to make great Out-cries on this Occaſion, and gave theſe tumultuous Proceedings the Name of Rebellion: But they could find ſofter Names for the Riots and Tumults they incited in the Days of Bethel and Coniſh. Theſe were accounted Noble Struggles for Liberty and Property, and the greateſt Rebel was then eſteemed the beſt Patriot: With ſuch a different Face does the ſame Fact appear, when we have a different Intereſt to manage! But ſurely 'tis with an ill Grace, when a Whig complains of a Practice which is the natural Reſult of his favourite Principle. While the Mob was on their Side, The Voice of the People was the Voice of God; but when by their ſtupid Management, they had loſt their Hearts, that which before was the Voice of Heaven, degenerated into down-right Rebellion; and inſtead of Lectures againſt Tyranny, that were ſo frequent in former Reigns, we have ſince been entertained with Satyrs againſt the Rabble; and indeed a Whig ſhifts his Principles (if they may deſerve that Name) with more Eaſe than he does his Cloaths. He takes them up with no other Deſign than to ſerve a preſent Turn, and when they make againſt his Intereſt, he inveighs againſt them with as much Warmth as he formerly eſpouſed them: He muſt be a Perſon of very ſmall Obſervation who does not ſee that Intereſt is their only fixed Principle, and that all others are but taken up Occaſionally, to be diſmiſſed when they have ſerved their Ends of them.

When Gentlemen ſpeak of the Juſtice and Lawfulneſs of the Reſiſtance uſed at the Revolution, they ſeem to inſinuate, that every Step that was taken towards it, was perfectly agreeable to our Conſtitution, and that the whole Scheme from one End to the other, was formally laid and concluded on by a Majority of the Nation, before the Prince of Orange came over; whereas it is very certain, that different Parties had then very different Views; and though they all agreed, that Reſiſtance was neceſſary to reſtrain King James from deſtroying the Conſtitution, yet few thought of the Abdication, and fewer yet of the Prince of Orange's being advanced immediately to the Throne; for this ſeems to have been effected by Abundance of extraordinary Accidents, which no human Wiſdom could foreſee. It was generally expected, upon the Arrival of the Prince of Orange, the King would have agreed to call a free Parliament, and have conſented to ſuch Acts as ſhould have ſecured our Religion and Laws againſt future Incroachments; or, if he had refuſed this, That the Princeſs of Orange would have been declared Regent of the Kingdom, and have had the Adminiſtration of the Government during her Father's Life. Farther than this, I am ſatisfied, the Views of the Majority did not extend at firſt: But when King James retired beyond Sea, and the Vote of Abdication, and the Vacancy of the Throne had paſſed, it ſeemed generally agreed, that the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, or one of them, ought to ſucceed him as on a Demiſe of the Crown; and it is manifeſt, a Majority were for the Princeſs of Orange's ſucceeding, as if her Father had been dead, till ſhe herſelf was pleaſed to decline it, for Reaſons not difficult to be gueſſed at; and thereupon it was agreed, to veſt the Adminiſtration ſolely in the Prince; to proclaim them jointly King and Queen; but to exclude the Princeſs from any Share in the Government, as ſhe deſired to be.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

It is very evident, Reſiſtance was neceſſary at the Revolution, to preſerve the Conſtitution; but it was never intended to make the Crown Elective, which was before Hereditary, for this would have been deſtroying an Eſſential Part of our Conſtitution, inſtead of preſerving it: It was indeed held, that as there might be a Natural Incapacity to govern, as Frenzy, or doating Old Age; ſo there might be alſo a Moral Incapacity, ſuch as an irremoveable Perſuaſion in a falſe Religion, ſo as to render the Exerciſe of the Government by the reigning Prince impracticable, and our Obedience to him conſiſtently with the Conſtitution impoſſible; and this being unanimouſly agreed to be the Caſe at the Revolution, the Crown devolved of Courſe on the Princeſs Mary, the King's eldeſt Daughter and Heir, and ſhe being pleaſed to waive her Right in Favour of her Husband the Prince of Orange, no Body had any Reaſon to oppoſe his being advanced to the Throne: For ſo it was in the Caſe of Henry VII. who married the Princeſs Elizabeth, the undoubted Heireſs of the Crown. This Princeſs alſo was pleaſed to conſent (tacitly at leaſt) that the Executive Power ſhould be veſted ſolely in her Husband, and the Lords and Commons concurring in it, Henry VII. was recognized.

Some indeed would have had it, that the Government was entirely diſſolved at the Revolution; that we were in a State of Nature again, and might go to a new Election, and ſettle the Government as we ſaw fit: But this Opinion muſt have made mad Work; for if the Government was diſſolved, and the Laws were no longer in Force, no Man could have had a Right to Houſes or Eſtates, ſuch Rights being fixed and limitted only by the Laws: Then the Rabble would have been at Liberty to ſcramble for the Eſtates and Effects of their betters, and would have had as good a Right to elect and appoint their Governors, as

as the States of the Kingdom: And indeed there could be no ſuch Thing as States, if the Government was diſſolved. But the Caſe was otherwiſe, the King was indeed incapable of governing on account of his Bigottry; but then we looked upon ourſelves to be in the ſame Condition as on a Demiſe of the Crown, and as the Princeſs, the next Heir, and the Lords and Commons, that is every Branch of the Legiſlature, agreed to ſet the Crown on the Head of the Prince of Orange, we might well recognize him our lawful Prince: Had Queen Mary done this by a formal Act of Parliament, I am confident there would not have been a Man in the Kingdom, unleſs Papiſts, that would have oppoſed it. The lodging the Adminiſtration ſolely in the Prince of Orange, and excluding the Princeſs from any Share in the Government, was what ſhocked Archbiſhop Sancroft, and other great and good Men, who were very well ſatisfied with the Reſiſtance that had been made to King James, and the Application that was made to the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, to aſſert their own and the People's Rights, and ſave the Conſtitution: Every one would have been ſatisfied if the Princeſs of Orange had been proclaimed Queen, and afterwards called a Parliament, and ſettled the Crown upon her Husband the Prince. None were diſſatisfied at his aſcending the Throne, but with the manner of his Advancement; becauſe it ſeemed to break into the Hereditary Succeſſion, and had the Appearance of an Election: Though, as I have obſerved already, ſince the Princeſs, on whom the Crown devolved by the Abdication of her Father, (in the ſame manner as if he had been dead) conſented to transfer her Right to her Husband, I do not ſee why we might not without Scruple, obey the Prince of Orange, and every other Prince on whom he and his Parliament ſettled the Succeſſion; for the Supreme Power in this Nation being lodged in King, Lords and Commons, they may ſettle the Succeſſion, and make ſuch Laws as they ſee fit; and as this Supreme Power is not to be reſiſted on any Pretence whatſoever, ſo neither is the King to be reſiſted in the due Execution of thoſe Laws which have been made by the Legiſlature, or in the Adminiſtration of the Government, which he is entruſted with by the Conſtitution, ſo long as he does not exceed the Limits the Law preſcribes in the Exerciſe of his Power: We may ſafely aver the Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance and Paſſive Obedience to the Supreme Power and to the King, who has the Executive Power, ſo far as his Prerogative is ſupported by Law, or by the Legiſlature; becauſe that reſiſting the Prince in this Caſe, is reſiſting the Legiſlature.

But where a Prince takes upon him to ſubvert and deſtroy the Conſtitution in Church or State, as King James did, Reſiſtance then becomes neceſſary.

But notwithſtanding King James had begun, and appeared determined to finiſh the Ruin of Church and State, yet to his own Folly and Indiſcretion we muſt aſcribe it in a great Meaſure, that it was in our Power to reſiſt the Deſtruction he was bringing upon us. Had he not been infatuated to the higheſt Degree, we might have lamented the ſad Condition we were reduced to, but could never have retrieved the Misfortune: Had he not diſobliged every Claſs of Men in the Kingdom, our Reſiſtance had been vain. He was weak enough to fall upon the Clergy, the Univerſities, the Corporations, and even upon his own Fleet and Army at once, and render them all Malecontents; and when he had done this, refuſed the Foreign Troops the French King offered him to ſupport his Tyranny.

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

It is to the Weakneſs, or rather the Bigottry and Madneſs of that Prince, therefore, that we in a great Meaſure owe our being a free People at this Day; for as he had his Treaſury well repleniſhed, a good Fleet, a fine Army of Twenty Thouſand Men, and a Reſerve of as many Thouſand Foreigners as he pleaſed to accept of; what Service would our darling Doctrine of Reſiſtance have done us in theſe Circumſtances, if he had not done our Work to our Hands, and ſuffered himſelf to be puſhed upon ſuch Extravagancies by cunning treacherous Stateſmen, as rendered the very Fleet and Army his Enemies, which he had provided to enſlave us: Had the Military Gentlemen alone been politickly careſſed, no Popiſh or Iriſh Officers or Soldiers forced upon them; had no Prieſts with their ſuperſtitious Trumpery been introduced both into the Fleet and Army, of which he might have known they had the utmoſt Abhorrence (before the Seamen proceeded ſo far as to threaten to throw the Popiſh Fathers over-board); had he not been blinded by an unaccountable Zeal for Popery, it was impoſſible he ſhould have committed ſuch a Series of Blunders, as could end in nothing but his Ruin.

But before I leave this Doctrine of Reſiſtance, I cannot avoid taking Notice of a Set of Men, who make the diffuſive Body of the People, the Original of Power, and the laſt Reſort, whenever the Adminiſtration is not agreeable to their Taſte. They would have the Rabble inveſted with a Power of calling King, Lords and Commons to Account, who are, according to this Notion, but their Servants; for they hold, that whether the Government be lodged in one or more, whenever their Governors deviate, in their Opinion, from the general Good, and betray that Truſt which it is pretended the People once upon a Time conferred upon them; then they have an indefeaſible Right to reſume the Supreme Authority to depoſe the Governors, and put the Adminiſtration into other Hands.

But, were this admitted, there could be no ſuch Thing as a Government of any Duration in the World; for how inconſiſtent the People are, and how unqualified to judge what is for their own Good, or the Good of the Community, does not require much Sagacity to diſcover: And if this Maxim were eſtabliſhed in Great Britain, then would not the Supreme or Legiſlative Authority be lodged in King, Lords and Commons, as it is generally held to be, but in the Rabble; and conformable to this Notion, theſe Gentlemen tell us, that if their Repreſentatives conſent to Acts which tend to reſtrain the People's natural or acquired Rights, or to abridge thoſe Privileges they have been poſſeſſed of for Time immemorial; that then their Repreſentatives betray their Truſt, and all ſuch Acts are void.

In Anſwer to which, it may be proper to conſider, that ſcarce ever any Law is made that does not, in ſome Reſpect, limit, reſtrain, or alter the People's Rights and Properties: And that ſome Acts affect the Majority in the tendereſt Points, and yet have ever been ſubmitted to: From whence it is natural to conclude, that this Notion of the People's being the laſt Reſort, and the Original of Power, has very little Foundation.

Were not the Supreme Legiſlative Power lodged in the King, Lords and Commons, would the People have ever ſubmitted to have been excluded from giving a Voice at an Election for Knights of the Shire, as a Majority were by the Statute of 8 Hen. VI. cap. 7? or would they have ſuffered ſome Parliaments to enlarge their Duration, and others to make themſelves perpetual, as the Parliament in the Year 1641 did, and thereby excluded all the Freeholders and Burgeſſes in the Kingdom from that ineſtimable Privilege of electing Repreſentatives for the future?

Can we ſuppoſe, that the common People would ever have conſented to Abundance of unequal Taxes, ſuch as the charging Lands at the Rate of 4*s.* in the Pound in one County, and 18 d. in another? or that a Man who rents a Houſe at 20 l. per Ann. would be content to pay as much for his Lights as a Duke who has forty times as many, if they were not ſatisfied that theſe Things were done by the Supreme Legiſlative Authority; and therefore ought not to be diſobeyed or reſiſted? If I have any Notion of the Conſtitution of our Government, the King, Lords and Commons have an abſolute, diſcretionary Power, and are accountable to none: Whatever the King or Lords conſent to, binds themſelves and their Poſterity; and what the Commons in Parliament aſſent to, binds thoſe they repreſent and their Poſterity; and the whole Commonalty, King, Lords and Commons, may new-model the Conſtitution, and repeal and alter the Laws as they apprehend moſt conducive to the Safety and Welfare of the Kingdom; and though they ſhould be miſtaken in their Views, yet their Acts are binding: The People who elected them cannot repeal or alter ſuch Laws, for this good Reaſon, becauſe this is our Conſtitution; and for another as good, becauſe the King, Lords and Commons in Parliament muſt be ſuppoſed to underſtand the State and Intereſt of the Nation better than the inferior People do themſelves; and becauſe any Government is better than Anarchy, which we ſhall not be far from, whenever we admit the diffuſive Body of the People to be the Supreme Legiſlative Authority, or which is all one, to controll and oppoſe King, Lords and Commons, when they imagine themſelves aggrieved.

Another Obſervation that every one makes on this Trial is, That the Event was very different from what the Proſecutors expected The Deſign of proſecuting the Doctor, was certainly to ſuppreſs all Murmurs againſt the Conduct of ſome great Men, to eſtabliſh a certain Junto in the Adminiſtration, and deter the Clergy from medling with Politicks; for many celebrated Divines, as well as the Doctor, ſtill ventured to preach up the Church's Danger, notwithſtanding the aboveſaid Vote to the contrary, for which it was thought fit to make one of the Clergy an Example: But had thoſe Gentlemen known the Bravery of the Man, or been acquainted with that true Church-of-England Spirit, which the Clergy manifeſted both at the Revolution and on this Occaſion, they would poſſibly have thought better of it.

For the Body of the Clergy, looking upon their whole Order to be ſtruck at in Doctor Sacheverell, adhered firmly to him. Doctor Lancaſter Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, accompanied him to the Houſe of Commons, when he was carried thither, and above an Hundred of the moſt eminent Clergymen about Town met him in the Court of Requeſts, among whom were ſeveral of the Queen's Chaplains; and the Queen, well ſatisfied there was a great deal of Truth in what the Doctor advanced, changed her Miniſtry ſoon after the Trial, and the Doctor was preferred about the Time: He was allowed to open his Lips again to that fine Living of St. Andrew's Holborn, worth 8 or 900 l. per Ann. In the mean Time, the Doctor going from London to take Poſſeſſion of a Living a Gentleman preſented him to on the Borders of Wales, he was met, near all the Towns through which he paſſed, by Multitudes of People, from whence he received all the Honours they could pay him; but none did him greater Honours in this Triumphant Progreſs than the Univerſity of Oxford, of which he was a Member. This important Trial did not only occaſion a Change in the Miniſtry, but the Diſſolution of the Parliament, and the Choice of another of a very different Stamp: So that, how defective ſoever the Doctor's Sermons may be thought by ſome, never any Diſcourſe had a greater Influence. He carried his Point, and by thoſe very Sermons, which are ſaid to abound in Faults, he ſhewed he knew how to move and perſuade, not only a ſingle Audience, but a whole Kingdom; and there are certainly ſome Paragraphs in them that the greateſt Divines and Orators might have been proud of owning: Nor do I think him at all incapable of compoſing that admirable Speech he ſpoke in his Defence, how mean an Opinion ſoever ſome may have entertained of his Talents.

Biſhop Burnet's Character of the Doctor.

His Enemy, Biſhop Burnet, indeed, treating of Dr. Sacheverell's Trial, pag. 537, 538, of his Poſthumous Hiſtory, ſays, That he was a bold inſolent Man, with a very ſmall Meaſure of Religion, Virtue, Learning, or Good Senſe: That his Sermons contained the moſt petulant Railings at Diſſenters and Low-Church-Men, and were wrote without either Chaſtneſs of Stile, or Livelineſs of Expreſſion: That all was one unpractiſed Strain of indecent ſcurrilous Language: That he made great Reflections on the Miniſtry; repreſenting, that the Church was in Danger, being neglected neglected by thoſe who governed, while they favoured her moſt inveterate Enemies. That in his Sermon, at St. Paul's in London, the Fifth of November, he gave full Vent to his Fury in the moſt virulent Declamation he could contrive upon theſe Words of St. Paul, Perils from falſe Brethren, in which he let himſelf looſe into ſuch Indecencies, that both the Man and the Sermon were univerſally condemned. He poured out much Scorn and Scurrility on the Diſſenters, and ſaid, The Church was violently attacked by Her Enemies, and looſely defended by her pretended Friends. That he animated the People to ſtand up for the Defence of the Church, and ſaid, He ſounded the Trumpet, and deſired them to put on the whole Armour of God: That the Party that oppoſed the Miniſtry did ſo magnify the Sermon preached at St. Paul's, that Forty Thouſand of them were printed and diſperſed over the Nation: That the Queen ſeemed highly offended at it; and the Miniſtry looked on it as an Attack made on them, that was not to be deſpiſed: The Lord Treaſurer was ſo deſcribed (under the Name of Volpone) that it was next to the naming of him; ſo a Parliamentary Impeachment was reſolved on; though Eyre, the Sollicitor-General, and others, thought the ſhort Way, of burning the Sermon, and keeping him in Priſon during the Seſſion, was a better Method; but the more ſolemn Way was unhappily choſen.

A more equal Character of the Doctor.

I do not pretend to any great Intimacy with Dr. Sacheverell; but being employed in compiling the firſt four Volumes of State Trials, and receiving an Intimation, that there were ſome Omiſſions and Alterations in that of the Doctor, publiſhed by Authority, particularly as to the Republican Principles there advanced, and the ſcurrilous Language given him by ſome of the Managers; I went to his Houſe in Holborn, and enquired, If he could furniſh me with any Materials that would ſet his Caſe in a truer Light: He anſwered, That the printed Trial was no more his Trial than it was my Trial; intimating, That the Whole muſt be altered to do him Juſtice; and that the real Trial was preparing to be printed in Holland: But whether a Turn of the Times prevented his going on with that Deſign, or whatever was his Reaſon for ſuppreſſing it, we have not met with any other Trial, than that publiſhed by Authority, from that Day to this.

All that I can ſay of the Doctor of my own Knowledge is, That he was a tall, fair, perſonable Man, and ſpoke gracefully: That no Man read Divine Service better than he did; and that he choſe to do this frequently at the Pariſh-Church of St. Andrew's Holborn, of which he was Rector, to create in the People a juſt Veneratson for the Service of the Church; and I have heard ſeveral excellent Diſcourſes from him in the Pulpit (at leaſt as far as I am capable of judging of a Diſcourſe): His Voice and Action were exceeding juſt, and ſuitable to the Place, as well as to the Audience to whom he preached. 1709-10 9 Annæ.

The Doctor had a good Reputation at Oxford, as to his Parts, Learning, and Morals; and had ſome Perſons of Diſtinction under his Tuition at Magdalen-College, of which he was a Fellow: And it is obſervable there was nothing immoral proved againſt him at his Trial, after the ſtricteſt Examination had been made into his Life and Converſation. As to the Scurrility the Biſhop mentions in the two Sermons, for which he was impeached, the World muſt judge for themſelves: But thus much I may venture to obſerve, That theſe Sermons are far from being ſo ſcurrilous as the Biſhop's Hiſtory, where all Mankind, Friends and Foes, are moſt egregiouſly ſlandered and calumniated.

Further Remarks on the Doctor's Trial.

It has been the Opinion of many, That one great Reaſon of maintaining the Doctrine of Reſiſtance ſo ſtrenuouſly at this Time, was, to let the Queen know, That if ſhe would not ſubmit to the Dictates of the Whigs, ſhe would run the Hazard of being dethroned. It ſeems to have been a Maxim among ſome People, That whenever the Queen refuſed to be adviſed by Her Subjects (by whom they meant the Whigs) they were impowered by the Original Contract, and the Laws of the Land, to depoſe her: And, indeed, if we may credit this Hiſtory of Biſhop Burnet's, he told her ſo not long after; which was, no doubt, a ſufficient Reaſon for the Queen's changing Hands. What Prince would not have done it on ſuch an Intimation? She could not, after this, avoid ſuſpecting, that this Doctrine was eſpouſed, not with an Intention to juſtify the former Revolution, but to make Way for another; or, at leaſt, to exclude her from the Adminiſtration, and place it in the Triumvirate above-mentioned: By which Scheme, ſhe would have become a meer Cypher, and her Name only uſed to ſupport their Uſurpation.

Dammaree's Trial.

The Trial of DANIEL DAMMAREE, Waterman to the Queen, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 18th of April, 1710. 9 Annæ.

The Indictment.

THE Priſoner was indicted by the Name of Daniel Dammaree, of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer, of High-Treaſon, in conſpiring to levy War, and actually levying War againſt the Queen, on the firſt Day of March, in the 8th Year of Her Reign, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes aforeſaid; aſſembling and marching with a great Multitude of People, to the Number of 500 Perſons, armed and arrayed in a Warlike Manner, with Colours flying, Swords, Clubs, and other Weapons, offenſive and defenſive; againſt the Queens Peace, and the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

Tolboy's Evidence.

A Jury being ſworn, and the Witneſſes for the Crown called, Thomas Tolboy teſtified, That on Tueſday, the laſt of February, being the Day before the Meeting-Houſes were pulled down, he paſſed through the Temple in the Evening, and ſaw a great Number of People aſſembled there, who had attended Doctor Sacheverell to his Trial and back again, and heard them talk of pulling down Mr. Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe; ſome, however, were for deferring it till the next Day, and others, till they ſaw the Succeſs of the Trial: But which they reſolved on, he did not know, for he made no Stay there.

Orrel's Evidence.

Edward Orrel teſtified, That he was at Leonard's Coffee-Houſe, on the Firſt of March in the Evening, where News was brought that the Mob were pulling down Dr. Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe; that he thereupon went thither, and was in the Meeting-Houſe three or four Times that Night, and ſaw them pulling down the Pulpit, Pews, &c. That he went from thence to Fetter-Lane, where he ſaw another Mob about ten o'Clock, demoliſhing the Inſide of Bradbury's Meeting-Houſe, and carrying the Materials into Holborn, burnt them there: From thence he went to Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, where he found the firſt Mob burning the Materials of Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe; and heard ſome of them ask, which was my Lord Wharton's, Others ſaid, St. James's, and Others, the City, the Bank: That they divided themſelves, and went from thence, ſome towards the Arch, but more towards Powis-Houſe: That he ſaw Dammaree the Priſoner, in the Queen's Livery, with his Badge, go with thoſe towards Powis-Houſe in Queen-ſtreet; and Dammaree ſaid, Damn it, We will have them all down. Some were for going to the Meeting-Houſe in Wild-Street, but another ſaid, That's a Hen-Rooſt, the other is worth Ten of it: And Dammaree thereupon ſaid, I will lead you on Boys; Huzza! High Church, and Sacheverell! God Damn them all; We will have them all down: And ſome of them turning off to Wild-Street, Dammaree, led the reſt through Queen-ſtreet, and once in ten or twelve Yards, turned about, crying Huzza! Why don't you come on, Boys, to Drury-Lane? and he led them thither; but the Witneſſes never ſaw him afterwards: That he ſaw a little Fellow with a Pick-Ax, endeavouring to break open the Meeting-Houſe Door in Drury-Lane, working at the Bottom of it; when another came up with a Hatchet, and ſaid, Damn you, you break open a Meeting-Houſe! You don't know how, and with two or three Strokes of his Hatchet, he broke through it: That he (the Witneſs) then went into the Meeting-Houſe with them, and asked for Jolly, the Queen's Waterman; and one ſaid, he was gone to the Back-Door, and another, that he was gone to Lord Wharton's; but he never ſaw him afterwards.

Joſeph Collier teſtified, That he ſaw Dammaree bring the Branch, or great Candleſtick from Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe, to the Fire in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and that he carried it three Times round the Fire, in a ſort of a Proceſſion, huzzaing; and then threw it in.

Still's Evidence.

John Still, ſaid, he ſaw the Priſoner hollowing in the Alley that leads to Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe; and John Mitchel depoſed, That he ſaw him hollowing, and throwing up his Hat, about the Fire in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

Morgan's Evidence.

Francis Morgan teſtified, That Dammaree was at the Fire in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, in his Waterman's Coat, encouraging the Mob: That he walked round the Fire, and threw ſeveral Things in; and he (the Witneſs) telling them the Guards were coming, ſome of the Mob ſaid, Damn the Guards and the Parliament too: We are ready to face them all; and he ſaw the Doors of the Meeting-Houſe thrown into the Fire, after they were carried about it in Proceſſion.

Eaton depoſed, he ſaw Dammarree and ſome Others, force a Soldier that was at the Fire, to pull of his Hat.

The Evidence for the Queen being cloſed, Mr. Darnell, the Priſoner's Counſel, made the following Obſervation on it, viz.

Obſervations of the Priſoner's Counſel on the Evidence againſt him.

As this Indictment charges the Priſoner with levying War, there muſt be a Proof of ſuch Facts as do amount to a levying of War. The Witneſſes for the Queen have ſworn, that the Priſoner was at the Fire in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and that there he did hollow and throw up his Hat. I believe that muſt be agreed, for my Inſtructions are, that he did ſo, and our Witneſſes will all ſay as much. But if that were all, then the Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner muſt be equally Guilty:

For

For the Chief of them, Orrell, ſays, he was forced to pull off his Hat; and it was known to be the Practice of the Mob that Night, to make all that paſſed by, pay Obedience, as they called it, to Dr. Sacheverell and High Church. But my Lord, that which I humbly offer on behalf of the Priſoner, is, That unleſs he were in the Intention of pulling down the Meeting-Houſes in general, and did ſomething in Execution of that general Intention, it will not be a levying War againſt Her Majeſty. My Lord, it is obſerved that this Man was at the Fire in his Coat and Badge, and we think a great deal my be inferred from his Habit, that he was not in ſo evil an Intention as levying War againſt Her Majeſty, whoſe Servant he was ſo remarkably diſtinguiſhed to be; but a Man, who had ſuch a vile Deſign to execute, would dreſs himſelf in ſuch a Manner as would beſt conceal him: Therefore we think his being preſent at the Fire, and hollowing, and the reſt of the Evidence againſt him, is not enough to prove him in that general Intention, and the Execution of it.

The Gentlemen of the other Side thought it neceſſary to give ſome Evidence of a Deſign to pull down the Meeting-Houſes in general, and for that purpoſe, proved that a great Number of People were got together, the Night before, in the Temple Walks; where there was a Diſcourſe by ſome of them, that they would pull down Mr. Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe; but who thoſe People were, I don't hear, nor do they by any means bring that Home to the Priſoner. And it is impoſſible for us to give an Anſwer to that Evidence; for to ſay the Mob ſaid ſo, is to ſay that Nobody ſaid ſo; and no Witneſſes can be falſified on ſuch an Evidence, for who that Mob were, is not explained. And my Lord, if there was no Intention, or no general Intention, to pull down Meeting-Houſes, we apprehend there can be no levying of War: If the Fact were ſudden and accidental, or only intended againſt a particular Meeting-Houſe, we muſt ſubmit that to your Lordſhip, whether, if he were Guilty of that Fact, it would amount to High-Treaſon. We think all the Caſes go on this Foundation, that there muſt be an Intention to commit ſuch like Offence in general; and an Intention to commit it to the particular Injury of a Perſon, or Place, will not be ſufficient. The Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner ſay, there was an Intention, or Diſcourſe, of going to Mr. Burgeſs's Meeting Houſe, and no Talk of any other; but when they were there, then they went to a Second, and on to a Third: But the original Intent by the Mob, doth not appear to be more than to go to Mr. Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe, and to pull that down, and therefore is not a levying of War.

The Caſe in Print, in the ſecond Anderſon, 66, where the People in Oxfordſhire conſpire to aſſemble together, and move others to join them, and to pull down Incloſures, was attended with this Circumſtance, That it was a general Intent; and, when they were got together themſelves, they perſuaded others to join with them: They conſpired to go to ſeveral Gentlemen's Houſes, and to take Arms and Horſes, and to kill ſeveral Gentlemen, and then to come to London; and their Intent was general, not to pull down any particular Enclоſure, but all of them for the Enlargement of Highways and Commons, and ſo to reform that which the Law ought to do.

So in the ſame Book, in the Caſe of the Apprentices of London, 2 Anderſon, 4, 5. For reducing the Price of Victuals in general, they agreed to break open the Priſons, to releaſe ſome of their Companions, and to go to the Lord Mayor's Houſe, and to kill him, and burn his Houſe, and then to break open two other Houſes near the Tower, where there were Arms for three hundred Perſons: Then to diſperſe Libels, and to perſuade other People to join with them.

There is a later Caſe in my Lord Chief Juſtice Keyling's Reports, which was the Intention of pulling down Bawdy-Houſes; there they took upon themſelves Regal Authority, and would not take the Courſe the Law preſcribed: But, my Lord, thoſe Caſes are attended with many worſe Circumſtances than this is, for there they aſſembled with Arms; there they had one they called Captain to lead them, with his Sword drawn; they had Aprons, and ſuch Things on Staves, which they called Standards and Colours, and, in a Military Way they marched, and did pull down ſeveral Houſes, which they called Bawdy-Houſes: That Caſe is reported in my Lord Keyling's Reports, fol. 70. and was adjudged levying of War, becauſe the Intent was general, and becauſe they took upon themſelves to do that which is the Buſineſs of the Queen, and the Laws of this Kingdom only to do. But, my Lord, in that Caſe, there are two Perſons who ſeem to have as great a Charge of Guilt upon them as the Priſoner at the Bar, and were diſcharged from thoſe Indictments for levying War, by the Opinion of all the Judges. One of them was found to be at the Meeting where the Diſcourſe was of pulling down theſe Bawdy-Houſes, that is William Green, that he went along with them, caſting up his Cap, and hallowing, with a Staff in his Hand; but becauſe there was not any particular Act of Force found to be committed by him, he was diſcharged. Another, one Bedell, was found among the Mob, and, when the Guards came to diſperſe them, and he was purſued by one of the King's Soldiers, he called out to his Fellows to face about, and not to leave him. This, we think, is at leaſt as ſtrong an Evidence againſt them as has been given againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; and yet they were both diſcharged by the Opinion of all the Judges.

My Lord, where a Fact is found, which Fact is an aiding and aſſiſting, we think it can't be a Defect in the finding of the Verdict, that he did not aid and aſſiſt. The Facts they found were only Inſtances of aiding and aſſiſting; and if theſe Inſtances will be ſufficient, then the Court were as fully poſſeſſed of them, as they are now upon this Evidence.

My Lord, as to the Fact, we think we have a very good Caſe of it: We have Proof, every Hour of the Day, of the 1ſt of March, where the Priſoner was, from Morning till Night. That he was at the Conſult the Night before, with the Mob, I think, is not pretended on the other Side. On the Day in the Indictment, we ſhall ſhew he was, from Eight or Nine in the Morning, in the Company of ſeveral Perſons, till about Ten at Night, or later: That at that Hour, he was at an Alehouſe in Water-Lane, in Fleetſtreet, where a Gentleman's Servant came in, and told the Company there was a Fire; the Priſoner ſtarted up, and thought it had been in the Houſe, but finding it was not, he went into the Street; there it was reported, That Mr. Burgeſſes's Meeting-Houſe was pulled down and burnt. In about an Hour after that, he came along Fleet-ſtreet, and, at Hercules-Pillars-Alley, near the Temple, there was a Sempſtreſs ſtanding at her Door, with whom, the Priſoner ſtaid talking ſome Time, and, whilſt they were together, ſeveral People came by, and ſaid, that Burgeſſes's Meeting-Houſe was quite down, and burnt: From thence, he went up Chancery-Lane, and through Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, to ſee what was the Matter, and found, as it was reported, that it was all burnt. The Mob that were then about the Fire, laid hold of him, and uſed him as they did all other People that came by, and made him pull off his Hat, and hollow, High Church, and Sacheverell! If not, they muſt have a Knock on the Pate. When they found he was much in Drink, they puſhed him about, and ſaid, He ſhould be their Captain; and then they hollowed, and ſaluted him Captain: But nothing of this came from himſelf, but they gathered about him, and there their Captain was in the Middle, more like to ſuffer than command. My Lord, the Evidence againſt him don't pretend to charge him to be in Drury-Lane, only that he went that Way with them. Now as to the Intention, which they would ſuppoſe the Priſoner had, of pulling down all the Meeting-Houſes, I ſay, my Lord, a Man would not, from being a Captain, and from ſo great a Zeal to the Cauſe, deſert his Companions, even in the firſt Inſtance in which he could ſerve them: For, I ſubmit it, Whether there is any Evidence that he was in, or at any one of the Meeting-Houſes, after the Fire in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields: And if he was ſo forward, as the Witneſſes ſeem to charge him to have been, ſurely he would have gone to Drury-Lane at leaſt, and done ſome Act of his Authority; but that is not proved. And, my Lord, of our Side, we ſhall prove, that he did not go to Drury-Lane, but that, at Twelve o'Clock, he was in Bed, at his own Houſe in Lambeth: So that there will be no Time to ſuppoſe him guilty of doing any thing after his entering upon his Office, but only that he went off as ſoon as he could.

There was one of the Witneſſes, my Lord, that ſaid, he was in Lincolns-Inn-Fields about Eight or Nine o'Clock, and ſaw the Priſoner there; now we ſhall ſhew, that till half an Hour after Ten, he was engaged in Company in Water-Lane: But there is a Circumſtance in our Evidence, which, we think, may reconcile that; for we can prove, that at Doctor Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe, there was a Waterman, in his Livery and Badge, who was buſy in pulling down, and carrying away the Materials; but the Priſoner can't be ſuppoſed to be the ſame, for that Perſon wore his own Hair, and the Priſoner has worn a Wig many Years: And, my Lord, if my Inſtructions are true, we have Perſons that knew the Priſoner before, that will take it on their Oaths, that it was not Dammaree; if ſo, then the Witneſſes that prove him to bring out the Branch, we hope, will be reconciled by this, that there was another Man in the ſame Habit. It is an eaſy Thing for a Boy, in a Croud, to make ſuch a Miſtake; for that was the Reaſon why he knew it to be Dammaree, becauſe he had his Waterman's Coat and Badge on: That Man is not found out; but we hope we ſhall not ſtand in his Place.

1710. 9 Annæ.

My Lord, another Circumſtance we have of the Innocence of the Priſoner, is, that the next Morning, when he got up, he went to his common Buſineſs, to Work upon one of the Queen's Barges, and there, I think, he was, when the Meſſenger came to take him: He was not under the leaſt Apprehenſion that he had done any Thing that would make him Guilty of a Crime, eſpecially ſo great a one as this he is charged with: If he had, he would have taken ſome Care of himſelf; but his Innocence was all the Protection he made uſe of. We hope our Evidence will ſatisfy your Lordſhip and the Jury, that ſome of the Witneſſes againſt him were miſtaken, and ours will ſhew that he withdrew from the Fire as ſoon as poſſibly he could; and we ſhall call ſome other Witneſſes to ſhew that he is a Man of another Character, than to be guilty of ſuch an Offence. The Gentlemen of the other Side, ſaid, he was doubly obliged to bear Allegiance to Her Majeſty; we own it, that he was Her Waterman; that he always behaved himſelf dutifully towards Her Majeſty; that, on other Occaſions, he has expreſſed his Abhorrence of any Thing of this Nature. My Lord, if he is of a good Character, zealous for the Government, and has always expreſſed himſelf ſo, no Man, that is of that Character, can be guilty of ſuch a Crime, than which there can be none greater, to raiſe War againſt Her Majeſty, in the Bowels of the Kingdom; and the Greatneſs of the Charge is that which, we hope, will make your Lordſhip and the Jury require the more exact Proof. We will call our Witneſſes to make out our Caſe, and then ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

The Evidence for the Priſoner.

The Witneſſes for the Priſoner being called, Thomas Allen teſtified, That on the firſt of March, the Day the Meeting-Houſes were pulled down, he was with the Priſoner Dammaree from Ten in the Morning till Twelve at Noon; and that the Priſoner was then engaged in taking an Apprentice from Chriſt's-Hoſpital.

Stephen Pink depoſed to the ſame Effect, and that he left him with Mr. Wood, at the Cock in Amen-Corner, at 2 or 3 o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Wood

1709-10. 9 Annæ.

Wood teſtified, That he was with Dammaree on the firſt of March, from Nine in the Morning till Ten at Night, drinking from one Houſe to another; and that the laſt Ale-houſe they were at, was at the Bell in Water-Lane, where one John Light a Poſtillion came in about Ten, and ſaid there was a Fire in the Strand, and thereupon Dammaree ſaid he would go and aſſiſt a Gentlewoman of his Acquaintance that lived in the Strand: That he (the Witneſs) went with Dammaree as far as Temple-Bar, and there they met a great Mob, which forced them up Sheer-Lane into Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, ſaying to Dammaree, Damn you, you are the Queen's Waterman, you ſhall go with us, or we will tear you in Pieces: And Dammaree deſired they would not knock him on the Head, and he would go with them, That they went with them into Lincoln's-Inn-Square, and then were forced through a Wicket into the Street that leads to Great Lincoln's-Fields, and there he (the Witneſs) left them; but they forced Dammaree to go with them to the Fire.

Fucard who kept the Bell Ale-houſe at Water-Lane End depoſed, That Dammaree came to his Houſe at Two in the Afternoon on the firſt of March, and ſtaid there till half an Hour after Ten, and then went away very much in Drink; but he heard nothing of a Fire.

Charles Biſhop depoſed, That Dammaree ſtaid with him at the Bell Ale-houſe, on the firſt of March, till half an Hour after Ten at Night, and went away much in Drink; that News was brought in of a Fire about Nine, an Hour before he went away.

John Light depoſed, That he brought the News of the Fire into the Bell Ale-houſe about Nine at Night, the firſt of March, and Dammaree ſtaid there afterwards till between Ten and Eleven.

Ward depoſed, He ſaw Dammaree at Mr. Giles's Shop in Fleet-ſtreet, at half an Hour after Ten, on the firſt of March at Night, and he was ſo drunk that he reeled; and the People ſaid there was a Fire, the Inſide of Burgeſs's Meeting-houſe was burnt, and he ſaw ſome People carry the Irons, by that ſupported the Pulpit.

Mrs. Giles teſtified, That Dammaree called at her Shop againſt St. Dunſtan's Church, after Ten, the firſt of March, and asked what was the Meaning of the Tumult, and was told Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe was burnt: That he ſtood talking with her a good while, at the Shop Door; ſhe remembered him well, becauſe he had the Queen's Coat on; and being asked, how ſhe came here as a Witneſs? ſhe anſwered, that hearing ſuch a Man was taken up, ſhe ſaid to ſeveral Neighbours, it was impoſſible he could be at the pulling down the Meeting-Houſe, for that he was at her Door at that Time, and came from the City; and ſome of Dammaree's Friends hearing of it, ſubpœna'd her: That a great many other People came by the Shop at the ſame Time, crying out, Who are you for? and thereupon Dammaree ſaid, he was for the Queen; but he ſeemed to be pretty much in Drink.

Cummins teſtified, That he ſaw Dammaree at the Fire in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields about Eleven at Night; that he was very drunk, and the People pulled him about, and made Sport with him, and one ſtruck him, becauſe he did not pull off his Hat. 1710. 9 Annæ.

Mary Reading, and Iſabel Prince depoſed, that it was a little Waterman, in his own black Hair, that threw the Sconce into the Fire at Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and not the Priſoner; and, when the Fire was almoſt out, they ſaw the Priſoner going towards it, and ſpoke to him, and he kiſs'd the laſt Witneſs upon her ſaying, here comes the Queen's Waterman.

Rowland Walker depoſed, That he carried Dammaree croſs the Thames from the Stairs at Strand-Bridge, to his Houſe at Lambeth, on the Firſt of March at Night, at half an Hour after Eleven, and he was very much in drink.

Hales, and Harbin teſtified, They met Dammaree in the Strand the ſame Night after Eleven: That he was in drink, and going towards Strand Bridge.

Then ſeveral Witneſſes appeared to his Reputation, and ſaid, He was well-affected to the Queen and Government, and of a peaceable Diſpoſition; and one ſaid he heard him ſay, He wiſhed Dr. Sacheverell had never preached that Sermon, and then there had been none of this Trouble: And others ſaid, He was as ſerviceable as any one in raiſing Men for the Queen, when he was Maſter of the Waterman's Company.

Obſervations of the Priſoner's Counſel on the Evidence.

Mr. Darnel, in his Obſervations on the Evidence given for the Priſoner, ſaid, This Caſe comes far ſhort of that in the Lord Keyling's Reports; for there was plain Hoſtility, a Captain with a Sword drawn, Colours, two Meetings to conſult, and a Reſolution taken, a reſiſting and wounding the Conſtable, and ſtriking the Officer of the Guards, and their Intention to pull down Bawdy-Houſes, which might be any Houſe they thought fit to call ſo. As for the Caſe of Oxfordſhire, it is plain, there was an arming themſelves, they had put on Armour to act offenſively, as well as defenſively; they propoſed to come to London, and to have others join with them, and that Caſe was adjudged High-Treaſon. For the general Intention to pull down Incloſures, Where there is any Reſolution, that theſe great Tumults amount to High-Treaſon; it is on this Foundation, that the Deſign is general, and is an exerciſing of a Regal Authority, which no Body but Her Majeſty ought to make uſe of. It is ſaid in Meſſenger's Caſe, that the Intent muſt be ſuch, and that ſuch Intent muſt appear by ſuch Proof as will ſatisfy the Jury. Now, how do they offer to prove the Intent of this Man? If there is any Thing to prove it, it is ſubſequent to the pulling down the firſt Meeting-Houſe; for it is plain, he was not there 'till the Deſign was ſo far executed, and the Fire had been made an Hour before he came: Now, if he comes there, and hollows and rejoices at it, that cannot make him guilty. I agree, that if any Number of Perſons are going to commit High-Treaſon, and a Man meets them, and joins with them in the Execution of that Fact, he is guilty; but if he be ignorant of their Deſign, and hollows hollows and rejoices with the Crowd, that will not make him guilty: And in this Case it appears, that every Body that passed by the Crowd that Night were constrained so to do; but where such Person, who is got into such a tumultuous Assembly, doth get off as fast as he can, this cannot be High-Treason, or any Crime whatsoever. If the Prisoner had gone to Drury-lane, and they had shewn that he did any Thing there, we should have had a harder Case than we hope we have; but we think there is no Proof of the Intention of this Man to commit those Facts of pulling down the Meeting-Houses in general, and of assisting in the Execution of that Intention.

My Lord, if our Witnesses (whose Credit stands unimpeached) be believed, it is impossible he could be concerned in this Design, or the Execution of it, or know any Thing of it till it was executed: For it don't appear, that, on any of the Days when the Mob were together, he was among them, or that he acted any Thing 'till after the Meeting-House was pulled down, and the Fire made. We have shewn where he was all that Day, and that it was near Eleven when he came to the Fire. I think we have shewn by the Waterman that carried him Home, that there was not Room for him to bear any Share in this Outrage; for between the Time of his coming to the Fire, and going Home by Water, there is no Room for him to do any Thing more than to go between those Places. There is no Proof that he did any Thing, but what the Mob in a Manner forced him to do; and perhaps it might have cost him his Life, in so tumultuous an Assembly, or, at least, some bodily Harm, if he had done less.

Mr. Sollicitor in his Reply to the Prisoner's Counsel said,

The Reply to the Prisoner's Defence.

My Lord, there are two Points to be considered in this Case: First, Whether this Tumult be a levying War, and High-Treason? And in the next Place, how far the Prisoner may be concerned in it? Whether what he has done, has made him equally guilty with the others, supposing the general Design, and the Execution of it, to be High-Treason?

We take it, that this Design to pull down these Meeting-Houses, was a general Design; and being a general Design, and done upon Pretence of Reformation, and in Defiance of the Law, that this is High-Treason, and levying War; and Facts of this kind, in all Ages, have been adjudged so. The general Design is proved by what followed, by the Action, by pulling them down; for we have proved that four were pulled down, and that there was an Intention, or Declaration, that they would pull down Meeting-Houses. What is this Design against? It is against the Queen: It is levying War within the Realm, which I take to be a material Word in the 25th of Edward III. It is levying War against Her Sovereignty, Her Power and Authority, in Matters which She, either as concerned in the Legislature, or in the executive Power of the Government, may reform and correct. The taking Arms in Defiance of any Law, or to correct any Abuse, or to deprive the Subject of the Benefit of any particular Act of Parliament, is levying War and High-Treason; and so adjudged by the Statute of Queen Elizabeth. The Case of the ——— was long before that Time; the Case of Inclosures was a private Interest; yet the getting a Number of People together, in order to throw down all Inclosures, is adjudged to be High-Treason; and that Resolution has always been affirmed. That is the Interest of Private Persons, and therefore will shew what they insist on of the other Side against the Queen, is of no Consequence; for, if it was levyed against Her Authority, with Submission, that is High-Treason: The taking up Arms against it, though there was no immediate Intention against Her Person, or to destroy Her. Indeed it has been common to lay a Design to compass and imagine the Death of the Queen, and the Overt-Act of the Treason has been the Proof of that Design; there the compassing is the Treason, and the Overt-Act is only the Proof, and therefore a Design must be laid in that Case. But in Cases of this Nature, the levying War is the Treason, and therefore the proving the levying War, is sufficient, without laying any Design to compass or imagine Her Death. Now that this is against the Queen, and Her Sovereignty, is most plain, because it is certain these Meeting-Houses are tolerated by Law: The Dissenters are indulged in the Exercise of the Worship of God, in their own Way, by the Act of Parliament: That Act of Parliment can be taken away by nothing but an equal Power; in which the Queen must give Her Assent, and it must have Her Concurrence. The Queen has the Administration of Justice under her Care, therefore taking up Arms to destroy Meeting-Houses in this Manner is levying War against the Queen, and levying War within the Realm; to invade that Right which by the Laws of the Kingdom these People are entituled to; for the Law has given this Right. Now, to take up Arms to violate that Right, is High-Treason, and is a stronger Case than any that have been mentioned and agreed to be Law. The Case of an Inclosure is a private Interest; the taking Arms to enlarge a Highway is so; to destroy Bawdy-Houses is so; to take up Arms to remove a Publick Nusance, which ought to be the Particular Care of the Government, that is levying War.

1709 10. 9 Annæ

They have insisted upon the Statute of the 13th of Elizabeth, which they use as an Argument to shew that this was not Treason within the Statute of Edward III. but that Act was to make a Conspiracy to levy War, High-Treason. But then how stood the Case of the Inclosures at that Time? Several People conspired to throw down Inclosures, and that was adjudged High-Treason, because it was a Conspiracy to levy War; and how could that be High-Treason, if taking Arms to throw down Inclosures were not so? We take it that the Case of Anderson, is full in Point; and these Cases are affirmed by the Judges in the Case of Messenger: So that this is the greatest Authority, and never to be shaken. They say the Case in Anderson is a private Opinion; it is the Opinion of the Two Chief Justices; and the Master of the Rolls;

1710. 9 Annæ.

Rolls; the others are the Opinion of all the Judges: So that it is ſuch an Authority as never can be ſhaken.

This ſhews the Foundation that there is for this neceſſary Proſecution, that People may ſee, that it is not in the Power of every Man, according to his own Fancy, to find Fault with the Government, and alter the Laws, and deprive the Subject of any Benefit he is entitled to by Law. It is an Invaſion of the Royal Authority; they may, by the ſame Reaſon, fall upon a Man's Perſon, as they may pull down a Man's Houſe: And Things of this Nature muſt run into endleſs Confuſion, and none can be ſafe, unleſs People, that are thus Guilty, be brought to Puniſhment.

Theſe Authorities then being ſo ſtrong, we hope, as the Caſe ſtands, on the Evidence for the Queen, that the Priſoner has been proved Guilty of the Charge in the Indictment; for that there was a general Deſign, appears by what was done in the Execution of it. The only Queſtion is, Whether this Man was privy to any precedent Deſign? And, for this, I rely on the Lord Eſſex's Caſe, in Moor's Reports, which was ſettled by all the Judges in England. I ſay, that it is not neceſſary to prove any ſuch previous Intention, any more than if a Man ſhould be ſo bold as to murder a Judge on the Bench. Muſt you prove that there was any Deſign? Don't the Blow that was given ſhew the Deſign? And is it not High Treaſon in caſe of counterfeiting the Coin? Muſt you prove an Intention? No; the Treaſon is in the Fact, and not in the Intention: Where it is in the Intention, as compaſſing the Death of the Queen, there muſt be an Intention proved; but where it is in Fact, where the Fact is Treaſon, no previous Deſign is neceſſary to be proved, in any Caſe whatſoever: The Fact it ſelf is the Treaſon, and ſpeaks the Deſign; and the Man that commits Treaſon, muſt do it with a Treaſonable Intention. And, in the Lord Eſſex's Caſe, it was adjudged that my Lord Southampton, who joined with him in that Fact, which was adjudged levying War, was Guilty of the ſame Treaſon, though he did not know of the Deſign of the Lord Eſſex, but thought he meant only to remove ſome particular Enemies of his from the Queen.

They ſay, if he was there, he was only there by Force: As to his coming there, I think it is as fully proved as can be; but, ſay they, it was not he that threw the Sconce into the Fire, for he was at another Place at that Time; for that was thrown in at Nine or Ten o'Clock, and he was then elſewhere. I wonder this ſhould be inſiſted upon, it being only a ſmall Variance in Time; and as he was obſerved to do the Fact, it is not material as to the Hour: Therefore, unleſs what the Women ſay is an Anſwer to that Evidence, it ſtill remains unanſwered; and as to what they ſay, we muſt ſubmit it, whether it can be believed; whether they deſerve that Credit; whether a Man that ſtood by, and ſaw every Thing that paſſed, and followed him up the Street, to the Fields, whether they can deſerve that Credit that this Man does; for what they ſaw was only at the Fire. They agree a Waterman did it, but it was a ſhort Man in black Hair, and they ſaw him only by looking under ſome People's Arms; they could not diſcern ſo particularly as this Man, that ſaw him come out of the Houſe, and followed him: But whether he was concerned in that Act or no, is not material. His going from the Fields, and hollowing the People to Drury-Lane, is a Matter they have not anſwered; they have given no Evidence to anſwer that; and if that were ſo, it is a ſufficient Evidence of his levying War; that is enough, his ſaying he would lead them, and encouraging them to go with him; that, no Doubt, will be a full Evidence, joined with his being at the Fire, which is proved by five or ſix Witneſſes; and this is contradicted by nothing, but ſaying he did it by Force; and if that were Fact, then certainly he would not be guilty: But on what does this depend? On two Witneſſes; on Wood, whom, I think, no body can believe, for he contradicts himſelf in coming to the Place, and going from it again; and how defective he was in every Point, I doubt not, your Lordſhip and the Jury have obſerved. But when they call their other Witneſs, they make it clear; for, if any Credit is to be given to their other Witneſs, Wood is not to be believed; for he ſays, the Priſoner left the Alehouſe to ſerve a Friend in the Strand, and that he went along with him; but this is contradicted by the other Witneſſes, and it appears, that he was not with him in Fleet-ſtreet. Cummins ſays, the Priſoner was drunk, and thruſt about by the Mob from one to another; but he don't prove he was under any Force: If he had, they would have treated him otherwiſe; but they are continually juſtling and playing with one another; and though other People were threatened, that don't prove that he was. They ſay he was drunk; that is no Excuſe at all. I was willing the Jury ſhould have all the Circumſtances before them, and therefore joined in asking that Queſtion; but it cannot be material, nor is he more or leſs Guilty, whether he was drunk or ſober: So that we take it, there is no Evidence that he was under any ſuch Force, as put him under a Neceſſity, for his own Preſervation, to join with the People in this Tumult. If he was not under an abſolute Neceſſity, he cannot be excuſed: So that it is plain, they have not anſwered that Matter at all. And as to the two Women, that never ſaw him before, but met him coming back to the Fire; and as to the Proof, That he was at Home at Twelve o'Clock, that is no ways inconſiſtent with our Evidence. The Matter of Reputation is no ways to be conſidered in this Caſe: I would not ſay any thing more, but you hear what was the Noiſe of the Mob, and that Cry and Hurry that was made on this Occaſion, was in Defiance of the Juſtice of the Nation, which was then carrying on in the moſt ſolemn Manner. But we ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, that this Fact, this Deſign, executed in this Manner, is plainly levying War and High Treaſon; and the Priſoner at the Bar, by the Evidence that has been offered, is Guilty of the Fact charged againſt him in the Indictment.

The Chief Juſtice afterwards gave his Directions to the Jury, and ſaid,

It is unhappy, indeed, that theſe Miſtakes are propagated; but it is monſtrous to ſee how People may be miſled; that they ſhould fall foul on the Diſſenters, and pull down the Meeting-Houſes, when they are rather the Objects of Pity than Anger. If they are not ſatisfied with the Eſtabliſhed Church, which is the beſt in the World, and they loſe the Benefit and Advantage of that excellent Conſtitution, they are to be pitified for their Miſtake: But why ſhould any one be angry becauſe they do a Prejudice to themſelves? But this Matter having been under the Conſideration of the Legiſlature, and there being a Law that allows them the Liberty to ſerve God in their own Way; ſince that Liberty is allowed them, why ſhould any body be concerned that they enjoy it? And why ſhould their Meeting-Houſes be pulled down? But Dr. Sacheverell, at that Time (I would not reflect on him; he has undergone a Cenſure in another Place), when he had fallen foul on the Toleration, and repreſented it as an Encouragement to Schiſm, and a Ground of Danger to the Church; thoſe People that thought him a Confeſſor for the Church, thought they could do no leſs than pull down thoſe Meeting-Houſes, which were the Seminaries of Schiſm. And this Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance, which is cried up in all Caſes to be the Doctrine of the Church, this Doctrine is propagated by Reſiſtance: Theſe People will reſiſt to ſhew they are not for reſiſting, and oppoſe the Queen's Guards in Vindication of that Doctrine, That no body ought to reſiſt: But it ſhews, that when a Madneſs is got among the People, they cannot think as they ought to do; and many unaccountable Things will be done; and, therefore, he might think it no Blemiſh to his Reputation. And Dr. Sacheverell, that has been condemned for thoſe Things by the Parliament, and ſtands convicted of being Guilty of them, ſome People having made it honourable to him, others thought it might be an Honour to them too, to demoliſh Meeting-Houſes, and to raiſe Seditions and Riots which are not to be borne in a civilized Country; for no body knows where popular Tumults will end.

This being then the Matter of Fact on both Sides, and what there is in Fact, and in Preſumption, Give me Leave to take Notice what the Law is in this Caſe. For it has been inſiſted on by the Counſel for the Priſoner (I muſt do them Right, they have taken into Conſideration all the Caſes that relate to this Matter); that they inſiſt, his is not levying War; and, on this Ground, that he was not proved to be at the Meeting-Houſe in Drury-Lane, but only at the Fire at Dr. Burgeſs's: And if he was only at one Place, one Inſtance would not make it levying War. If, ſay they, there had been a general Intention, it would have gone hard with him: There was an Intention the Night before, and Mr Burgeſs's was only mentioned; and it is not certain that there was a general Deſign to pull down the reſt: Nay, he was not there, and it was by Accident that he came into Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and he was but at that one Place; and they take Notice of ſome Caſes, eſpecially that about the Bawdy-Houſes, and that the Lord Chief Juſtice Hales differed from the reſt of the Judges.

This is a Matter that has been often under Conſideration: The Act of 25 Edward III. which is the great Law for Declarations of Treaſon, declares what ſhall be adjudged Treaſon: Compaſſing, or imagining the Death of the King, and levying War againſt the King, are two diſtinct Species of Treaſon. Now they ſay, that nothing was deſigned againſt the Queen. If the levying War againſt the Queen, was there meant only of a War againſt the Queen's Perſon, it would have been idle to mention it in that Act, becauſe they had before made the compaſſing Her Death to be Treaſon.

Now he that levies War, does more than compaſs and imagine the King's Death; therefore, it has been always ruled, that where there is an actual levying of War, which concerns the Perſon of the King, they lay the Treaſon to be the compaſſing the Death of the King, and give a Proof of it by levying War. But there is another levying of War, which is not immediately againſt the Perſon of the King, but only between ſome particular Perſons. There is a vaſt Difference between a Man's going to remove an Annoyance to himſelf, and going to remove a publick Nuſance, as the Caſe of the Bawdy-Houſes; and the general Intention to pull them down all is the Treaſon: For, if thoſe that were concerned for them would defend them, and the others would pull them down, there would be a War immediately.

In the Caſe of Incloſures, where the People of a Town have had Part of their Common incloſed, though they have come with a great Force to throw down that Incloſure, yet that is not levying of War; but if any will go to pull down all Incloſures, and make it a general Thing to reform that which they think a Nuſance, that neceſſarily makes a War between all the Lords and the Tenants. A Bawdy-Houſe is a Nuſance, and may be puniſhed as ſuch; and if it be a particular Prejudice to any one, if he himſelf ſhould go in an unlawful Manner to redreſs that Prejudice, it might be only a Riot; but if he will ſet up to pull them all down in general, he has taken the Queen's Right out of her Hand: He has made it a general Thing, and, when they are once up, they may call every Man's Houſe a Bawdy-Houſe: And this is a general Thing, it affects the whole Nation.

Now, to come to this Inſtance: If you believe the Evidence, Dammaree was concerned in pulling down two Meeting-Houſes: He was not preſent at Drury-Lane, that is, he was not proved to be there; but, if he ſet others on to do it, it is his doing; and he as much pulled down that Meeting-Houſe in Drury-Lane, as if he had pulled it down with his own Hands. Beſides, they tell you his Decla-

Declaration, that he would have all of them down. Again, theſe Gentlemen don't ſeem to deny, but if the Intention were general, it would be levying War: If it were general, where would it end? And it is taking on them the Royal Authority; nay more, for the Queen can't pull them down till the Law is altered: Therefore he has here taken on him not only the Royal Authority, but a Power that no Perſon in England has. It concerns all that are againſt the Meeting-Houſes on one Side, and all that are for them on the other; and therefore is levying War.

They ſaid they would deſire this Point to be reſerved to them, on Account of the Opinion of the Lord Chief Juſtice Hales; but I believe this Matter has been ſo often ſettled, that it would be ſtrange for us to depart from ſuch a ſettled Rule of Law; for theſe are only the ſame Arguments that were offered by the Lord Chief Juſtice, and he offered the ſame Arguments that were uſed in Queen Elizabeth's Reign; but it was then held to be Treaſon, and has been held ſo ever ſince. His Objection made them conſider it then, and they did ſo; and I ſuppoſe they will not expect that it ſhould have more Weight out of their Mouths than out of his: It was then ſettled, and has been taken for Law at all Times ſince, ſo that it is not a Matter now to be called in Queſtion. And as to the Statute 13 Eliz. the Intention to levy War ſurely is not an Intention to do a Thing, which, when it is done, is not levying War.

1710. 9 Annæ.

Thus the Matter ſtands in Point of Law: I take it to be clear, that it is levying War, if you take him to be guilty of being at one of the Meeting-Places, and leading them and tempting them to another: Whether that is true or not, is what muſt be left to your Conſideration. You have heard what has been ſaid, and what Difficulties ariſe in Point of Time, and on the other Proofs: If you are of Opinion, that he was preſent at Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and did encourage them, and acted any otherwiſe than by Force; if you believe he led or invited them to another Place, and pulled down that, then you will find him guilty of High-Treaſon: If you think he was not there, or was under a Compulſion, then he will not be guilty. As for his being drunk, whether he was ſo or not, ought not to influence one Way or other.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after an Hour's Receſs, brought in the Priſoner GUILTY, and Sentence was paſſed on him as a Traitor: But the Queen, being fully ſatisfied of his Loyalty and Affection to Her Perſon, though he had been miſtaken in the Manner of expreſſing it, was pleaſed to grant him Her Pardon.

The Remarks on this Trial will be found at the End of that of Purchaſe, whoſe Offence was of the like Nature.

1710. 9 Annæ. Willis's Trial.

The Trial of FRANCIS WILLIS, a Footman, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 21ſt of April, 1710. 9 Annæ.

1710. 9 Annæ.

The Indictment.

THE Priſoner was indicted by the Name of Francis Willis, of the Pariſh of St. Andrew's Holborn, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer, for conſpiring to levy War and ſtir up Rebellion, and actually levying War againſt Her Majeſty on the firſt of March, in the Ninth Year of Her Reign, in the ſaid Pariſh of St. Andrew's Holborn, by aſſembling and marching with a Multitude of People in a Warlike Manner, that is to ſay, with Colours flying, Swords, Clubs, and other Weapons, offenſive and defenſive; againſt the Queen's Peace, and the Form of the Statute, &c.

The Evidence for the Crown.

The Witneſſes being called, Thomas Tolboy depoſed as he had done at the former Trial, That paſſing through the Temple on the laſt of February in the Evening, he heard the Mob that attended Doctor Sacheverell talking of demoliſhing Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe.

Grove teſtified, That the inſide of two Meeting-Houſes were demoliſhed, on the firſt of March, one in Fetter-Lane, and another in Hatton-Garden: That with the Materials of the Fetter-lane Meeting-Houſe, the Mob made a Fire in Holborn; and with the Materials of the other, they made a Fire in Hatton-Garden: That at the Fire in Holborn, he ſaw a Man with a Curtain on a Pole, which he called the High Church Standard, who was very active, ſtopped Coaches, got Money from the People, and made them cry out, High Church and Sacheverell! That this Man was in a Livery, but he could not tell whether it was Blew or Green; and was not ſure the Priſoner was the Man, but believed he was.

Victor teſtified, He ſaw the Priſoner throw a Piece of Wood into the Fire in Hatton-Garden, and Huzza; and ſeeing him ſpeak to Mr. Lunt his Acquaintance, he (the Witneſs) asked Lunt if he knew him? and Lunt told him he did.

Lunt depoſed, That he ſaw the Priſoner at the Fire in Hatton-Garden, who ſaid, they had made him Captain of a Party; that he took a Window-Curtain and made it his Colours, and that they burnt the Clock; but the Priſoner was above, when this Witneſs ſaw him.

Orrel only teſtified in general, that the Meeting-Houſes of Bradbury, Burgeſs, and thoſe thoſe in Drury-Lane, Black-Friers, &c. were pulled down, and that the People declared, That they would have them all down; but ſaid nothing againſt the Priſoner in particular, only that there was a Footman in a Blew Livery, very buſy at the Fire in Holborn, of the Size of the Priſoner.

The Evidence for the Priſoner.

The Priſoner's Witneſſes on the other Side being called, Mrs. Miles of Grevil-Street, with whom the Priſoner lived, teſtified, That hearing there was a Fire in Holborn on the firſt of March at Night, ſhe ſent him out to ſee what was the Matter a little after Ten, and he returned before Twelve: Her Daughter Mrs. Briſco, and the other Servants of the Family teſtified the ſame; and that Mrs. Miles being angry he ſtaid out ſo long, he anſwered, he had never ſeen a Mob before.

Pryor depoſed, That he met the Priſoner in Leather-Lane the ſame Night about Eleven o'Clock, and walked with him through Leather-Lane from Holborn to Brook's Market; and having talked with him ſome Time, left him, and he thought the Priſoner went Home then; he did not ſee he was concerned with the Mob.

Fletcher teſtified, That Groves, one of the Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner, having been to ſee him in Newgate, declared he was not the Man that carried the Curtain; and Grove acknowledged at the Trial, that he declared he could not be poſitive it was he, after he had been to ſee him in Newgate.

Holgate teſtified, That he ſaw a Footman in a Green Livery very active at the Fire in Holborn; but he did not ſee the Priſoner there.

Two or Three other Witneſſes depoſed, That Grove was a broken Baker, a looſe idle Fellow, and a Gameſter; and Mrs. Miles, and two or three Witneſſes more, gave the Priſoner a very good Character for a peaceable, ſober, well-behaved Servant.

Obſervations on the Evidence, by the Priſoner's Counſel.

After which, Mr. Darnel ſaid in his Defence, My Lord, We will not trouble you with any more Witneſſes; we hope we have well accounted for the Time he was out of his Miſtreſs's Houſe; for that ſeems to be all that ſticks upon him, that his being out ſo long might give Room for him to be concerned in this Tumult: But by the Witneſſes it appears, that the Curioſity of ſeeing a Mob, which he had never ſeen before, might take up ſome Part of his Time; and the two Fires being ſo near, that he could not go from one without ſeeing the other, engaged him to go to them both. There was a Friend too that met him, with whom he walked up and down the Street an Hour; but we think it ſhews that he was not a Ringleader, or aiding or aſſiſting in pulling down the Meeting-houſes; for that Witneſs ſays, they were then carrying the Materials, and the Fire was lighting at the Time when they were together; and that he parted with him in order to go Home, but his Curioſity carried him to ſee that Fire that was then lighting, that he might carry an Account of it.

But upon the main Queſtion, we muſt humbly inſiſt, that there is not Evidence to fix it upon the Priſoner. There are not two Witneſſes to any Overt-Act of the ſame Treaſon, nor do theſe Witneſſes aſcertain it to be the Priſoner; for now it appears a little plainer, that his firſt Charge was againſt a Footman in a Green Livery: He declared it was a Footman in Green with Braſs Buttons, and when he came to Newgate to ſee this Man, he believes him to be the ſame Man, that is the moſt of his Evidence; but when he came Home then to his Companion, that he lived in the Houſe with, he believed it was not the ſame Man, and he could not ſwear it was the ſame Man, becauſe he had a blue Coat; and now he would carry his Belief ſo far as to believe that he then had a blew Coat with black Buttons; and ſurely, no Man could miſtake a blew Coat with black Buttons for a green Coat with braſs Buttons: Whatever may be ſuppoſed of the Colour of Blew by Fire-light, altering by that Light towards a Green, yet it can't turn black Buttons into Braſs ones.

Suppoſing the Perſon whom Groves pretends to accuſe were here, yet there are not two Witneſſes to any Overt-Act, for it is only confirmed by the Confeſſion, which is proved by Lunt; but we hope the Priſoner is not the Perſon that had the Colours, and therefore there is no Evidence to make him Guilty. We cannot differ from the Reſolution in the Books in Meſſenger's Caſe, much leſs with your Lordſhip's Reſolution Yeſterday: But the Caſe is entirely different between the Waterman and this Man, for there it did appear, that he carried the Branch, and threw it into the Fire; that from thence he hollowed, and led a Party, and offered to be their Captain, to Drury-Lane; and in that Manner he took upon him to lead them, and did lead them: But there is not any one Inſtance of that Nature here; there is not any one Witneſs that proves him to be in a Meeting-Houſe, or to have done any Thing there, or to have gone from one to another. If he had joined with them at the firſt Fire, and gone in with them in what they were doing, yet we muſt inſiſt, that it would not make him guilty of High-Treaſon. In the Caſe in King Charles the Second's Time, it was apparent they were all in the Deſign; the Verdict found that they aſſembled, that they armed themſelves, that they choſe a Captain, that when the Government thought fit to interpoſe to ſuppreſs them, they ſtruck at the Officer, threw Stones at the Captain of the Guards, expreſſed their Reſolutions of going to White-hall, and ſhewed what their Intent was; but no Deſign is proved againſt this Man, and nothing to make it agree with that Caſe: But thoſe Perſons that ſtood by, were by all the Judges acquitted from that Treaſon. We think the Evidence was much ſtronger againſt them, than what is offered againſt this Man: For in the Caſe of Beadle, he was proved to be among them; and when the Officer purſued him, he turned about, and cryed to the People to face about, and not to leave him: And though it appeared he was in the Deſign, and called to the reſt to reſiſt in his Defence, yet it was agreed, he was not guilty of High-Treaſon, becauſe he was not aiding in pulling down the Houſes; which (in thoſe Matters wherein the Judges gave their Opinions)

1710. Annæ.

Opinions) made it to be High-Treaſon: But as to Green and Beadle, in the firſt ſpecial Verdict, they agreed the Verdict was not full enough to convict them.

In anſwer to this Defence of the Priſoner's Counſel, Mr. Sollicitor ſaid,

The Reply of the Queen's Counſel.

I think Mr Darnell does agree, that if there was a general Intention to pull down Meeting-Houſes, it would be Rebellion and High-Treaſon. I take it, that it was ſo, is as fully proved as poſſible, by having ſo many pulled down, and by ſuch a Multitude of People as were got together for that Purpoſe: For it cannot be thought, that the People that were at one Houſe intended to pull down that, and thoſe that were at the other Houſes intended to pull down them only; but it muſt be a general Intention to pull down Meeting-Houſes in general; we think, therefore, the general Intention is proved, therefore what Tolboy ſays don't confine it: For though he ſays, what they declared was only in Regard to Mr. Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe, yet that don't take off from the Evidence of what paſſed the next Day, when the ſeveral Meeting-Houſes were pulled down; and the Fact, without that Evidence, ſhows the particular Intention, and the Mob that were at Lincoln's-Inn-Fields ſwore, Damn them, they would have them all down, and accordingly they went away to another, and pulled that down; therefore, that there was a general Intention, is ſufficiently proved, and that this Man did act in that Intention: We think it is ſufficiently proved, that he was at two of them; but if it had been but one, it had been the ſame Caſe. But they object, that this is not a legal Evidence; for, ſay they, the Statute reſtrains it, and ſays, that no Confeſſion can be given in Evidence, and the Evidence of Lunt without it will not do; and Grove's not ſwearing poſitively to the Man without the Help of Lunt, will not be a legal Evidence, ſo as to prove it an Overt-Act. This is the Strength of the Objection in Point of Law, and God forbid that we ſhould inſiſt on any Thing but what is legal Evidence: It is Juſtice to him, not to offer any ſuch Thing, as it is to the Crown, to inſiſt on what is legal Evidence, to bring him to Puniſhment. The Words of the Act are, That no Perſon ſhall be indicted, tried, or attainted of High-Treaſon, whereby Corruption of Blood may be made, or of Miſpriſion of ſuch Treaſon, but by the Oaths and Teſtimonies of two lawful Witneſſes, either both to the ſame Overt-Act, or one to one, and the other to another Overt-Act of the ſame Treaſon, unleſs the Party willingly, in open Court, confeſs the ſame, &c. Now in this Caſe, here are two lawful Witneſſes: Grove is a lawful Witneſs, he is capable of being a Witneſs; whether what he ſays is ſufficient for the Proof of the Point muſt be left to the Conſideration of the Jury. If there are two legal Witneſſes, to which there are no legal Objections, it is ſufficient; whether what they ſwear is ſufficient to prove the Fact, is of another Conſideration; but there is not one Word in the Act to reſtrain a Confeſſion from being given in Evidence: He ſhall not be convicted on a Trial without two lawful Witneſſes, that is the Thing that is provided for, and it was to exclude a Precedent that had been ſettled in Tong's Caſe, in my Lord Chief Juſtice Keyling's Reports, an Evidence of Confeſſion only, that was proved by two Witneſſes, and that was the Occaſion of making this Law, that his Confeſſion alone ſhould not be ſufficient, without an Overt-Act. This was the Reaſon and Ground of making that Act of Parliament, but it was not deſigned to exclude all Confeſſions: That was Evidence at Law, and always muſt be ſo; that Evidence that comes out of a Man's own Mouth, was always allowed: The Deſign of the Act was to exclude Confeſſions from having the Force of a Conviction, unleſs it were in a Court of Record, and to prevent a Confeſſion proved by two Witneſſes, from being a ſufficient Ground for a Conviction. A Confeſſion is a conſiderable Evidence, and in many Caſes clears a Thing beyond Contradiction; and in this Caſe it ſhews how neceſſary it is, for when Things are tranſacted in the Dark, and it is impoſſible for Strangers to give a clear Deſcription of Perſons, ſurely the Confeſſion of a Man himſelf is the moſt proper Evidence in the World, and the moſt ſatisfactory. This then being a lawful Evidence, it ſtands clear of that Objection: Here are two Witneſſes to the Overt-Act, and this Evidence of Lunt is not excluded, but this Confeſſion of the Party is lawful to be given in Evidence.

1710. 9 Annæ.

This being the State of the Matter, how ſtands it then? It is agreed he was at the Bonfire in Holborn; he was ſent out for that Purpoſe; the Fire was ſeen at his Miſtreſs's Houſe, and he was ſent out to enquire after the Matter. That there was a Man there in a blew Livery, is proved by ſeveral People, and it is proved he had a blew Livery. Grove ſays, he ſaw a Man, he can't tell whether he was in Blew or Green, with a Standard, in Holborn: He ſays he don't know whether he was in Blew or Green, but he took him to be a Man of that Size, and he ſuppoſes him to be the Man. But here is ſtill a Doubt, whether this is the Man that carried the Standard; and how is that cleared? Now this, with Submiſſion, is cleared by the Man himſelf, if that be Evidence, which we inſiſt upon it, it is. This Declaration to Lunt, that he had made Colours of a Curtain, and that he was choſe Captain of a Party, That does explain it, and is not anſwered by any Thing that they have offered to the contrary. As to his acting in the Tumult in Leather-Lane, Victor ſwears he ſaw him with a Piece of Timber on his Shoulder, and that he carried it, and threw it into the Fire. Lunt, as to every Thing he ſpeaks, is clear: He proves that he ſpoke ſome Words to him; and as to what Victor ſays, he is as clear, that he had the Wood, and threw it in. The only Queſtion then will be, where he had this Wood? Whether he had the Wood that he threw into the Fire, made of the Materials of the Meeting-Houſe, from any other Place? They give you ſome Evidence, that he was going Home quietly, and that they parted about Eleven at Brook's Market; but it is plain he did not go Home till juſt Twelve, for ſo all the Family agree: So that that Time is to be accounted for, which he might have ſpent 1710. 9 Annæ. at this Bonfire, and in this Tumult. There is another Man to anſwer the Buſineſs of what they call the High-Church Standard: He ſays, there was a Man in a Green Livery which he ſaw, and thought he knew him, but could not be poſitive becauſe he was at a Diſtance; but if it had been this Man, he believes he ſhould have known him; but there is as little Reaſon for him to know the one as the other. The Man in the Green Livery, he ſays, is run away, but he ſays nothing as to the Braſs Buttons; and it is eaſy to miſtake between Green and Blue.

I ſhall not urge the Evidence further than it is reaſonable; theſe are Circumſtances which will be under the Conſideration of the Jury. But ſuppoſing the Man to be concerned in this Manner, acting as the Queen's Evidence have proved, it will be High-Treaſon within the Caſe in my Lord Keyling's Reports, and is not diſtinguiſhed by what Mr. Darnell offered. He ſays there was leading and arming, and they ſtruck at the Guards; ſo here was leading, for nobody denies but they had a Standard: The only Queſtion is, Whether the Priſoner carried it? And in the other Mob in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, they were led and hollowed away to Drury-Lane. And as to the Caſe of Beadle, which he would compare it to, there was no Act that was done by him: Beſides, the Verdict was defective, in not finding the aiding and aſſiſting; for though they found the Facts, yet they did not draw the Concluſion from thoſe Facts. As to what has been ſaid to the Reputation of Grove, I don't find it any ways affects him; it is not proved that he has cheated, or that he is a Common Gameſter, or that he lives by that way. As to the Reputation of the Priſoner, there may be many honeſt Men that might think they did Service at this Time, and he might be deſired among the reſt; but that is no Argument why he ſhould not be concerned in the Fact: Whether he was, or not, is what we muſt ſubmit to the Conſideration of the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury. Then the Chief Juſtice, having ſummed up the Evidence on both Sides, gave the following Directions to the Jury. He obſerved that the Uſe the Counſel for the Priſoner would make of their Evidence, was, firſt, to ſhew that they had given an Account of his Time; that he was otherwiſe employed than in the Manner the Witneſſes for the Queen have given an Account of. Now it is certain, they have not; for they give an Account only of a Walk from Holborn to Brook's Market, whereas his own Witneſſes ſay, he was out at leaſt an Hour and a half; ſo that there was Time enough for him to be there: And though that Witneſs ſaw him going homeward, and not to the Fire, yet it is certain, he did not go Home then, and that he was at the Fire, becauſe two Witneſſes ſwear he was at the Fire; and it does appear that he was at both the Fires. Before I ſtate that, give me Leave to ſay, that as there is a full Proof of a general Deſign, put in Execution, of pulling down the Meeting-Houſes, ſo any one that is aiding in that, is Guilty of High-Treaſon, though he were not privy to the firſt Deſign; for in High-Treaſon, there is no ſuch Thing as Acceſſaries; all that are Actors are equally Guilty, and that was the Caſe of the Lord Eſſex: He went with ſome Forces to remove ſome evil Counſellors, and came to the City to deſire Aſſiſtance; ſome Forces he had aſſembled in his own Houſe; others join'd him in the City; it was adjudged they were all Guilty of High-Treaſon, though they did not know of his Deſign; and thoſe that were accidentally there, and did depart, it was ſaid, were entitled to Her Majeſty's Grace; but it is not ſaid they were Not Guilty. So was the Caſe of the Bawdy-Houſes; yet it is not ſaid, that any of them were the Perſons that formed the Deſign of pulling them down. 1709-10. 9 Annæ.

You are therefore to conſider, that it is not enough to charge the Priſoner, that he was at the two Fires: It is not enough that there was Time for him to do what he is charged with; but you are to conſider what is proved on him, that he did. You obſerve what is objected as to Grove, that there is a great Uncertainty as to his Evidence, and that his Credit is not fair: He don't Charge the Priſoner poſitively, nor ever did. He differed as to the Colour of his Cloaths: And though it is rightly obſerved, that Blue and Green are not eaſily diſtinguiſhed by the Light of the Fire, yet that is not the Objection; the Objection is, that the Witneſs, at firſt, declared he believed it to be Green, and now he has told you, that he believes it to be Blue, and that is not conſiſtent, and does therefore a little concern his Credit in this Matter, that he has changed his Evidence. Then they ſay, that he did not ſee him at the Meeting-Houſe: He ſaw ſome Body carrying Colours, and believes this to be the Man; but he ſays, he was not near enough to diſtinguiſh his Cloaths, ſo he might not be able to diſtinguiſh his Face. But then they bring ſome Witneſſes to ſhew he is not a Man of ſo clear a Credit; but they don't charge any great Matter upon him. As for his having broke, that is a Misfortune that may attend any Man: But then they would ſupport this by the Confeſſion he made to Lunt, who ſwears, that he ſaid he made Colours of a Curtain. Now that may ſeem to give ſome Colour to it; but I ought to take Notice of the other Part of his Confeſſion, that they made him Captain of a Party, which don't appear to be likely; for as he was moving from one Party to another, it would be very natural for the Captain to have his Mob with him, but it is plain, he was unattended in going from one Fire to another. When he was at that Fire in Hatton-Garden, he went away alone, as Lunt ſays: And they don't ſay that he did encourage the Mob. He did throw down a Piece of Wood, and Huzza; but he did not much encourage others. As to the Piece of Wood, one of the Witneſſes did not ſee it, and the other, that did ſee it, did not ſee him in the Meeting-Houſe; ſo that it is not proved he was at either of the Meeting-Houſes, though he was at the Fires. And you may conſider another Circumſtance, and that is, that this Witneſs, Victor, did not know him before; nor did he know what Cloaths he had on; and if he had not come nearer to him, to Lunt's Door, in Probability, he had not known him him again; but he ſays he ſaw him throw a Piece of Wood into the Fire; and he ſays he kept his Eye upon that Man, and ſaw him come up and ſpeak to Lunt. Now you will conſider, whether ſuch a Man might not, in a Crowd, ſlip out of his Eye, and he might take another for him; for Lunt, that knew him, ſays, He did not ſee him have any Timber at all.

Theſe are the Obſervations that, I apprehend, may be moſt proper for me to make to you. As for the Law, if you take it, that he is the Man that had the Colours in Holborn, and afterwards came to the other Fire, and threw the Piece of Timber in there, he is undoubtedly Guilty of High Treaſon: Therefore you muſt conſider firſt, how far you believe he is the ſame that carried the Colours in Holborn, and how far you take him to be concerned in pulling down the Meeting-Houſe in Leather-Lane. I ſhould take Notice of another Thing, that there was a Footman in Green, at the Fire in Holborn, who was very active; and that Man could not miſtake the Colour of Blue and Green, becauſe he knew the Priſoner: Now, that being ſo, it does appear there was a Footman in Blue, and another in Green, that was active at the Fire in Holborn; and one of theſe two, perhaps, had the Colours; the Queſtion is, Which? Grove firſt ſays, the Man that had the Colours was in Green, and then he ſays he was in Blue. Now, if the firſt be right, that he was in Green, it does appear there was ſuch an one in Green: If you believe he was the Perſon that did make uſe of theſe Colours, and that he was aſſiſting in pulling down the Meeting-Houſe in Hatton-Gardon, then you are to find him Guilty: If you think he was not the Perſon, you will acquit him.

1710. 9 Annæ.

Then the Court adjourned, and the Jury brought in their Verdict in the Afternoon, That the Priſoner was Not Guilty: And thereupon Willis was diſcharged.

Purchaſe's Trial.

The Trial of GEORGE PURCHASE, for High Treaſon, at the Old Baily, London, on the 21ſt of April 1710, 9 Annæ.

1710. 9 Annæ.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged, That George Purchaſe, late of the Pariſh of St. Andrew, Holborn, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer, did, on the firſt of March, in the ninth Year of the Queen, at the ſaid Pariſh of St. Andrew, in the County aforeſaid, conſpire to levy War, and raiſe a Rebellion, and did actually levy War, on the Day and Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, aſſembling with a Multitude of other People, to the Number of Five Hundred, with Colours flying, and armed with Swords, Clubs, and other Weapons, offenſive and defenſive; againſt the Queen's Peace, and the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

Tolboy's Evidence.

The Evidence for the Crown being called, Tolboy was ſworn again, and teſtified as he had done at the former Trials, That paſſing through the Temple on the laſt of February, in the Evening, he heard Dr. Sacheverell's Mob ſay, They would pull down Burgeſs's Meeting-Houſe that Night, or the next; and improving in his Evidence, he added, He heard them reſolve to pull down the Meeting-houſes in general.

Orrell's Evidence.

Orrell being ſworn again, depoſed as he had done at the former Trials, That he ſaw the Inſide of the Meeting-Houſes in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Fetter-Lane, and that of Drury-Lane, demoliſhed and burnt, and that Dammaree led the Mob from the Fire in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields to Drury-Lane Meeting-Houſe, huzzaing and crying out, High Church and Sacheverell! God damn all his Enemies! We will have all the Meetings down to Night. That he (the Witneſs) met the Horſe-guards coming towards Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and carried them back to Drury-Lane, where they rode among the Mob, who were burning the Materials of that Meeting-Houſe, and diſperſed them: And there particularly he ſaw the Priſoner, Purchaſe, with his Sword drawn, and ſome of the Horſe riding up to him, he retired towards a Bulk, and puſhed at them, and ſome of them ſtruck at him with the Flats of their Swords; and thereupon he (the Witneſs) ſaid to Purchaſe, Do you know what you do in oppoſing the Guards? You oppoſe the Queen's Perſon; and, in Friendſhip, laid his Hand on the Priſoner's Breaſt, to prevent Miſchief; but the Priſoner anſwered, God damn you; are you againſt Sacheverell? I am for High Church and Sacheverell: God damn all his Enemies; I will loſe my Life in the Cauſe; I will fight the beſt of them: Then he huzza'd, and ſaid, Boys, I will lead you on for High Church and Sacheverell. That afterwards he ſaw the Priſoner run his Sword at the Officer of the Guards, and believed he would have run him through, if one of the Guards had not ſtruck down his Point; but he did not ſtay to ſee what followed: He apprehended the Guards would fire, and it would be dangerous ſtaying longer, and concluded the Guards had either killed the Priſoner or taken him; adding, that as the Guards paſſed by, ſome of the Mob ſaid, Damn them, we will be even with them Tomorrow Night; they dare not fire upon us; and that Purchaſe, the Priſoner, was very much in Drink.

Ruſſel's Evidence.

Richard Ruſſel, one of the Horſe-Grenadiers, teſtified, That he was commanded to go with his Serjeant to Drury-Lane, on the 1ſt

of March at Night, and they drew up about the Fire that was made in Drury-Lane, at the End of Queen-ſtreet, and there he ſaw Purchaſe, the Priſoner, come down the Lane, at the Head of the Mob, with his naked Sword, hazzaing and flouriſhing it over his Head, and crying, God damn you, are you for Low-Church, or High-Church and Sacheverell? and the Witneſs and another Soldier, thereupon, ſtruck at him; and he got between them, and made ſeveral Puſhes. And it being demanded, If the Mob diſperſed themſelves on their coming, Ruſſel anſwered, As they diſperſed them one Way, they drew together at another Place; and they were commanded to draw into a Line, and to draw back their Horſes, that no body might get behind them; and drawing back into a Door-way, Purchaſe was got behind them between their Horſes, and then they ſtruck at him with the Flat of their Swords.

Southerland's Evidence.

Southerland, Serjeant of the Grenadiers, teſtified, That he ſaw Purchaſe flouriſhing his Sword at the Fire in Drury-Lane, and crying out, Sacheverell! Sacheverell! and thereupon he rode up to him, and asked him, If he encouraged the Mob, and Purchaſe anſwered, Damn you, I am for Sacheverell; and the Witneſs lifting up his Hand, Purchaſe drew back and offered his Point, but did not thruſt: He (the Witneſs) then asked, If he was mad, and bid him go home; Purchaſe anſwered, He was one of the Life-Guard; and Captain Horſey ordered them to cut him to Pieces, but he got away into Long-Acre.

Richardſon's Evidence.

Richardſon, another of the Life-Guard, depoſed, That he knew Purchaſe very well, he having ſerved in the Firſt Troop of Horſe-Guards, and that he ſaw him make a Thruſt at his Officer, Capt. Hensbrough, as they were diſperſing the Mob in Drury-Lane; and he (the Witneſs) beat down his Point, and ſaid, You Raſcal, have you a Mind to kill my Officer? and going to ſtrike at Purchaſe afterwards, he threw himſelf againſt a Bulk and the Witneſs; and he hit the Pent-houſe, and broke his own Sword to Pieces.

Evidence for the Priſoner.

The Queen's Counſel having cloſed their Evidence, Purchaſe's Witneſſes were called, and proved that he had been employed the firſt of March in his proper Buſineſs, (viz.) arreſting ſome People, and drinking with them and others from Morning till Night. And Broad the Bailiff particularly teſtified, That he left Purchaſe very drunk in Covent-Garden, a quarter before Eleven that Night.

Bembridge, another of his Witneſſes, teſtified, That he ſaw Purchaſe in Long-Acre, alone, that Night, and there was no Mob with him, nor was his Sword drawn, but two or three of the Horſe-Guards rode up to him, and ſtruck at him; whereupon he retired; and that the Mob were then diſperſed.

Blanſeild depoſed, He ſaw Purchaſe come up Drury-Lane, towards the Fire, alone, about a quarter after Eleven, when the Guards had diſperſed the Mob, and that ſome of the Guards riding up to him, and ſtriking at him, he held up his Sword in the Scabbard to defend himſelf, and retired.

Thomas Street, the Watchman, alſo depoſed, That he ſaw two or three of the Guards ſtrike at the Priſoner, and he endeavoured to defend himſelf with his Sword, and fell againſt a Bulk-door; for he was ſo drunk he could neither ſtand nor go; and almoſt all the Mob were gone before Purchaſe came. 1710. 9 Annæ.

Plaxton, the Surgeon, teſtified, That he was ſent for by Purchaſe's Wife, on the firſt of March, late at Night, to let him blood, becauſe ſhe thought he had got ſome Hurt; and he went to Purchaſe's Houſe, and found him very much in Drink.

Then Mr. Darnell made his Obſervations on the Evidence for the Priſoner, and ſaid, Obſervations on the Evidence, by the Priſoner's Counſel.

We think, my Lord, though he is a Bayliff (for there ſeems to be ſome Reflection caſt upon him for that Reaſon) yet we doubt not, but he will have the ſame Juſtice done him here, as if he were a Man of the beſt Eſtate: For whatever is determined as to this Man, may be the Caſe of any other who may happen into the like Circumſtances; therefore I beg Leave to obſerve, how far any Thing is proved againſt him, that may make him guilty of High-Treaſon. We think we have given a full Anſwer to all the Preſumption, that he was engaged in the original Intention of pulling down the Meeting-Houſes, or that he was aiding in the Execution of that original Intention. We think the Evidence on both ſides agree in this, That the Priſoner was not concerned in the original Intention, and that he was not with the Mob that purſued Doctor Sacheverell to Weſtminſter, and brought him back in Triumph, and then went to pull down the Meeting-Houſes: But the only Thing that is proved againſt him is, that after they were pulled down, and after they were burnt, when the Guards were come, and they were diſperſing the Mob, then the Priſoner is ſo unfortunate to be found with his Sword drawn, hollowing and aſſerting the Right of Doctor Sacheverell; and that he would ſtand by him, and encouraging the People to do ſo. This is the moſt of the Evidence that can be againſt him: Then the Queſtion is, Whether this, ſingly, can make him guilty of High-Treaſon? For if his Part in the general Intention be out of the Caſe, as it muſt be if he came after the Fact was committed, then the Queſtion will be, Whether a Man that comes in afterwards, by ſaying the worſt he can ſay, ſhall make himſelf guilty of High-Treaſon?

My Lord, we hope the Evidence on behalf of the Queen, is reconcileable with the Evidence for the Priſoner; and that the Evidence for the Priſoner ſhall be believed, that he only defended himſelf againſt the Guards that rode up againſt him; for Richardſon ſays, he did not ſee him when the Guards firſt came there, and that agrees with the Account that Broad gave; for he ſays, he heard the Guards were marching, before they came out of the Tavern. Blanfield agrees with the Evidence Orrell gave: Says he, the Mob were diſperſed under the Eaves of the Houſes. Says Blanſeild, At the Time the Guards ſtruck him, there were People under the Houſes: But I don't look upon them to be the

the chief Mob, but only ſome Women and People looking on. And then the Queſtion is not whether his Sword was drawn or not, but on what Occaſion, and what his Deſign was in drawing it? Our Witneſſes ſay, That when the Guards ſtruck at him, he only held up his Hand to defend himſelf, and that might fright the Horſe; and he being angry at it, ſpurred up and ſtruck him. It is natural to think the Guards ſhould ride up to thoſe that were ſtanding in the Street, and enquire who they were: I don't depend on the Circumſtance of his being in Drink, that it is any Excuſe; for then, if a Man has ſuch a Deſign as this, he may eaſily pretend himſelf to be in Drink, and he will give himſelf Drink enough to encourage himſelf to do ſo bold an Act: But the Uſe we make of it is to ſhew, that he had not any Intention in this. He had drank himſelf too far for to have a Deſign of joining with any Party, or to do any particular Thing. And my Lord Coke in his Pleas of the Crown, where he is giving his Opinion what is levying War againſt the Queen, ſays, That the Act alone is not ſufficient to convict the Party; but the Mind is to concur in it: It is not barely doing an Act that is ſufficient to convict a Man; for he muſt do it with that Deſign. Indeed, if a drunken Man ſtabs another, it is Murther; becauſe Malice is ſuppoſed, where ſuch a Fact is done: But in Caſe of High-Treaſon, there muſt be an Intention proved in the Party that doth the Fact. If he was in that Condition at the Time he came out of the Tavern, and did any Thing by Way of encouraging them, we hope it is not ſuch an Evidence againſt him as will make him guilty of any Part of the Intention, if his Mind did not concur in it.

The Reply of Mr Sollicitor to the Priſoner's Defence.

Mr. Sollicitor General. My Lord, the Evidence given by the Priſoner, and the Defence made on his Behalf, is ſo far from giving any Anſwer to our Evidence, that it renders the Fact more probable than it was before: For they have proved, that he is a Man likely to be concerned in ſuch an Affair; that he had been drinking all Day, and fit to engage in ſuch a Matter, and that he is troubleſome in his Drink; which are Circumſtances that ſhow the Inclination of the Man, and make it probable that he ſhould engage in this Matter: The Facts we take to be High-Treaſon. They ſay on the other ſide, it is not ſo, becauſe we muſt prove a general Intention to pull down all Meeting-Houſes, and the pulling down a ſingle one is not ſufficient. I will not now diſpute that Point with them; for that there was ſuch an Intention, appears moſt plainly, by what paſſed that Night, by the ſeveral Meeting-Houſes that were pulled down. It was a general Intention, or elſe they could not have gone through ſo many in ſo ſhort a Time; and it is not neceſſary to prove any precious Conſult, for the Act it ſelf is Treaſon: Where the Intention is the Treaſon, there the Act muſt be proved that ſhows it. So it is in the Caſe of counterfeiting the Coin. No Body will ſay there is any need to prove any Deſign. That there was ſuch an Intention is plain, by what was committed; and any one that joins with ſuch a Number of People who are committing Treaſon, is equally guilty with them. They ſay, he had not his Sword drawn; that he was going Home, and he only lifted up his Hand with his Sword in his Scabbard, to defend himſelf. But that Evidence don't interfere with what is offered on Behalf of the Queen; or if it did, yet we think our Evidence is of greater Credit and Weight than what they offer: For they that encounter a Man who has his Sword drawn, can never be miſtaken, but deſerve more Credit than thoſe that are only paſſing by, and have no Danger from, or Concern with him: But this is all conſiſtent; for Ruſſel, and thoſe who ſay his Sword was drawn, ſay, he came from St. Giles s Way, and the others ſay, it was after the Mob was diſperſed; and that he came up the Lane; and that he went off by Long-Acre, and they ſaw him no more. Now, ſince no Body ſaw him Home, he might go that Way, and afterwards come down and join the Mob, in the Manner the Soldiers have told you, and then he might be driven off, and come ſome Way round again, with his Sword in his Scabbard: And theſe muſt certainly be different Times, for thoſe who ſpeak of his Sword being drawn, ſay, it was when he came from Holborn; and they that ſay his Sword was in his Scabbard, ſay, it was when he came from the other Way, and then there can be no Contradiction between the Evidence. And we take it, the Law is as plain as the Fact; and that it is High-Treaſon.

Then the Chief Juſtice directed the Jury, and ſaid,

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Matter will be now for you to compare theſe two Evidences together; and to conſider, firſt, Whether thoſe Things are true which are ſworn by the Queen's Witneſſes, or whether they are anſwered by the Witneſſes for the Priſoner; and then what Streſs is to be laid upon his being in Drink: And as there is no Objection made to the Witneſſes of either ſide, you are to take what they have ſaid to be true, abating the little Miſtake a Man may fall into as to the Exactneſs of Time, and the like. As to what they would pretend of his going ſtraight Home from the Tavern, you will obſerve, there is Time enough for him to have done all that he is charged with; for it all happened in a quarter of an Hour, or a little more. If he parted from the Tavern about Ten, from that Time till a quarter or half an Hour after Eleven, is Time enough to do all has been ſpoken of. I think, there is little Streſs to be laid upon the Time, becauſe there is a Series of Facts. The firſt Thing done by him before the Mob was diſperſed, was his coming behind the Horſes; and you will find the Reaſon for that Command of the Officer to let none come behind him: But he, as drunk as he was, knew there was no hurting the Guards, unleſs they could get behind them. He had been in the Guards himſelf; and you muſt conſider what Deſign he had in getting behind them, when the Street was open for him to go in. But if he had a Deſign to get behind them, that the Mob might pull them off from their Horſes, he acted very rationally, though he was drunk: That Fact was proved by Orrell and Ruſſel.

1710 9 Annæ.

Another Fact was, when they were drawn up above the Fire near Holborn, he was then coming eown from St. Giles's: So that is plainly not the Time that the Witneſſes ſpeak of when he was coming up the Lane. Then this was only when the Horſe-Grenadiers were there, and the other was when the Horſe-Guards came, when they were drawn up below Long-Acre; and there they ſwear he made a Paſs at Captain Hensbrough: And Ruſſel tells you, that as he ſheltered himſelf under the Houſes, his Sword ſtruck againſt the Pent-houſe, and broke to Pieces. Southerland ſpeaks of another Time when he was at the Corner of Long-Acre; and then indeed he was doing nothing: And that is the Time when he told the Captain that he had been troubleſome to the Grenadiers; and thereupon the Captain bid him go and cut him to Pieces: He did go, and then the Priſoner made off; but this was when the Mob was in a great Meaſure diſperſed. Now when do his Witneſſes ſpeak of? They ſpeak of a Time when he came up the Lane, that ſurely is not the Time that either of thoſe Witneſſes ſpeak of: They ſay he ſtood quiet, and a Soldier rode up to him and ſtruck him. You will conſider whether that was not the Time that Southerland ſpeaks of: So that you will conſider whether the Evidence of both ſides is not reconcileable; whether after he parted from Broad, he might not join the Mob, come down from towards St. Giles's, get behind the Horſe, and afterwards make a Paſs at the Captain, and then be driven down with the Mob towards the lower End of the Street. If ſo, it was natural, when they were driven down the Lane, for them to go Home, and as his Home was up the Lane, he muſt come back alone. If you do believe he was guilty of reſiſting the Guards in this Manner, when he was admoniſhed what the Conſequence was, and he, inſtead of making an Anſwer, only asks, are you an Enemy to Sacherell? and encourages the Mob to follow him; you are to conſider how far this will make him guilty with the reſt: For the Counſel for the Priſoner, though they object to the Evidence of what paſſed in the Temple, yet they agree, this Tumult was a Rebellious Tumult, and the Fact ſhews there was ſuch a Deſign. Indeed, they did not pull down all the Meeting-Houſes; but the Reaſon was, becauſe the Guards diſperſed them. They admit therefore, this was levying War in the Perſons concerned in it; but they would excuſe him, that he came late and very drunk, and did nothing, but was beat by the Guards; and that his Drunkenneſs diſables him from having a Share in the Deſign; and therefore he cannot be guilty. It is inſiſted, that it is neceſſary he ſhould be engaged in the original Deſign; but there is no Need of that, for that is the Earl of Eſſex's Caſe: It is there adjudged, that the Earl of Southampton was guilty of Treaſon, by joining the Earl of Eſſex, though he did not know of his Deſign; and thoſe that diſperſed upon the Queen's Proclamation, it is ſaid, they were entitled to the Queen's Grace; but it is not ſaid, they were not guilty of High-Treaſon. In Felony there may be Acceſſaries, thoſe that are concerned in contriving the Felony, or afterwards in aſſiſting the Perſon; but in High-Treaſon all are Principals, and are guilty equally with thoſe that are the Actors. If there is a Deſign to levy War, and it is not levied, thoſe who were in the Deſign are guilty of Treaſon; and ſo are thoſe that act in it, though they were not in the original Deſign, are Guilty. Say they, He was not at the pulling down any Meeting-Houſe: It is true; but he was defending thoſe that did. It is plain, by the Courſe they took, if they had not been diſperſed, they would have pulled them all down. It is not, indeed, accompliſhed; ſome of them are ſtanding; but it is becauſe they were diſperſed. Now, is not this aiding them, when he endeavours to kill the Captain of the Guards, who came to diſperſe them? And if he could have prevailed to have baffled the Guards, they might have gone to the reſt; and, when they had pulled them down, they might have pulled down every Man's Houſe they thought fit. My Lord Coke's Expreſſion is made uſe of, That the Act don't make the Man guilty, unleſs the Mind be guilty; therefore they would infer, that he muſt be concerned in the Deſign originally. This is a great Fallacy: Oldcaſtle was at War againſt the King; ſeveral furniſhed him with Victuals and Drink, and it was found they did it meerly for Fear of Death; but, as ſoon as they could eſcape from him, they did; and thereupon they were adjudged not to be guilty of Treaſon. Now you may eaſily obſerve the Difference in this Caſe: If a Man be non compos, it excuſes him from Felony, and all other Crimes. That Man can't be criminal that has not the Uſe of his Reaſon; but can that be applied to any one that is drunk? That Matter is ſtated in the ſame Caſe: He ſays, if a Man will make himſelf drunk, ſhall this voluntary, this criminal Incapacity of his Mind, excuſe him? No; he ſays it ſhall not: And it would be of dangerous Conſequence if it ſhould. Indeed, his being drunk might make him more forward than otherwiſe he would have been; but you ſee he had Senſe enough to get between the Guards and the Wall, and to attack the Captain when he was paſſed by him. If he can't be criminal unleſs his Mind be ſo, I would ask, If he had killed the Captain, would it not have been Murder? If ſo, then if the Act be Treaſon, he would be guilty notwithſtanding his Drunkenneſs. Therefore, if you do believe he committed the Facts, there is no Regard to be had to his Drunkenneſs. If the Witneſſes don't contradict one another, but they may be reconciled, you need not then weigh which Side you moſt credit; but if you think they can't be reconciled, but that the Witneſſes overthrow one another, then you muſt conſider which of them is of moſt Weight: But if they can be reconciled, I think where ſuch a Conſtruction can be put on it, it ought to ſtand.

1710. 9 Annæ.

A ſpecial Verdict found.

Then the Jury withdrew, and found a ſpecial Verdict of the following Tenor, (viz.) That on the firſt of March, in the eighth Year of the Queen, a Multitude of People, to the Number of five hundred, aſſembled in a Warlike Manner; with Swords, Clubs, and other other Arms, offenſive and defenſive, in the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, under Pretence of pulling down Meeting-Houſes, and rifling them, and having pulled down the Pulpits, Pews, and Furniture of ſeveral, they proceeded to rifle that in Drury-Lane, and were burning the Materials of it in the Street when the Priſoner, George Purchaſe, came thither with his Sword drawn, and encouraged the People to burn them; but the ſaid George Purchaſe was not with the ſaid People before, and was at that Time much in Drink.

And they further ſay, That the Guards coming to diſperſe the People at the ſaid Fire in Drury-Lane, Purchaſe aſſaulted the Captain of the Guards with his Sword, and ſtruck ſeveral of the Horſes of the Guards with his Sword; and being told, That he that reſiſted the Guards reſiſted the Queen, anſwered, Are you an Enemy to Sacheverell? and led the People on againſt the Guards, crying, I am for High Church and Sacheverell: Come on, Boys! I will loſe my Life in the Cauſe, and will fight the beſt of them: And that the general Cry of the People, while they were rifling the Meeting-Houſes, was, High Church and Sacheverell!

But whether, upon the whole Matter, the ſaid George Purchaſe was guilty of High Treaſon, they left to the Court.

No Judgment given

The Judges, it ſeems, were moſt of them of Opinion, that the Fact, as found by this ſpecial Verdict, was High Treaſon; but Her Majeſty granting Purchaſe a Pardon, Judgment was never given againſt the Priſoner.

Purchaſe pardoned.

Remarks on the Trials of Damma-ree and others.

The Ides of March were not more fatal to Cæſar and his Friends than to ſome modern Stateſmen, who being arrived at the Meridian of Power, and looking upon themſelves to be as firmly eſtabliſhed as ever Cæſar was, did, by one wanton Proſecution, in which they vainly propoſed to have triumphed over Church and State, Prince and People, draw upon themſelves the Indignation of all Mankind, and were precipitated from that Height of uſurped Dominion, which had in a Manner turned their Heads, and rendered them incapable of cool Advice.

No Doubt but it is High Treaſon and Rebellion in the People, to attempt a Redreſs of their Grievances by Force. The Doctrine of Non-Reſiſtance, unleſs in ſome very extraordinary Caſes, is eſtabliſhed both by Law and Goſpel: But both Whigs and Tories ſeem to agree, that if either King, Lords or Commons, endeavour ſeparately to ingroſs the whole Legiſlative Power, and enſlave the other two, as well as the People in general, and conſequently to overturn the Conſtitution; then ſuch Uſurpers may be reſiſted, and reduced within due Bounds: And it is the Duty of every Subject to aſſiſt in reſtoring the Conſtitution to its Primitive Form. This was reſolved at the Revolution, in the Caſe of King James. And when the Lords and Commons aſſumed the Sovereign Legiſlative Power in 1641, it is held that no Man was obliged to ſubmit to them: Reſiſtance, to their uſurped Authority, was lawful and commendable: Nay, it has been the avowed Principle of the Whigs, till very lately, That if King, Lords and Commons united, ſhould endeavour the Subverſion of the Conſtitution, by conſenting to a Law to make the King abſolute, that ſuch a Law would be void: The People are not bound to obey it, but may call their Repreſentatives to Account for a Breach of Truſt, and fix the Government upon its ancient Baſis, or ſtrike out any other Form that pleaſes them better, the People being the Original of Power, and the laſt Reſort in all ſuch extraordinary Caſes. But though I cannot come entirely into theſe Notions, yet ſhould a Cabal, or Junto of Miniſters, find Means to impoſe upon their Prince, and under Pretence of eſtabliſhing his Prerogatives, and promoting the Welfare of the Kingdom, in His Name aſſume an Arbitrary Dominion; and, by bribing Members with Places and Penſions, or the Expectation of them, procure the Concurrence of a Majority to eſtabliſh a deſpotick Power: Whether, in ſuch a Caſe, Reſiſtance would not be as lawful, as where the People are in Danger of being enſlaved by Force, either by the Prince, or by either or both Houſes, may be a Moot Point.

It is certain that a great Part of the Nation was of Opinion, that the Queen was deceived in ſome of her Miniſters as well as Dr. Sacheverell: That they apprehended the Throne was ſo ſurrounded by them and their Creatures, that no others could have Acceſs to Her Majeſty: That they kept Her in a kind of Durance and Dependance, and would not ſuffer her to diſpoſe of any Poſt, Civil or Military, without their Advice; and that both the Queen and her Subjects were in a manner Slaves to the Junto; and if this were Fact, Will any Man ſay, That ſuch a Miniſtry might not be reſiſted as well as the Prince, or either Houſe of Parliament, that ſhould aſſume an abſolute Dominion over the reſt of the Nation? If the Queen's Name was made uſe of, as that of ſome of our Kings have been, to the Deſtruction both of Prince and People, could thoſe who endeavoured to reſcue her Majeſty and themſelves from ſuch an inglorious —— Servitude, be termed Rebels and Traitors? Where our Liberties are invaded by open Force, all Parties agree, the People are authorized to reſiſt: And does it alter the Caſe much, if we are enſlaved by Fraud, by Bribery, Hypocriſy, Lying, and other deteſted Arts? If a People loſe their Liberties, will it be any Satisfaction, that they were impoſed upon, and tricked out of them, and not ſubdued by Force?

It is the Opinion of ſome, that if Doctor Sacheverell had not alarmed the Nation, a certain Cabal would have been ſo firmly eſtabliſhed, that both the Queen, and Her Succeſſors, would have been obliged to obey their Dictates, and would have enjoyed little more than the Name of Sovereignty; and that the Conſtitution had been entirely alter'd: And 'tis obſervable, how ſtrenuouſly the Managers themſelves maintained, that Reſiſtance was not only only lawful, but heroical, when it was intended to ſave a ſinking Conſtitution; provided there were a Majority of the People of the Opinion of the Doctor's Mob: Therefore theſe Tumults muſt have been lawful and commendable, according to that favourite Doctrine, That the People are the Original of Power, and that it devolves on them again, whenever they imagine their Repreſentatives betray their Truſt. It appears very evident from the Queen's Conduct, that She was far from imagining this Rebellion, as it was called, was intended againſt Her: She ſeemed convinced, the People intended no more than to reſcue her out of the Hands of thoſe that would have made a Prey of Her, for She did not only Pardon thoſe that were convicted, but diſplaced the Men who were the Authors of theſe Proſecutions. The People alſo, when they were left at Liberty, ſoon diſcovered their Sentiments of theſe Proſecutions in their next Choice: So that it appears, the Doctor's Friends had both the Queen and People of their Side. How then could the Reſiſtance that was made to a Cabal, which would have enſlaved both Prince and People, and ſubverted the Conſtitution, be termed Rebellion: If we pay any Regard to the Arguments of the learned Managers, thoſe avowed Patrons of the Doctrine of Reſiſtance? And 'tis remarkable of this Mob, that it was the moſt inoffenſive that was ever raiſed: For except the Pews and Furniture of three or four Meeting-Houſes, no Manner of Hurt or Violence was offered to any one Perſon whatever.

The Queen was much more in Danger from the Cabal themſelves, if Biſhop Burnet is to be believed, who ſays, that he charged the Queen with being about to deliver up her People, to be ſacrificed after Her Death, and threatned Her if ſhe perſiſted in it, that the People would depoſe her, and bring in the Hanover Family in her Life time, in which he would aſſiſt them: Surely the Queen could not have greater Enemies than theſe, who repreſented Her in ſuch odious Colours, in order to ſpirit up the People to dethrone Her, as the Biſhop himſelf confeſſes They had Recourſe alſo to other Arts, to deter the Queen from making a Change in the Miniſtry. They brought a Deputation from the Bank, to repreſent to her Face the Hazard She run in doing it, Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Governor of the Bank, Nathaniel Gould, Deputy-Governor, Sir William Scawen, and Francis Eyles, Directors, were introduced to Her Majeſty, and affirmed, That the publick Credit could not be ſupported, if ſhe changed any of Her Miniſters; and the Queen proceeding to make ſome Alterations contrary to the Advice of theſe Wiſe Citizens, They prevailed on the Imperial and Dutch Miniſters to make another Attack on their Sovereign, who in Purſuance of their Inſtructions, laid before the Queen the diſmal Conſequences the Change of Her Miniſtry would have on her Affairs abroad; Which Affront Her Majeſty juſtly reſented, and told the Dutch Envoy, She was ſurprized his Maſters ſhould take upon them to direct Her what Servants ſhe ſhould employ, and that this was the greateſt Inſult that was ever offered to the Crown of England by a Foreign Power.

However, Biſhop Burnet ſays, he ventured afterwards to reprove the Queen to her Face, for diſmiſſing her old Miniſtry: He told Her (he ſays) Her Miniſters had ſerved Her with that Fidelity and Succeſs, that Her making a Change in them would amaze all the World.

So that the turning out the Whigs, and introducing the Tories (though a vaſt Majority of the Nation, and the trueſt Friends to the Proteſtant Religion and Monarchy) was the great Grievance: As to the Calumny of the Queen's bringing in the Pretender and Popery, this was all Artifice, the Chiefs of the Whigs themſelves, did not believe it; but this is the grand Engine by which they have frequently impoſed upon the People, and been too hard for their Rivals: Thus it is they have frequently wriggled themſelves into the Favour of the Populace, if not of their Prince; but the ſtale Stratagem was now detected, and an End put to their Reign and Influence: They were diveſted of thoſe Poſts without which the Whigs never made any tolerable Figure in this Nation.

But ſurely never any Sovereign Prince was ſo rudely dealt with by her Servants, who having failed in their Attempts of raiſing the Mob upon her, under Pretence of her Affection to Popery and the Pretender; ſet every Foreign Power upon Her, to compel Her to change Her Meaſures, which would in ſome Reigns have been interpreted High-Treaſon. However, all the World are convinced by this Time, that the Priſoners who huzza'd for High-Church and Sacheverell, were much truer Friends to the Queen and Conſtitution, than the Cabal that occaſioned that unneceſſary Proſecution.

The Trial of Lord Derwentwater, &c.

Proceedings on an Impeachment for High-Treaſon, againſt JAMES Earl of Derwentwater, WILLIAM Lord Widdrington, WILLIAM Earl of Nithiſdale, ROBERT Earl of Carnwath, WILLIAM Viſcount Kenmure, and WILLIAM Lord Nairn, before the Houſe of Peers, in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Thurſday, the 9th of February, 1715. 2 Geo. I.

1715. 2 Geo. I.

The Impeachment.

THE Articles of Impeachment ſet forth, That for many Years paſſed, there had been a wicked Deſign formed, to ſubvert the Government, extirpate the Proteſtant Religion in this Kingdom, and to introduce Popery: In which Conſpiracy, many Proteſtants, pretending an uncommon Zeal for the Church of England, had joined: But that God, in his good Providence, had raiſed up King William, and made him the glorious Inſtrument of ſettling the Proteſtant Succeſſion in the Houſe of Hanover; ſince which, the Conſpirators had been indefatigable in their Endeavours to deſtroy the ſaid Eſtabliſhment, and make Way for a Popiſh Pretender; particularly in the laſt Years of the Reign of Queen Anne, when the holy Scriptures were wreſted, and the moſt wholeſome Doctrines of the Church of England perverted, by Men in holy Orders, in order to condemn the Juſtice of the Revolution, and undermine the Foundation of the ſaid happy Eſtabliſhment; and the moſt notorious Inſtruments of theſe wicked Purpoſes were countenanced, by particular Marks of publick Favour and Diſtinction: Falſe and dangerous Notions of Hereditary Right were propagated and incouraged by Perſons in the higheſt Truſts and Employments; and, to conceal their Deſigns, Multitudes of People, of all Ranks, pretending a Zeal for the Proteſtant Succeſſion, voluntarily took the Oaths for the Security of the ſaid Eſtabliſhment; but, at the ſame time, fomented groundleſs Fears of the Danger of the Church of England, to diſorder the Minds of well-diſpoſed Proteſtants.

That they proceeded to procure a Diſſolution of the late glorious Confederacy againſt France, and clapped up an ignominious Peace with the French King, whereby the Proteſtant Succeſſion was reduced to the moſt imminent Danger: And by theſe and other pernicious Meaſures, the Deſtruction of theſe poor Nations, ſo long intended by the ſaid Conſpirators, ſeemed near at Hand.

In which deplorable Circumſtances, it pleaſed God providentially to take off the late Queen Anne, and bring his preſent Majeſty to the Throne of his Anceſtors, to which he was received with one full Voice and Conſent of Tongue and Heart, and the united Joy of every good Subject and good Proteſtant, as their only lawful and rightful Liege Lord. And although his Majeſty's Reign had been one continued Series of Wiſdom, Juſtice, and Clemency; his Labours conſtant, unwearied, and ſucceſsful, to retrieve the Honour of the Nation, and reeſtabliſh Trade; And although he had given all imaginable Encouragement to the Church of England, &c. Nevertheleſs the Conſpirators had renewed their Endeavours to throw this Kingdom into the utmoſt Confuſion, under falſe Pretences of Zeal for the Church of England; and did contrive and confederate to put their ſaid wicked and traitorous Deſigns in immediate Execution: For which Purpoſe, James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, together with Thomas Forſter, jun. the Lord Charles Murray, Edward Howard, Thomas Errington, John Clavering, William Shaftoe, Sir Francis Anderton, Ralph Standiſh, Richard Townley, Thomas Butler, Thomas Walton, Gabriel Hasket, Richard Gaſcoigne, and divers other Perſons, as falſe Traitors to his preſent moſt ſacred Majeſty King George; did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November, 1715, moſt wickedly, maliciouſly, falſely, and traitorouſly, imagine and compaſs the Death of his moſt ſacred Majeſty.

And for the accompliſhing and executing their ſaid traitorous Purpoſe, they, the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, and William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, did, in or about the ſaid Months, or ſome of them; and at divers other Times, and in divers Places within this Kingdom; wickedly and traitorouſly agree, confederate, conſpire, and reſolve, together with many other evil-diſpoſed Perſons, to raiſe, excite, and levy, within the Counties of Teviotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and the County-Palatine of Lancaſter, and elſewhere, within this Kingdom, a moſt cruel, bloody, and deſtructive War againſt his Majeſty, in order to depoſe and murther his ſacred Majeſty, and to deprive him of his Royal State, Crown, and Dignity.

And the ſaid James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithiſdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viſcount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, their Accomplices and Confederates, in or about the Months aforeſaid, in the Counties aforeſaid, or ſome of them, did gather together great Numbers of his Majeſty's Subjects, and with them did aſſemble in a warlike and traitorous Manner, in order to raiſe Tumults and Rebellion within this Kingdom, and procured great Quantities of Arms, Ammunition, and warlike Inſtruments, at the Times and Places aforeſaid, foreſaid, or ſome of them; and did form and compoſe, or did aſſiſt in the forming and compoſing an Army of Men, conſiſting of his Majeſty's Liege Subjects, in order to wage War againſt his ſaid Majeſty, for, and in Behalf, and in Favour of the ſaid Pretender to the Crown of theſe Realms; and the ſaid laſt-mentioned Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, at the Time and Times, and Places aforeſaid, and at divers other Times and Places within this Kingdom, did maliciouſly and traitorouſly make, levy, and raiſe War and Rebellion againſt his moſt ſacred Majeſty; and, in a warlike and hoſtile Manner, did march through and invade ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom, and did unlawfully take and ſeize the Horſes, and other the Goods and Chattels of many of the peaceable and good Subjects of his Majeſty; and in other Places, did take and ſeize from his Majeſty's faithful Subjects, Guns, and other warlike Inſtruments, for the carrying on their traitorous Purpoſes.

And the ſaid laſt-mentioned Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, during their March and Invaſion aforeſaid, in open Defiance of his moſt ſacred Majeſty's juſt and undoubted Title to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, did wickedly and traitorouſly cauſe and procure the ſaid Pretender to be proclaimed in the moſt publick and ſolemn Manner, as King of theſe Realms; and, in ſeveral Places, in the Counties aforeſaid, or ſome of them, did unlawfully take and ſeize from his Majeſty's Officers of the Revenue, the publick Money, for the Uſe and Service of the ſaid Pretender; and though many of the ſaid Conſpirators were avowed Profeſſors of the Popiſh Religion, yet, the more effectually to cover and diſguiſe their moſt wicked and traitorous Deſigns, and to delude his Majeſty's Subjects, they did prevail on, and procure ſeveral Men in holy Orders, Miniſters of the Church of England, and who had, before that Time, abjured the ſaid Pretender, to accompany, countenance and abet the ſaid moſt traitorous Enterprize; and, in ſeveral Places, in the Counties aforeſaid, where the ſaid Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates then were, to pray for the ſaid Pretender, in publick Churches, as King of theſe Realms.

1715. 2 Geo. I.

And the ſaid laſt-mentioned Conſpirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, did, in or about the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, or 13th of November aforeſaid, traitorouſly ſeize and poſſeſs themſelves of the Town of Preſton, in the County-Palatine of Lancaſter, againſt his Majeſty, and did then and there, in a warlike and hoſtile Manner, levy War, oppoſe, engage, and fight againſt his Majeſty's Forces; and did then and there cauſe and procure a miſerable and horrid Slaughter and Murther of many of his Majeſty's faithful Subjects; againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, &c. Of all which Treaſons, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled, did, in full Parliament, impeach the ſaid Earl of Derwentwater and his ſaid Accomplices.

The Lords Anſwer to the Impeachment. To which Articles the impeached Lords put in their ſeveral Anſwers; wherein they endeavour to extenuate their Crimes, by ſhewing, it was a raſh unpremeditated Enterprize; and, though they acknowledged their Guilt, they inſiſted, that they ſurrendered on a Promiſe of their Lives: However, Sentence was pronounced on them as Traitors; and, on the 18th of February, 1715-16, Writs for executing the Earls of Derwentwater, Nithiſdale, and Carnwath, the Lord Widdrington, the Lord Viſcount Kenmure, and the Lord Nairn, were delivered to the Lieutenant of the Tower, and the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex. They confeſs their Guilt, and are condemned.

Petitions to the Parliament, to intercede for them. On the twenty-ſecond of the ſame Month, they petitioned both Houſes of Parliament, to intercede with his Majeſty on their Behalf; and the Lords addreſſing the King accordingly, his Majeſty anſwered, That on this, and all other Occaſions, he ſhould do what he thought moſt conſiſtent with the Dignity of his Crown, and the Safety of his People. The Lords Addreſs.

The Commons refuſe to interpoſe. And the Commons adjourning themſelves, to avoid being importuned by the Friends of the condemned Lords; an Order of Council was iſſued on the 23d Inſtant, for the executing the Earl of Derwentwater, the Earl of Nithiſdale, and the Lord Kenmure, the next Day; and the Lords Derwentwater and Kenmure were executed accordingly, on a Scaffold on Tower-Hill, on the 24th of February; but the Lord Nithiſdale found Means to make his Eſcape the Night before: The other three were reprieved from Time to Time; and at length diſcharged. Lords Derwentwater and Kenmure executed. Lord Nithiſdale eſcapes. The reſt reprieved.

The Impeachment of GEORGE Earl of Wintoun.

1715. 2 Geo. I.

Earl of Wintoun's Impeachment. His Anſwer. AN Impeachment alſo was preferred againſt the Earl of Wintoun, of the ſame Tenor as the former: In Anſwer to which, he ſaid, He was forced from his Houſe by the King's Troops, who plundered and demoliſhed it without any Offence given; and he was obliged to take Shelter among the Malcontents in his own Defence, but had no treaſonable Deſign or Intention againſt his Majeſty: That he did not ſo much as fire a Piſtol at Preſton, or elſewhere; and ſurrendered himſelf there to General Wills, being conſcious of his Innocence.

He acts the Part of an Ideot at his Trial. He behaved himſelf at his Trial, which began the 15th of March, for the moſt Part like an Idiot; but inſiſted, That he ſurrendered on a Promiſe of Mercy: Whereupon the Managers for the Commons examined their Witneſſes; and proved, that his Lordſhip was as active in the Rebellion as the reſt, and did not appear to be defective in his Senſes at that Time: They alſo produced the Generals and Officers, to prove, that they ſurrendered at Diſcretion, and had no Terms granted them: Whereupon the Lords found him GUILTY. The Facts proved againſt him. He is convicted;

The Lord Wintoun afterwards moved in Arreſt of Judgment, That he was ſuch a Perſon, againſt moves in Arreſt of Judgment,

1715 2 Geo. I. he was non compos:

against whom, by Law, Judgment ought not to be given; or, in other Words, That he was Non compos; and desired his Counsel, Sir Constantine Phipps, might speak to that Point: But Sir Constantine beginning to speak, was reprehended for it; and the Lord Wintoun was told, That this was a Point of Fact, and not of Law; and that their Lordships were of Opinion, That he was such a Person, against whom Judgment of Death for High Treason ought to be pronouncea.

This Exception over ruled.

Objects that the Time was not ascertained.

Then the Lord Wintoun said, That his Counsel were ready to offer in Arrest of Judgment, That the Impeachment was insufficient, because the Time of committing the Treason was not laid with sufficient Certainty in the Impeachment.

His Counsel permitted to argue this Point.

Whereupon the Lord High Steward intimating to the Prisoner's Counsel, That they were at Liberty to speak to that Point; Sir Constantine Phipps said, We humbly apprehend the Impeachment against the Noble Lord at the Bar, to be insufficient; it is so uncertain, that no Judgment can be given upon it: In Indictments, even for Trespasses, the Law requires the certain Day when the Offence is supposed to be committed to be alledged; and, if a particular Day be not laid, the Indictment is insufficient: And, if such Certainty is required in Offences of the most minute Nature, much more in Capital Crimes; and especially in Treason, with which this Noble Lord is charged.

One Reason why, in Indictments for High Treason, a certain Day should be assigned, is for the Advantage of the Prisoner; that being apprized of the Time when those Facts are supposed to be committed, he may be the better able to make his Defence: He may possibly prove he was in another Place, or in other Company, at the Time he is charged with committing the Treason; or may, by other Circumstances, make his Innocence appear.

Another Reason is for the Benefit of the Crown, that it may be known to what Time the Forfeiture shall relate; for if there be no precise Time alledged in the Indictment, the Forfeiture can relate no further than to the Judgment.

Indictments have been held insufficient for less Faults than not specifying the Day: But I will not trouble your Lordships with citing Authorities: For there is not a Gentleman of the long Robe, but will agree, an Indictment for any Capital Offence is erroneous, if the Offence be not alledged to be committed on a certain Day.

My Lords, an Attainder upon an Impeachment, subjects the Offender to the same Punishment and Forfeitures, as an Attainder upon an Indictment; and there should, therefore, be the same Certainty in one, as in the other: And if equal Certainty be required in both, we submit it to your Lordships, whether this Impeachment be not erroneous and insufficient, there being no certain Time alledged, when the Treason or Overt-Acts were committed.

The Treason alledged, is conspiring and imagining the Death of the King: And the Impeachment sets forth, That this Noble Lord did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November, 1715, together with others in the Impeachment named, traitorously compass and imagine the Death of his most sacred Majesty: That he did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, together with the rest, agree and confederate to levy War against his Majesty: That in or about the said Months, or some of them, this Noble Lord, with others, did levy War, and march through several Parts of this Kingdom, and did proclaim the Pretender to be King: And that on or about the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, or 13th of the said Month of November, this Noble Lord, with others, did seize and possess themselves of the Town of Preston, and fought against his Majesty's Forces.

1715. 2 Geo. I.

As to the first Overt-Act: Can any thing be more uncertainly alledged, than to say, That the Conspirators did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, and at divers other Times and Places within this Kingdom, confederate, &c. to levy War?

The next Overt-Act, which is actual levying of War, is not laid with greater Certainty. And as to the third, the proclaiming the Pretender, there is no certain Time or Place alledged, when or where the Pretender was proclaimed; but only that it was during their March and Invasion. The last Overt-Act, the seizing of Preston, seems to be laid with greater Certainty; but then the Words or about leave it at large: For no Man can tell how many Days may be included in these Words or about.

We apprehend, a Charge of this High Nature, ought not to be alledged with such Uncertainty; and that the Impeachment is as erroneous as an Indictment would be: I do not pretend to any great Skill in Parliamentary Proceedings; but I never saw a Charge exhibited in any other Court in so uncertain a Manner, unless in Libels in the Ecclesiastical or Admiralty Courts, which cannot influence the Case before your Lordships, this being a Proceeding according to the Course of the Common Law.

The Answer of Mr. Attorney to this Exception.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are upon an Impeachment, and not an Indictment. The Courts below have set Forms, which have prevailed for a long Course of Time, and are thereby become the Forms by which those Courts are to govern themselves; but it was never thought, that their Forms had any Influence on the Proceedings of Parliament. In the Reign of Richard II. it is said in the Records of Parliament, That Proceedings in Parliament are not to be governed by the Forms in Westminster-Hall: And though it is usual in the Courts below, to alledge a certain Day, yet they add (and at divers other Days and Times); and that Day which is laid, is not material; for they are not bound to prove the Crime committed on that Day, but may prove the Defendant guilty at any Time, either before or after the Day laid in the Indictment.

As to Dr. Sacheverell's Case, there was an Exception taken to the Impeachment for Uncertainty; and it was argued, from the Forms of the Courts in Westminster-Hall, That where Indictments were for Words spoke or writ, the Words must be laid as they were spoke or wrote, according to the Opinion of the Judges: But it was resolved to be otherwise in the Court of Parliament; and they were not bound but by their own Forms.

As

1715. 2 Geo. I.

As to their Objection, That there is no Time laid for ſome of the Overt-Acts, I think there is a certain Day when Preſton was ſeized: And, in the inferior Courts, it is held, That it is not neceſſary there ſhould be a Day and Place alledged for every Overt-Act: We think therefore this Objection has no Weight, eſpecially in the Caſe of an Impeachment. Your Lordſhips have already given Judgment againſt ſix upon this Impeachment, and it is warranted by Precedents in Parliament: Therefore we inſiſt, that the Articles are good in Subſtance, and according to the Forms of Parliament.

The Reply of the Priſoner's Counſel.

To this Anſwer of Mr. Attorney, Sir Conſtantine replied, I don't remember I ſaid the Day laid in the Indictment was material; for I never thought it ſo material, that there was a Neceſſity to prove the Treaſon to be committed upon that very Day: But, I conceive, the Day laid in an Indictment, ought to be very near the Time, if not upon the very Day, the Treaſon is ſuppoſed to be committed: And I take the conſtant Practice to be ſo.

All the Gentlemen who have ſpoke in Anſwer to me, have admitted, that in Indictments for Treaſon, a certain Day is always alledged: But the honourable Gentleman that ſpoke firſt, makes a Difference between an Indictment and an Impeachment; becauſe an Impeachment is a Parliamentary Proceeding, and the Parliament is not tied up to ſuch ſtrict Forms as the Courts below: But I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips Judgment, Whether an Impeachment, by which a Noble Peer is to be attainted, ought not to be as certain as an Indictment, by which a Commoner is to be attainted? And whether by the Lex Parliamentaria, as much Certainty is not required in one Caſe as the other? As to the Impeachment of the Lord Stafford, that began with an Account of the Plot in general; and, in that Caſe, a general Allegation was ſufficient: But whether the particular Part which my Lord Stafford had in that Plot, be not more certainly alledged, I cannot take it upon my Memory to ſay: Nor is it material; for it is admitted, that no Objection was made to that Impeachment for the Uncertainty of the Charge: If ſuch an Objection had been made, and over-ruled, it would have been a full Anſwer to us; but there being no Notice taken of it, our Objection is as ſtrong, as if that Caſe had never happened. As to that Part of the Impeachment which relates to the taking of Preſton, though that ſeems more certain than any other Overt-Act, yet the Words or about leave it at large, and render it uncertain. 1715. 2 Geo. I.

Mr. Attorney rejoins.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, the learned Gentlemen now agree, that the particular Day in an Indictment is but Form, and that the Fact may be proved any Day, before or after; conſequently the Priſoner gets or loſes nothing, by having a Day charged or omitted: He muſt provide for his Defence, as if no Day was laid: And ſince it is immaterial in Indictments, it muſt be ſo in Impeachments. As to the Anſwer given of my Lord Stafford's Caſe, That this Point paſſed ſub Silentio: If that Impeachment had not been thought good, he had the Aſſiſtance of learned Counſel, well able to adviſe him; and who certainly would have taken the Exception. Here is no Uncertainty that can be to the Diſadvantage of the Priſoner: The Impeachment is agreeable to the Forms of Parliament; he has pleaded to it, and your Lordſhips have found him guilty.

Then the Lord High Steward demanding of the Lord Wintoun, If he had any thing elſe to offer in Arreſt of Judgment? Lord Wintoun anſwered, If you pleaſe to ask my Counſel, they will tell you. The Lord High Steward replied, You have been told often, that the Point you would have your Counſel ſpeak to, muſt be propoſed by yourſelf: Whereupon Lord Wintoun anſwered, Since your Lordſhip will not allow my Counſel, I know nothing; and then the Court adjourned.

The Court ſitting again at Five in the Afternoon, the Lord High Steward informed the Priſoner, That what he had moved in Arreſt of Judgment was over-ruled: And having made a Speech upon the Occaſion, pronounced Sentence on the Lord Wintoun as a Traitor.

The Priſoner having been reprived from Time to Time, made his Eſcape out of the Tower, on the 4th of Auguſt, 1716, and went over to France.

It being as much too ſoon to make Remarks on the Trials of the laſt Reign, as to write the Hiſtory of it, I ſhall only give a ſhort Abſtract of the remaining Trials, as I have done of this, and defer giving a fuller Account of them to a more convenient Seaſon.

The Trial of FRANCIS FRANCIA (generally eſteemed a Jew) for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 22d of January, 1716. 3 Geo. I.

1716. 3 Geo. I.

Francia's Trial.

1716. 3 Geo. I.

The Indictment.

HE was indicted by the Name of Francis Francia, of London, Merchant, of High Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King; and, for that End, conſulting with divers other Traitors, to raiſe a War and Rebellion in the Kingdom, in Favour of the Pretender: He was alſo charged with ſoliciting to procure Arms, Ammunition, and Money from France, to ſupport the ſaid War; and with compoſing and writing ſeveral treaſonable Letters, ſignifying the Reſolutions of himſelf and his Accomplices, and requiring the Aid of Foreigners in the ſaid intended War; and with ſending the ſaid Letters beyond Sea, and cauſing them to be delivered to their Correſpondents in France; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

The Evidence againſt him and his Letters.

The principal Evidence againſt Francia, were ſome French Letters directed to him, and a Book

1716. 3 Geo. I.

Book wherein he entered his Foreign Letters; which the Meſſenger found in a Cloſet in his Room, when he apprehended the Priſoner. Francia acknowledged that he received thoſe Letters which were directed to him: And that ſome of the Letters in the Book were entered by himſelf, and ſome of them by his Son.

In the Priſoner's Examination alſo before the Secretaries of State, which was read in Evidence againſt him, he confeſſed, That he received ſeveral Letters in Covers from the Abbot Butler, directed to Mr. Edward Harvey of Combe: And that he conveyed ſeveral Letters from Mr. Harvey to the Abbot: That he conveyed Letters alſo from Mr. Harvey to the Abbot: That he conveyed Letters from Mr. Harvey to the Duke D'Aumont in France, directed to M. D'Aulmay, alias Payen, at Paris, and received Letters from Duke D'Aumont for Mr. Harvey.

That about two Months ſince, this Method was altered; and Payen, inſtead of incloſing the Anſwers to Mr. Harvey in Covers, wrote only to the Priſoner, directing him to ſhew the Letters to Mr. Harvey, which he did.

That in theſe Letters directed to the Priſoner, and ordered to be ſhewn Mr. Harvey, he underſtood the initial Letters M. H. ſtood for Mr. Harvey; D. D. for the Duke of Ormond, and M. B. for my Lord Bolingbroke: And he verily believed, the Subject of theſe Letters was the Deſign of the Pretender to invade his Majeſty's Dominions: And, in another Examination, he depoſed, That a Letter of Mr. Harvey's was left with him to be forwarded to the Abbot Butler in France, (which was found in the Priſoner's Cuſtody): And that he believed by the Number 22 in his Letter was meant Duke D'Aumont, by No. 6. the late French King, by No. 17. the Tories, by No. 8. the Pretender, by No. 9. his Majeſty.

Then the ſaid Original Letter of Mr. Harvey's was read; wherein he ſhews a great Regard for the Intereſt of the French King and the Pretender. Several of the Letters from Payen to the Priſoner, with the Copies of his Anſwer to them entered in the Priſoner's Book, were read alſo; wherein the Priſoner himſelf ſeems ſolicitous for the Pretender's Intereſt, and laments the Loſs they had ſuſtained by the Death of the French King.

The Priſoner's Exceptions to the Indictment. Proves he was an Alien. His further Defence by his Counſel.

After the reading theſe Letters, the Priſoner's Counſel took Exceptions to the Indictment, That he was indicted as a Native of England; whereas he was, in Truth, an Alien; and produced Witneſſes to prove he was born at Bourdeaux in France.

His Counſel alſo obſerved, That there was nothing of the Treaſon in the Letters entered in his Book: And as to what was contained in the Letters he received, if there was Treaſon in them, that could not affect him; he could not help People's directing Letters to him: However, a great Part of the Letters concerned only Horſes and Dogs, and a Suit in Chancery; and they could prove that the Book was not wrote by him. They alſo produced Witneſſes to ſhew the Priſoner was threatened and tampered with by ſome great Men, and received Money of them to accuſe Mr. Harvey: They obſerved alſo that Mr. Harvey, who was repreſented to be the Promoter of this treaſonable Correſpondence, was at Liberty, and not ſo much as brought to a Trial; from whence they inferred, the Government did not imagine this Correſpondence to be treaſonable.

1716. 3 Geo. I.

They inſinuated alſo, That Francia was wheedled to ſign his Examination, and promiſed, that it ſhould not be produced as Evidence againſt him.

The Reply of the King's Counſel to his Defence.

To this Defence, the King's Counſel replied, That the Evidence conſiſted of Letters wrote by the Priſoner to his Correſpondents in France; and of Letters wrote to him by thoſe Correſpondents, ſignifying, the Receipt of Letters wrote by the Priſoner, touching this traitorous Deſign: That for Proof of the Letters wrote by the Priſoner, they had produced his own Copy-Book, wherein they were entered by himſelf or his Son; which was, indeed, ſo rare a Way of perpetuating the Teſtimony of Treaſon, as he thought the like Evidence was never to be expected again.

That they had produced the original Letters from D'Aulmay to him, and which he confeſſed to have received: That theſe were an Evidence that the Priſoner ſent ſuch Letters as are mentioned in D'Aulmay's Letters; for theſe were Anſwers to them, and tallied exactly as to Dates, Circmſtances, and Subject.

That if the Priſoner had received but one treaſonable Letter, his concealing it would have been but Miſpriſion of Treaſon: But receiving ſo many, in every one of which the Writer charges him with writing High Treaſon; and the Priſoner preſerving and concealing theſe Letters, was a ſtrong Evidence of his Approbation and Aſſent to that Treaſon: And ſo it is, where a Man falls accidentally into the Company of Traitors, and hears treaſonable Diſcourſes, this is but Miſpriſion, if he conceals it; but if he meet them a ſecond Time at their treaſonable Conſults, he is guilty of High Treaſon, becauſe this ſhews an Approbation of the Thing, as was reſolved in Sir Everard Digby's Caſe.

And though it had been objected, he was not anſwerable for what others wrote; this was a Miſtake: For if what was written was Treaſon, it was his Duty to diſcloſe it; and, if he did not, but continued to receive ſuch Letters, it was a clear Proof of his traitorous Correſpondence, and by that he made the Treaſon his own: And though it was pretended, he was only the Conveyer of Mr. Harvey's Letters, the contrary appeared from the Letters themſelves; and ſhewed, that the Correſpondence was his own, and carried on by himſelf.

And as to the Intention of theſe Letters, though it was ſaid, they related to Dogs and Horſes; it was true, one of Mr. Harvey's Letters was about Dogs and Horſes; but even in that, there was a good deal of Treaſon intermixed: And as to his own Letters, it was not to be expected in a treaſonable Correſpondence, that Men ſhould ſpeak out plain; ſome Cant was neceſſary to dreſs it up in. Neither he, nor his Counſel, had offered at the Interpretation of above one in the whole Packet; and that they would interpret contrary to the very Grammar and Senſe of it: But was the Meaning of theſe Letters doubtful; He himſelf ſufficiently explained them, when he confeſſed the Subject

The Chief Baron's Directions to the Jury.

Matter of them to be, the Deſign of the Pretender to invade his Majeſty's Dominions.

The Lord Chief Baron then ſummed up the Evidence, and obſerved, That if a Man is privy to a treaſonable Deſign, and aſſents to it, and contributes to the carrying it on, it is High Treaſon: Indeed where one had only a bare Knowledge of it, without any other Concern in it, and concealed it, that was but Miſpriſion of Treaſon.

He ſaid, it was plain from the Letters, that the Cauſe of the Pretender was one, and the Cauſe of the Law-Suit another; and theſe Letters containing ſuch treaſonable Matter, and being written to him, and found in his Cuſtody, was a ſtrong Evidence of his aſſenting and contriving to bring the Pretender over, and of his having writ ſuch Letters as were mentioned to be received from him.

As to the Priſoner's being an Alien born, he thought the Proof was ſtrong, and therefore they ſhould find that Matter ſpecially, for the Judgment of the Court, and find the other Fact: And if they believed he did promote the Invaſion, or concealed and aſſented to that Deſign, that was a conſpiring the King's Death, and the Priſoner was guilty of the Treaſon charged in the Indictment. 1716. 3 Geo. I.

That as to the Threats and Promiſes made to Francia, by my Lord Townſend or Mr. Buckley, they had abſolutely denied it, and their Credit muſt be weighed againſt Simon Francia and the two Women who had ſworn it.

That it was not material in whoſe Hand the Copy-Book of Letters were written, if it contained the Copies of his Letters, as he had acknowledged. He concluded, that if they believed the Letters to be wrote to him, and by him, and that they contained a Correſpondence of a treaſonable Nature, inciting or encouraging a War againſt the King, or any Thing that ſhewed he was privy and aſſenting to it, then he was guilty of High-Treaſon; but if they did not believe they were his, or that they did not amount to ſuch a Correſpondence, then they muſt acquit him.

Then the Jury withdrew, and returning into Court after ſome Time, gave their Verdict, that the Priſoner was NOT GUILTY.

He is acquitted.

Proceedings againſt ROBERT Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, upon an Impeachment for High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, before the Houſe of Peers, in the Months of May and June, 1717. 3 Geo. I.

Earl of Oxford's Trial.

1717. 3 Geo. I.

Articles againſt him.

THE firſt Article of Impeachment charged, That the ſaid Earl, being devoted to the French King, although he was then Lord Treaſurer, and a Privy Counſellor, in Breach of his Oath, and in Defiance of the ſeveral Treaties made with the Allies, the frequent Advices of Parliament, and the Declarations of Her Majeſty, did, in the Months of July or Auguſt, 1711, maliciouſly form a treacherous Confederacy with other evil-diſpoſed Perſons of the Privy Council, to make a ſeparate and deſtructive Peace with France, without communicating the ſame to the Allies; adviſed the Queen to ſend Matthew Prior to France in a clandeſtine Manner, to make Propoſitions, in which the particular Intereſts of Britain, and the common Intereſts of Europe, were betrayed, and an Article inſerted, that the Secret ſhould be inviolably kept from the Allies; and thereby put it in the Power of France to create Jealouſies between Her Majeſty and her Allies, and deſtroyed that Confidence which had ſo long ſubſiſted between them.

2. That the French King thereupon ſending Mr. Meſnager to England, in Auguſt or September following, a ſeparate Treaty was ſigned by the ſaid Meſnager on the Part of France, and by the Earl of Dartmouth and Mr. St. John, two of Her Majeſty's Secretaries of State, on Behalf of Her Majeſty, by Virtue of her Sign-Manual only; in which Treaty the Intereſts of Britain were given up to France, and the Duke of Anjou admitted King of Spain. And thus the Earl had aſſumed Regal Power, in treating with the Enemy without ſufficient Authority from Her Majeſty; and by the ſaid ſeparate Treaty did what in him lay to diſſolve the many ſolemn Treaties Her Majeſty ſtood engaged in to her Allies.

3. That the Earl, with others, contrived a Set of general Preliminaries, to be ſigned by Meſnager, only adviſing Her Majeſty to communicate them to the Miniſters of the Allies as the Ground of a general Peace, and concealed the Treaty, ſigned, as aboveſaid, by the ſaid Meſnager and the Secretaries of State.

4. That the ſaid Earl did declare in Her Majeſty's Name, to the Miniſters of the Allies, That ſhe had made no ſeparate Treaty with France, nor would make any, before ſhe had complied with all her Engagements to her Allies, and given them an Opportunity of making good their Pretentions; by which falſe Aſſurances he had diſhonoured Her Majeſty, by whoſe Privity the ſaid ſeparate Treaty with France had been ſigned, and Her Allies groſly abuſed.

5. That he gave Inſtructions to the Biſhop of London and the Earl of Strafford, Her Majeſty's Plenipotentaries, to inſiſt that Spain and the Weſt-Indies ſhould not be allotted to the Houſe of Bourbon; whereas the Earl had at that Time privately agreed with France that Spain and the Weſt-Indies ſhould remain to the Houſe of Bourbon, and prevailed with Her Majeſty to be a Party to the ſaid private Treaty.

6. That

1717. 3 Geo. I.

6. That Conferences being opened upon the mutual Engagements of the Allies, to act in Concert, and promote their common Intereſt, the Earl and his Accomplices did, notwithſtanding, afterwards promote a ſeparate Negotiation of Peace with France, without communicating it to the Allies; and did concert with the Enemy Terms of Peace prejudicial to the Intereſt of her Majeſty and her Allies; whereby the good Effects of the ſaid general Negotiations were defeated.

7. That he conſented Spain ſhould remain to the Houſe of Bourbon, on condition the Duke of Anjou ſhould renounce his Right to the Kingdom of France, though it had been declared by the Miniſters of France that ſuch a Renunciation would be invalid.

8. That he conſented to the ſending an Order to the Duke of Ormond, her Majeſty's General, not to fight the French; and to the ſending Orders to the Biſhop of Briſtol, her Majeſty's Plenipotentiary, to declare to the Dutch Miniſters, that her Majeſty, from their Conduct, looked upon herſelf to be under no Obligations to them; and adviſed her Majeſty to diſregard the Repreſentations made to her by the Dutch on thoſe Heads; whereby the Progreſs of the Arms of the Allies was ſtopped, and the moſt favourable Opportunity loſt of conquering the Enemy; the Confidence between her Majeſty and her Allies was deſtroyed, the French King made Maſter of the Negotiations, and the Affairs of Europe given into his Hands.

9. That he cauſed the Britiſh Troops to ſeparate from thoſe of the Allies, and refuſed to pay the Auxiliaries that refuſed to withdraw with them; and by that Separation the Allies were ſacrificed to the French at Denain, and the Towns of Queſnoy, Bouchain, and Doway were loſt.

10. That he adviſed the Queen to ſend over Lord Bolingbroke to France, to ſettle a Suſpenſion of Arms, before any Terms of Peace were made, whereby the Safety of the Kingdom, and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, was expoſed to the Enterprizes of the Enemy.

11. That he concerted Meaſures with the Court of France for delivering up Tournay to them.

12. That he traitorouſly adhered to the Duke of Anjou in the Years 1710, 1711, and 1712, when that Prince was an Enemy to this Kingdom, and promoted the yielding up of Spain and the Weſt-Indies to him.

13. That he ſacrificed the Commerce of Great Britain to France; and particularly conſented to their Fiſhing at Newfoundland, and the yielding up of the Iſland of Cape Breton to them.

14. That he conſented to the yielding up of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy, in Prejudice to the Emperor, and ordered the Britiſh Fleet to aſſiſt in putting the Duke in Poſſeſſion of that Iſland.

15. That he had impoſed on her late Majeſty, and induced her to break her Royal Word, given to her Parliament and to her Allies, in ſeveral Inſtances; as, where he made her ſay in a Speech, That the States General expreſſed an entire Confidence in her Negotiations; that ſhe would do her utmoſt to procure every one of her Allies Satisfaction, &c. and yet at that Time a ſeparate Negotiation had been carried on between Britain and France for five or ſix Months. That by indirect Arts he had obtained the Approbation of Parliament to his dangerous Practiſe, and expoſed her Majeſty and her People to the Contempt of the common Enemy. 1617. 3 Geo. I.

16. That the Houſe of Peers having given their Opinion to her Majeſty, that no Peace could be ſafe or honourable if Spain and the Weſt-Indies were allotted to the Houſe of Bourbon; the Earl, to prevent the good Effects of that Advice, and in order to obtain ſuch further Reſolutions on the Subject of Peace as might promote his ſecret Negotiations, adviſed her Majeſty to create twelve Peers, who took their Seats on the 2d of January, 1711, to which Day the Houſe ſtood adjourned; by which deſperate Advice he perverted the true End of the Prerogative, to the Diſhonour of the Crown, and the ſubverting the Conſtitution of Parliaments.

The Commons afterwards exhibited ſix additional Articles againſt the Earl, of the following Tenor:

1. By the firſt of which they charged him, with adviſing the Queen to make a Detachment from her Troops in Flanders, to employ them in the Reduction of Quebeck and Canada in the Year 1710; and paying 28,000*l.* on Pretence of purchaſing Arms and Merchandize for that Expedition; and that, when the Enterprize had proved unſucceſsful, and it appeared the Nation had been cheated of 20,000*l.* he employed his wicked Arts and Credit to prevent the Commons enquiring into it.

2. That he adviſed her Majeſty to ſign a Warrant to John Drummond, Eſq; for 13,000*l.* for ſpecial Services relating to the War, which he afterwards applied to his own private Uſe; and then prevailed on her Majeſty to ſign another Warrant, reciting, that it was for great Services done by the ſaid Earl.

3. That the ſaid Earl, in Auguſt 1712, ſent his Creature Mat. Prior into France, to carry on a ſeparate Negotiation; prevailed on the Queen to make him her Plenipotentiary, and corruptly combined with him to defraud her Majeſty of great Sums of Money; prevailing on her to ſign Warrants for the Payment of 12,360*l.* to the ſaid Mat. Prior, between Auguſt 1712 and July 1714; which exceeded the Allowance of an Ambaſſador of Great Britain: And that he prevailed on her Majeſty to ſign Warrants for the Payment of 5,560*l.* to Thomas Harley, his Emiſſary and near Relation; and for the Payment of divers other Sums to other Perſons; thereby introducing a Practice highly prejudicial to the Conſtitution.

4. Whereas the Revenues of the Exciſe and Poſt-Office had been charged, by a Grant of the late King James, with certain Annuities for the Uſe of Queen Mary his Conſort, but were afterwards ſettled by Act of Parliament for the Support of the Royal Houſhold, and other publick Uſes; he the ſaid Earl, notwithſtanding, ſoon after the Concluſion of the Peace, holding a Correſpondence with the ſaid Queen, and being in the Intereſt of the Pretender, undertook to procure the Payment of the yearly Sum of 47,000*l.* to the Uſe of the ſaid Queen Conſort for Life; and did adviſe her Majeſty Queen Anne,

1717. 3 Geo. I.

Anne, on the 23d of December, 1713, to ſign a Warrant to himſelf, reciting King James's Grant for the Payment thereof; and the next Day the ſaid Earl ſigned a Warrant, requiring the Auditor of the Exchequer to paſs Debentures for paying one Quarter of the ſaid Annuity out of the Sum of 500,000 l. appropriated by Parliament to the Payment of her Majeſty's Debts; and that he ordered 1000 l. to be paid to Gualtier, the French Agent, who negotiated that Affair with him, and was an Emiſſary of the Pretender's.

5. That he adviſed her Majeſty to admit Patrick Lawleſs, as a publick Miniſter from Philip King of Spain, though he was an Iriſh Papiſt, and had ſerved in Arms againſt King William; introducing him to her Majeſty under the Name of Don Carlo Moro; and adviſed her Majeſty to ſign a Warrant for the Payment of 1000 l. to the ſaid Lawleſs, and did often negotiate the moſt important Affairs of the Nation with him; and by thus countenancing the ſecret Emiſſaries of the Pretender, did greatly encourage his open Adherents, to the apparent Danger of the Proteſtant Succeſſion.

6. That he treacherouſly adviſed her Majeſty to conclude a Peace with the King of Spain, without any Security for the Rights and Liberties of the Catalans; and adviſed her to ſend Admiral Wiſhart with a Squadron of Men of War into the Mediterranean, to favour the Reduction of Barcelona and the Iſland of Majorca; and her Majeſty, contrary to her ſolemn and repeated Aſſurances, was by the Earl prevailed on to abandon that diſtreſſed People, drawn in and engaged by her own Invitation into a War with the Duke of Anjou, for the Preſervation of the Liberties of Europe, giving them up a Sacrifice to their enraged Enemy.

For all which the Commons impeached him, &c.

The Earl's Anſwer.

1. To the firſt Article the Earl anſwered, That he was never devoted to the French King, or acted contrary to his Duty, in Defiance of Treaties, the Advice of Parliament, or her Majeſty's Declarations from the Throne; denies that he contrived the ſetting on Foot a ſeparate Peace, or knew of any ſuch; but believes that in April, 1711, France made ſome Propoſals of Peace, ſigned by Monſieur Torcy, Secretary of State to the French King, and the States General deſiring the French might explain thoſe Propoſals, her Majeſty ſent Mr. Prior to France to obtain an Explanation of them; but denies he adviſed the Queen to ſend Mr. Prior to make Propoſitions of Peace without communicating them to the Allies; and if any Inſtructions were given to Mr. Prior for not divulging ſome Propoſitions which concerned Britain in particular, it was the undoubted Right of every Member of a Confederacy to demand particular Advantages for themſelves, not inconſiſtent with their Alliances, and which were not to take Place but on the Concluſion of a general Peace; and the States General, in the Treaties of 1709 and 1710, did the like for themſelves: However, he believed the Propoſitions relating to Britain were communicated to the Allies, and her Majeſty was ſo far from treating ſeparately, that ſhe invited all Parties to the Congreſs.

2. He admits that Mr. Meſnager, in the Year 1711, brought a Letter from the French King to her Majeſty, acknowledging her Queen of Great Britain, and therein expreſſed his Deſire of a Peace. He denies that he treated with Mr. Meſnager ſecretly, or without Authority, or that he aſſumed Regal Power, or adviſed a ſeparate Treaty; but believed there was a Paper ſtiled, The Anſwer of France, to the Preliminary Demands of Great Britain; to which was ſubjoined, A Declaration of the Queen's Acceptance of thoſe Preliminary Articles in caſe of a General Peace; which Declaration was ſigned by the Secretaries of State: But whether this could be called a ſeparate Treaty, he ſubmitted to their Lordſhips; and believes, however, that the Allies had early Notice of theſe Propoſals; and denies that the Intereſts of Britain were given up to France, or the Duke of Anjou admitted King of Spain, by that or any other Treaty; or that he ever endeavoured to diſſolve any Treaties her Majeſty was engaged in.

3. He denies he adviſed the preparing general Preliminaries to be ſigned by Mr. Meſnager, to diſguiſe the carrying on any private Negotiation; but believes ſome preliminary Articles, which were ſigned by Meſnager, were received by her Majeſty, and communicated to the Allies, as the Grounds on which they might treat of a general Peace; but why the adviſing the receiving them ſhould be ſtiled impious, he could not conceive; and if any Treaty was ſigned by the Secretaries of State on the Part of England, and by Meſnager on the Part of France, he did not adviſe the concealing it from the Allies, the Council, or the Parliament; nor did he adviſe the offering the ſaid Preliminaries to the Allies as a Foundation for a general Peace, or adviſe the Inſtructions given to the Earl of Strafford, but believes they were well warranted by the Truth of the Facts.

4. He admits there was ſuch a Declaration made by the Privy Council to the Dutch Miniſter as is mentioned in this Article; but ſays it was agreeable to Truth, and he could not ſee wherein the Articles ſigned by Meſnager and the Secretaries were inconſiſtent with it; or how her Majeſty was diſhonoured, or her Allies abuſed thereby.

5. He believes the Inſtructions given to the Biſhop of Briſtol and the Earl of Strafford were as ſet forth in this Article, and that when they were inſtructed to inſiſt that Spain and the Weſt-Indies ſhould not be allotted to the Houſe of Bourbon, no Treaty had been made whereby it was ſtipulated that Spain or the Weſt-Indies ſhould remain to the Houſe of Bourbon; for her Majeſty had then Grounds to believe, that King Philip would be induced to quit Spain and the Weſt-Indies; and denies he was ever privy to any ſecret Treaties between Great Britain and France, whereby any Reproach could be brought on the Crown, or any Treaties were violated.

6. He denies he knew of any Negotiation relating to the Peace, which was carried on without communicating the ſame to the Alllies; or that he had concerted any Terms prejudicial to her Majeſty, or her Allies.

7. Though he did not adviſe it, he ſaw no Reaſon why Spain and the Weſt-Indies might not be left to the preſent Poſſeſſor, rather than a War be continued, which was ſo burthenſome to the People, and ſo impracticable upon the Foot it was carried on.

8. That

1717. 3 Geo. I.

8. That the Piety of Her Majeſty was ſuch, that ſhe would not hazard the Blood of Her Subjects, without the greateſt Neceſſity, when ſhe had ſo near a Proſpect of Peace; and ſhe might thereupon ſend Orders to the Duke of Ormonde, not to engage in any Siege or Battel; which ſhe was as much at Liberty to do, as the Deputies of the States, who often refuſed to engage in Siege or Battel, on ſuch Motives as they thought reaſonable; though the Generals of the Allies, and their own Generals in particular, were of Opinion, they had a viſible Advantage. However, he denies he adviſed the ſending thoſe Orders to the Duke of Ormonde, or the Orders to the Biſhop of Briſtol, mentioned in this Article: Nor was he conſcious he had given any Councils, by which the Progreſs of the victorious Arms of the Confederates were ſtopped; or that tended to deſtroy the Confidence between Her Majeſty and Her Allies.

9. To the Ninth, he ſays, The Allies ſeparated their Forces from the Duke of Ormonde, and left him in his Camp; the Duke and the Britiſh Forces did not march away from them: And that the Generals of the Auxiliaries refuſed to continue with the Duke, or obey his Orders; and it might proceed from the Diſobedience of thoſe Troops, that Her Majeſty did not think fit immediately to pay their Arrears: And, he admits, ſome of the Troops of the Allies were defeated at Denain; and that the Towns of Queſnoy, Bouchain, and Doway, were afterwards retaken by the French.

10. He admits there was a Suſpenſion of Arms for four Months, agreed on the 12th of Auguſt, 1712; which was the Continuance of a former Ceſſation, into which Her Majeſty invited the Allies; and, it was uſual for Princes at War, to deſire ſuch a Ceſſation of Arms, during a Negotiation of Peace; but he did not adviſe it.

11. He denies he ever adhered to the French King, or adviſed him in what Manner Tournay might be gained from the States-General: On the contrary, it was by Her Majeſty's Interpoſition, that Tournay was left to the Dutch: However, it was not High Treaſon for a Privy Councillor to adviſe the delivering up of a Town.

12. He denies he ever adhered to the Duke of Anjou, or adviſed the yielding Spain, or the Weſt-Indies to him: However, that was not High-Treaſon, if he had.

13. He ſays, He does not know of any Conceſſions made by the Miniſters of Great Britain, to promote the Intereſt of France, or to enable her to impoſe Terms of Peace on the Allies. He denies he entered into any Meaſures with France, deſtructive to the Commerce of Great Britain: And believed, when it was conſidered, what Advantages were like to accrue to the Commons of Great Britain by the Aſſiento Contract, the Liberty of Trading to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, the Ceſſion of Accadia, Hudſon's-Bay, St. Chriſtopher's, Newfoundland, the Demolition of Dunkirk, and the Ceſſion of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon; it would not be thought the Commerce of Great-Britain had been neglected in the late Treaty of Peace: And though he did not adviſe the 9th Article of the Treaty of Commerce; yet, he obſerved, that nothing was poſitively ſtipulated in that Article, but the whole was left to the Determination of the Britiſh Parliament: Nor did he adviſe the French ſhould have the Liberty of drying their Fiſh in Newfoundland, or the Ceſſion of Cape Breton to France; nor does he know that Cape Breton was ever Part of the Territories of Great Britain: And he could not but obſerve, with great Satisfaction, the flouriſhing Condition of the Trade and Navigation of theſe Kingdoms, by Means of the late Peace; the great Increaſe of Shipping, and in the Exportation of the Britiſh Manufactures, the Fiſh, and other Produce of this Kingdom: Whereby the Cuſtoms had been greatly advanced near three Millions of Gold and Silver lately coined; and the Exchange been in Favour of England, in all Parts of Europe.

1717. 3 Geo. I.

14. He denies he adviſed the allotting of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy; but did not diſcern, how the diſpoſing of that Kingdom to him could be thought unjuſt to his Imperial Majeſty, or a Breach of the Grand Alliance.

15. He ſays, He was always of Opinion, that the Word of the Sovereign was Sacred: And that all Communications from the Throne to the Parliament, ought to be true: But that Her Majeſty's Declaration, That the States-General had expreſſed a Confidence in Her, was ſtrictly true, at the Time it was made: And whoever conſidered, what had been done by Her Majeſty for the Service of all Her Allies in the enſuing Treaty, muſt confeſs, ſhe had done her utmoſt to procure for the Allies, all that they could reaſonably demand, agreeably to Her Speech and Meſſage: Nor could any one, who conſidered the Efforts ſhe had made in Spain for ſo many Years, entertain a Doubt, but ſhe had done her utmoſt for the Recovery of it from the Duke of Anjou: Nor did he ſee, how Her Majeſty could be charged with uttering a Falſity, when ſhe took notice of the groundleſs Reports that were ſpread of a ſeparate Peace, when there never was the leaſt Foundation for ſuch a Report: Only ſome few Points were adjuſted, relating to the Intereſts of Her own Kingdoms; and even thoſe were to have no Effect, but on the Concluſion of a General Peace; and theſe were, before the Concluſion of the Peace, communicated to the Allies: That King Philip's Renunciation of the Crown of France, was not a mere Speculation; but of ſuch a Nature, as would execute itſelf, and keep the Crowns of France and Spain divided more effectually than ever; a Title to the Crown of France being thereby given to the Duke of Orleans, and the reſt of the Princes of the Houſe of Bourbon; who could not be preſumed to want Will, or Power, to take Poſſeſſion of the Crown of France, when the King of Spain would be at ſuch a Diſtance, and had renounced it.

16. He obſerved, that it was the undoubted Right of the Sovereign to create Peers: Nor were the Warrants for ſuch Patents ever communicated to the Privy-Council, or the Treaſury; and therefore he could not, as a Privy-Councillor, or Treaſurer, have any Knowledge of them: But had the Queen acquainted him with her Intentions, he might have approved the Choice, without any Breach of his Duty, they being all Perſons of Honour and diſtinguiſhed Merit; and the Peerage was not greatly increaſed by it, conſidering ſome of them would have been Peers by Deſcent, and many Titles of Honour were lately extinct; and, he believes, many Inſtances might be given, where former Princes had exerciſed this Prerogative, in as extenſive a Manner, particularly Hen. VIII. James I. and his late Majeſty King William.

Anſwer to the additional Articles.

Then the Earl proceeded to anſwer the additional Articles.

1. To the firſt, he anſwered, he was againſt the Expedition to Canada: But he believed, thoſe of Her Majeſty's Council, who promoted that Enterprize, acted ſincerely for the publick Good; and that the ill Succeſs of it was to be aſcribed to contrary Winds, and other unforeſeen Accidents: Nor did he believe the common Enemy received any Advantage by detaching thoſe Forces from Flanders, becauſe the General had Orders to ſupply their Places with other Troops, if he judged it neceſſary. That he was ſo far from adviſing the Payment of the 28,000 l. mentioned in this Article, that he put a Stop to it, till he received Her Majeſty's Orders to pay it: And though this Matter had been examined by the laſt, and the preſent Houſe of Commons, he had not heard of any Fraud that had been made out in that Affair; and, if he prevented its being brought before the Parliament, it was becauſe he could not diſcover there was any Proof of a Fraud. That he had never exerciſed any arbitrary Power or Influence, either in the Privy Council, or the Great Council of the Nation; or deſigned to prevent Juſtice being done to the Queen or Nation.

2. He acknowledges, Her Majeſty did ſign a Warrant for the Payment of 13,000 l. ariſing from the Sale of Tin; which was the Queen's proper Money, and not appropriated to the Uſe of the War; and the Tallies and Orders for it were ſtruck in Mr. Drummond's Name: And, it was recited in the ſaid Orders, That Her Majeſty gave the ſaid Sum of 13,000 l. to the Earl, in Conſideration of his Services; and mentioned the Attempt made on his Life by Guiſcard: That the ſaid Grant, according to the Diſcount of thoſe Tallies at that Time, amounted to 10,000 l. for which he acknowledges Her Majeſty's Bounty; but obſerves, that much larger Grants had been made to other Miniſters of State, when the Neceſſities of the Crown have been equally preſſing: And ſays, That in this, or any other Part of his Adminiſtration, he had not been guilty of any Corruption, or Breach of Truſt; but had managed the publick Treaſure in the moſt frugal Manner: That he never made any Advantage by the Diſpoſal of Places: Nor did he, in or out of Place, receive any Penſion from the Crown; and, at length, left the Service with clean, and almoſt empty Hands: So that, notwithſtanding the Queen's Bounty, he could with great Truth affirm, his private Fortune had received a very inconſiderable Addition, by the Employments he poſſeſſed.

3. He acknowledges, That ſeveral Payments were made to Mr. Prior, amounting in the whole to 12,360 l. by Her Majeſty's Direction; and he does not know of any Law that limits a certain Allowance to Ambaſſadors: That other Ambaſſadors and Plenipotentiaries, have been allowed 1,500 l. for their Equipage, 100 l. a Week for their ordinary Entertainment, and 1,600 l. for Extraordinaries, beſides further Sums for ſpecial Services; and, if Mr. Prior had been paid on that Foot, he would have been entitled to much larger Sums. He acknowledges alſo, that 5,560 l. was paid to Mr. Harley, who went twice to the Court of Hanover; but denies that either of them were his Creatures, or that he ever entered into any Combination with them, or any other Perſons, to defraud Her Majeſty, under Colour of ſuch Employments.

1717. 3 Geo. I.

4. He denies his having a Correſpondence with the late Queen Mary, or being in the Intereſt of the Pretender; but admits, that King James having granted ſeveral annual Sums, amounting to 47,000 l. per Annum, out of the Hereditary Exciſe, and the Poſt-Office, to the Uſe of his ſaid Queen, and the late Act of Parliament containing a Saving of all People's Rights, the ſaid late Queen did employ the Abbot Gualtier to receive, for her Uſe, all Sums of Money due to her at Lady-Day 1713; and Her Majeſty Queen Anne thereupon ſigned a Warrant to the Earl, then Treaſurer, of the Purport in this Article mentioned; and the Money was thereupon paid, the Queen's Counſel at Law allowing the Demand to be legal; and it was paid out of the 500,000 l. raiſed for the Payment of Her Majeſty's other Debts: That the Queen did alſo order 1000 l. to be paid to the ſaid Gualtier, who acted as a publick Miniſter from the French King, and had been inſtrumental in releaſing the French Proteſtants on board the Gallies.

5. He admits that Patrick Lawleſs was ordered 1000 l. by the Queen, and that he expected a much larger Sum, having negotiated the ſending the Britiſh Merchandizes to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies; and that he was not known to be a Native of Ireland till long after his Arrival: That he (the Earl) never adviſed the receiving him under the feigned Name of Don Carlo Moro, or had any Knowledge of his being a Miniſter of the Pretender's, or that he was ſent to promote his Intereſts; nor had he ever countenanced any Emiſſary of the Pretender's, or his Adherents, to the endangering the Proteſtant Succeſſion in the Houſe of Hanover; and was perſuaded his Conduct was ſo well known in that Reſpect, as to need no further Juſtification: But if it ſhould, he was able to produce ſuch Proofs of it, as were the beſt Authority in the World, for his Vindication.

6. To the Sixth Additional Article, he ſays, Her Majeſty being informed, that the People of Catalonia were inclined to caſt off the French Yoke, and return to the Obedience of the Houſe of Auſtria; ſhe ſent Mr. Crowe to aſſure them of Her Majeſty's utmoſt Endeavours, to procure the Re-eſtabliſhment of thoſe Rights they formerly enjoyed, under the Houſe of Auſtria: And that Manifeſto's of the like Tenor, were alſo publiſhed by the Earl of Peterborough, and Sir Cloudeſly Shovel: And the Catalans did afterwards acknowledge King Charles III. and join their Arms with Her Majeſty's and Her Allies, againſt the preſent King of Spain; but what Motives induced them to it, he did not know. He admits alſo, That the Arms of the Confederates, were, for ſome Time, attended with great Succeſs in Spain; their Troops having twice

twice entered into the Capital City of that Kingdom: And that the Catalans were under the higheſt Obligations to Her Majeſty, for aſſiſting them with thoſe numerous Forces and Supplies, to make theſe Conqueſts: But the Advantages of theſe Succeſſes being loſt, and the other Allies withdrawing their Troops from Spain, Her Majeſty found the Burthen of that War too heavy for Her Subjects alone; and therefore, for the Good of Her People, thought fit to enter upon a Treaty of Peace: But denies he ever conſpired to ſubject the Spaniſh Monarchy to the Houſe of Bourbon; or the Deſtruction of the Catalans; or adviſed the acknowledging the Duke of Anjou King of Spain, before a Treaty of Peace was ſet on Foot in Form: On the contrary, he uſed his beſt Endeavours to obtain the Liberties of the Catalans: And if from the Meaſures taken by the Catalans, or his Imperial Majeſty, Her Majeſty's Endeavours had not their full Effect, it could not be imputed to any Neglect in Her Majeſty, or Want of Duty in the Earl: He denies that his Imperial Majeſty was neceſſitated, by any Practices of his, to enter into the Convention for the Evacuation of Catalonia; but that Her Majeſty was prevailed on by the Importunity of the Emperor, to be one of the Guarantees thereof: But knows not why his Imperial Majeſty, whom it moſt concerned, omitted in that Convention, to make expreſs and poſitive Stipulations for the Liberties of the Catalans. As to Her Majeſty, Her beſt Offices were employed, and repeated Inſtances made by Her Miniſters, in the moſt pathetick Manner, to obtain for them the Privileges they deſired: And that Her Majeſty did actually obtain for them a perpetual Amneſty and Oblivion, a full Poſſeſſion of their Eſtates and Honours, and a further Grant of all the Privileges, which the Natives of both Caſtiles (the moſt favoured of all the Spaniards) enjoyed; whereby the Catalans were let into the Trade of the Weſt-Indies, which they were excluded from before: And the Queen might have obtained ſtill larger Privileges for them, if they had waited the Event of Her Interpoſitions, and not determined to carry on the War by themſelves againſt King Philip; whereby they loſt the Advantages ſhe had ſtipulated for them: Concluding, that he cannot juſtly be charged with any Conſequences on the Catalans Refuſal to comply with the King of Spain, and acquieſce in the Terms Her Majeſty had obtained for them. And ſays, He is not guilty of all, or any of the Matters contained in the ſaid Articles.

Obſervations of the Earl's on the whole.

The Earl having anſwered the ſeveral Articles, obſerved, That every thing he was charged with was done in the Reign of a Princeſs, who having a perfect Knowledge of the State of Affairs at that Time, could have been the only competent Judge, Whether ſhe was fraudulently dealt with, led into ill Meaſures which ſhe did not direct or approve; or made an Inſtrument of ſacrificing Her Kingdoms to the Enemy. It was with great Grief, he obſerved ſuch Things ſuggeſted, as ſeemed to reflect on the Character of that excellent Queen: But he aſſures their Lordſhips, that every thing relating to the Peace, was communicated to Her late Majeſty, and maturely conſidered by Her, before any thing was determined thereupon: Nor was any Step taken, but in Purſuance of ſuch Determination.

1717. 3 Geo. I.

He ſaid, That the Queen had nothing more at Heart, than to procure Her People the Bleſſing of Peace; and, when ſhe had obtained it, ſhe had this Satisfaction, that ſhe had taken the moſt proper Meaſures to juſtify her Conduct, both to Her Allies, and Her own Subjects: That upon a Review of Her Actions it would appear, and had, in Part, appeared by this Anſwer, That as Her Majeſty entered further into the War, than ſhe was obliged by any Treaties in Being at Her Acceſſion, ſo ſhe contributed more Men and Money towards the carrying it on afterwards, than ſhe was engaged to provide by any ſubſequent Treaties: That Her earneſt Deſires of Peace being twice fruſtrated, when ſuch Conditions might have been obtained, as would have anſwered all the Ends for which the War was declared; and our Succeſſes and Victories produced only an annual Increaſe of the Charge to England, without any further Aſſiſtance from the Allies; and theſe Kingdoms were exhauſted to ſuch a Degree (notwithſtanding the great Advantages obtained by Her Arms), that ſhe was not able to continue the War upon the Foot it then ſtood a Year longer: And Her Allies refuſed to continue it upon thoſe equal Conditions, they were obliged to by their Treaties; ſhe was conſtrained, in Compaſſion to Her People, to hearken to the Overtures of Peace made Her by France, without relying longer on the vain Hopes of gaining more advantageous Terms, by protracting the War a Year longer. She had carried it on ſome Time under that Proſpect, without reaping the Benefits propoſed; and thereby, perhaps, raiſed the Glory of Her Arms; but ſhe could not think this a ſufficient Recompence for the increaſing Miſeries of Her People; and therefore reſolved to lay hold on the Opportunity that was offered Her, of ending the War, by a Safe and Honourable Peace: And thoſe who were then employed in Her Majeſty's Councils, thought themſelves obliged to ſecond Her good Intentions.

And as the Terms of Peace were advantageous to Great Britain, it was approved by both Houſes of Parliament: Solemn Thanks were rendered to God for it here, and in the United Provinces; and Her Majeſty received, on this Occaſion, the hearty Congratulations of Her People, from all Parts of Her Dominions.

This being a true Repreſentation of the Caſe, the Earl does not ſee, how he, or any others in Her Majeſty's Service, can juſtly be charged with betraying the Intereſts of their Country, or the Allies, by negotiating that Peace, ſo acceptable and advantageous to theſe Kingdoms: And, if the Peace itſelf be not condemned, and it be not charged as a Crime that he adviſed Her Majeſty to conclude that Peace, he conceives it an extraordinary Hardſhip, that rough Draughts and Eſſays towards a Peace, leading to an End that was juſt and profitable, ſhould be brought to form ſo many diſtinct Heads of Accuſation againſt him: For, ſuppoſing any improper Steps had been taken, which he does not admit; yet, if Things were at laſt conducted to a right Iſſue, and ended in an Honourable and Advantageous Peace, there can be no juſt Ground to find Fault with the Meaſures uſed to compaſs compaſs it, becauſe they ſeemed before the Accompliſhment to have a different Tendency; eſpecially if it were conſidered, that ſcarce any Peace had been made by a Confederacy, where leſs Reaſon had been given to complain among the ſeveral Parties; and therefore he hoped that no Steps taken for obtaining a Peace, approved by former Parliaments, would be accounted Criminal by any ſucceeding Parliament; unleſs it appeared that thoſe Steps were taken contrary to the Queen's Orders, or upon corrupt Views of private Advantage.

And as a further Proof that the Queen's Miniſters acted with upright Intentions, and were not conſcious of any Failure in their Duty, the Earl obſerves, they never attempted to cover their Actions from publick Cenſure by any Pardon or Indemnity.

That he never ſought or deſired any of the great Employments he held, but came into them by Her Majeſty's ſpecial Command, and had ſerved Her with the utmoſt Zeal and Faithfulneſs; and as he continued in thoſe Stations many Years, it was with Wonder and Pleaſure he obſerved Her Majeſty's whole Thoughts and Time divided between her Duty to God and her Love to her People, whoſe Proſperity ſhe preferred to her own Eaſe, and often hazarded Her Health and Life to procure it: That he found it the moſt effectual Way to recommend himſelf to Her good Opinion, to act upon the ſame Principles of Juſtice and Love to his Country that ſhe did; and as ſhe abhorred the Thoughts of every Thing that might be burthenſome or injurious to Her People, ſo ſhe expreſſed herſelf with the greateſt Satisfaction and Delight, when ſhe reflected on the Advantages ſhe had obtained for Her own Subjects, and the Quiet and Repoſe ſhe had gained for Europe, by that Honourable Peace, for which, as the preſent Age bleſſed Her, future Generations would adore Her Memory.

The Trial begins.

The Commons replied to the Earl's Anſwer, and averred their Charge to be true: And the Earl being brought to his Trial before the Houſe of Peers in Weſtminſter-Hall, on the 24th of June, 1717, the Managers proceeded to open the Charge: But before they had gone through the firſt Article, the Lord Harcourt moved the Peers to adjourn to their Houſe above, and they adjourned thither accordingly; where the Lord Harcourt propoſed the following Queſtion, (viz).

1717. 3 Geo. I.

That the Commons be not admitted to proceed, in order to make good the Articles againſt Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, till Judgment be firſt given on the Articles of High Treaſon.

A Difference between the two Houſes

Which being reſolved in the Affirmative, the Lords returned to Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Lord High Steward acquainted the Commons with the ſaid Reſolution: Whereupon Mr. Thompſon, one of the Managers, ſaid, The Commons conceived it to be their undoubted Right to proceed in their own Method; and that this Reſolution might be of ſuch fatal Conſequence to the Rights and Privileges of the Commons, that they could proceed no further without reſorting to the Houſe for their Direction. Then the Houſe of Peers adjourned, and a Conferrence was held afterwards between the two Houſes on this Subject.

The Commons refuſe to appear at the Trial.

But the Lords perſiſting in their Reſolution, Not to ſuffer the Commons to proceed on the Articles of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors till Judgment was given on the Articles of High-Treaſon; and the Commons inſiſting, that it was their undoubted Right to impeach a Peer either for High-Treaſon, or for High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, or if they ſaw fit to mix the one and the other in the ſame Accuſation; there followed ſuch a Breach between the two Houſes, that, the Lords ordering the Earl to be brought before them again on Monday the 1ſt of July, and giving Notice to the Commons that they intended to proceed further in the Trial that Day, the Commons refuſed to attend: Whereupon the Lords adjourned from Weſtminſter-Hall to their Houſe above, and the Queſtion being put, That Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited againſt him by the Houſe of Commons, for High-Treaſon and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, and that the ſaid Impeachment be diſmiſſed; it was unanimouſly reſolved in the Affirmative.

The Earl acquitted.

Then the Lords went again to the Court in Weſtminſter-Hall; and the ſame Queſtion being put and reſolved in the ſame Manner there, the Earl was brought to the Bar, and the Lord High Steward declared to him, that he was ACQUITTED, and that the ſaid Impeachment was diſmiſſed: After which the Lord High Steward broke his Staff, and the Earl was diſcharged.

Bonnet's Trial.

The Trial of STEDE BONNET, and Thirty-three more of his Crew, for Piracy, before a Court of Admiralty, at Charles-Town in South-Carolina, the 30th of October, 1718. 5 Geo. I.

1718. 5 Geo. I.

The Pirates taken by the Townſmen of Charles-Town.

NICHOLAS TROTT, Eſq; Judge of the Court of Admiralty, and Chief Juſtice of South Carolina, at the opening the Commiſſion for the Trial of theſe Pirates, obſerved, That the Inhabitants of that Province had lately been great Sufferers by Pirates, who had the Aſſurance to lie at their Bar, in Sight of Charles-Town, where they took and plundered ſeveral of their Ships, inward and outward-bound; which at length ſo provoked the Government of Carolina, that they fitted out a Force, under the Command of Colonel Rhet, who fought the Pirates, and brought them in Priſoners; and they were now indicted for their numerous Depredations predations at Sea; but ſeveral of their People had loſt their Lives in thus bravely diſcharging their Duty to their King and Country, which he hoped would prove a ſtrong Inducement to the Jury to do Juſtice on theſe Wretches, who were Enemies to all Mankind.

Two Indictments being found againſt the Priſoners, they were tried on the 30th of October, 1718, except their Commander Stede Bonnet, who had made his Eſcape out of Priſon, and was not then retaken.

The Indictment.

The firſt Indictment charged, That Edward Robinſon, Robert Tucker, William Scot, and the reſt of this piratical Crew, on the 2d of Auguſt, in the 5th Year of the King, upon the High-Sea, near Cape James, alias Cape Inlopen, being about two Miles diſtant from the Coaſt, in the Latitude of Thirty-nine or thereabouts, did piratically take, board, and break up a certain Merchant Sloop, called The Francis, Peter Manwaring Commander; carrying away the ſaid Sloop and Cargoe, which was of a conſiderable Value; againſt the King's Peace, &c.

The Evidence.

Ignatius Pell, Boatſwain of The Revenge, Bonnet's Sloop, teſtified, That he and the reſt of the Priſoners, came, with the Pirates Thatch and Bonnet, from the Bay of Honduras, and took ſeveral Veſſels in their Way; after which they lay off of Charles-Town, where they took five Veſſels more: That they ſailed then to the Capes of Virginia, and afterwards to Cape James, where they took the Sloop commanded by Captain Manwaring, as charged in the Indictment.

Captain Thomas Read teſtified, That he was Priſoner on Board of Bonnet when he took Captain Manwaring's Sloop; and that Bonnet demanding of Manwaring, from whence he came; he anſwered, he came from Antigoa, and was bound for Boſton; and the next Morning the Pirates took ſeveral Hogſheads of Moloſſes and Rum, and other Goods, out of Manwaring's Sloop, and put them on Board his own, and he ſaw the Crew ſhare the Goods amongſt them.

1718. 5 Geo. I.

Captain Peter Manwaring alſo gave Evidence of his being taken by Bonnet and his Crew; and depoſed, that they demanded of him what he had on Board; and he anſwered, he had Moloſſes, Sugar, and Rum; and thereupon they took out his Moloſſes and Rum, and put them on Board the Pirate.

James Keiling, Manwaring's Mate, confirmed the Evidence of the former Witneſſes, and added, that the Pirates carried their Sloop to Cape Fear.

Convicted on the firſt Indictment.

The Fact being abundantly proved, and the Priſoners having nothing material to offer in their Defence, they were all found GUILTY on this Indictment, except four, who appeared to be under a Force.

A ſecond Indictment.

They were then tried upon a ſecond Indictment, which charged, That the ſaid Edward Robinſon, Robert Tucker, &c. on the 31ſt of Auguſt, in the 5th Year of King George, on the High-Sea, at a certain Place called Cape Fear, in the Latitude of Thirty-four, did feloniouſly and piratically take, break, and enter a certain Merchant Sloop, called The Fortune, Thomas Read Commander, carrying away both the Veſſel and Cargoe; againſt the King's Peace, &c.

Convicted on the ſecond Indictment.

The Fact being proved beyond all Doubt by the ſame Witneſſes, and the Priſoners offering nothing material in their Defence, they were convicted alſo upon this Indictment, (except the four that were under a Force) and Sentence of Death was paſſed on them, on the 5th of November following; in Purſuance whereof they were executed.

Condemned.

Bonnet himſelf alſo being retaken, was brought to his Trial on the 10th of November, and convicted on the ſame Evidence, and afterwards confeſſed the Facts; whereupon Sentence of Death was pronounced on him, and he was executed at the White Point, near Charles-Town, on the 10th of December.

Bonnet convicted, and executed with the reſt.

Anneſley and Sherlock.

Proceedings of the Iriſh Houſe of Lords againſt the Lord Chief Baron GILBERT, and other Barons of the Exchequer there (in the Caſe of Anneſley and Sherlock, which occaſioned the Reſtraining the Juriſdiction of that Houſe over the Inferior Courts,) 28 July, 1719. 5 Geo. I.

1719. 5 Geo. I.

Reſolutions of the Houſe of Lords in Ireland.

ON the Motion of Edward Earl of Meath, and Cecilia his Counteſs, on the 11th of February, 1703, it was Reſolved by the Iriſh Houſe of Lords, nemine contradicente, That by the Laws and Statutes of that Kingdom Her Majeſty had an undoubted Juriſdiction and Prerogative of judging, in that Her High Court of Parliament, of all Appeals and Cauſes within that Realm.

That the Determinations of that Houſe were final, and could not be reverſed or ſet aſide by any other Court whatever.

That if any Subject, or Reſiant of that Kingdom, ſhould preſume to move any Cauſe, determined in that High Court, to any other Court, he ſhould be deemed a Betrayer of Her Majeſty's Prerogative, and of the undoubted Rights and Privileges of that Houſe, and of the Subjects of that Kingdom.

And that if any Subject, or Reſiant of that Kingdom, ſhould preſume to put in Execution the Orders of any other Court, contrary to the final Judgment of that Houſe, ſuch Perſon ſhould be deemed a Betrayer of Her Majeſty's Prerogative and Juriſdiction, and the undoubted Rights and Privileges of that Houſe, and of the Subjects of that Kingdom.

1719. 5 Geo. I.

In September 1717, a Cauſe between Sherlock and Anneſley coming by Way of Appeal before the Iriſh Houſe of Lords, their Lordſhips Ordered, on the 3d of October, the High-Sheriff of the County of Kildare to put the Appellant, Heſter Sherlock, into the Poſſeſſion of certain Lands in that County; whereupon Mr. Anneſley appealed to the Houſe of Lords of Great Britain: However, the ſaid Heſter Sherlock was put into the Poſſeſſion of the ſaid Lands, by virtue of the ſaid Order of the Iriſh Houſe of Lords, on the 16th of October, 1717; and remained in Poſſeſſion of them near two Years: But the Britiſh Houſe of Peers making a Decree in the mean time in favour of Anneſly, ſent Orders to the Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, and the reſt of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer there, to replace Anneſley in the Poſſeſſion of thoſe Lands of which he had been diſpoſſeſſed by virtue of the Decree of the Iriſh Houſe of Lords; and the Court of Exchequer iſſued their Proceſs accordingly; but the High Sheriff refuſed to obey it: Whereupon ſeveral Fines were ſet upon the Sheriff by the Barons; and he appealed to the Iriſh Houſe of Lords, who came to the following Reſolutions, viz.

Further Reſolutions of the Iriſh Houſe of Lords;

That the Caſe of Sherlock and Anneſley, as it lay before the Barons of the Exchequer, being not only Matter of Law, but State, ought to have been laid before the King, or the chief Governors of this Kingdom, it ſo nearly concerning His Majeſty's Prerogative, and the Intereſt of the whole Kingdom.

Againſt the Barons of the Exchequer, for executing the Decrees of the Engliſh Houſe of Peers.

That Jeffrey Gilbert Eſq; Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, John Pocklington Eſq; and Sir John St. Leger, Barons of the ſaid Court, in their Proceedings in the Cauſe between Sherlock and Anneſley, and againſt Alexander Burrowes Eſq; late Sheriff of the County of Kildare, have acted contrary to Law, and to the eſtabliſhed Practice of the King's Courts.

That the ſaid Lord Chief Baron and Barons, having taken upon them to put in Execution a pretended Order from another Court (the Engliſh Houſe of Peers) contrary to the final Judgment of this High Court of Parliament, in the Cauſe between Sherlock and Anneſley, are Betrayers of His Majeſty's Prerogative, and the undoubted antient Rights and Privileges of this Houſe, and of the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects of this Kingdom.

1719 5 Geo. I.

The Barons committed.

And it was Ordered, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, that the ſaid Lord Chief Baron and Barons ſhould be taken into the Cuſtody of the Black Rod of that Houſe; and they were taken into Cuſtody accordingly.

Theſe Proceedings of the Iriſh Houſe of Peers ſo incenſed the Houſe of Lords of Great Britain, that they ordered a Bill to be brought in, to diſable the Houſe of Peers of Ireland from reverſing or altering any Judgment given in any of the inferior Courts of that Kingdom; which Bill afterwards paſſed into an Act, and was intituled, An Act for the better Security of the Dependency of the Kingdom of Ireland upon the Crown of Great Britain, and is of the following Tenor, viz.

An Act for the Securing the Dependency of Ireland on England.

Whereas the Houſe of Lords of Ireland have of late, againſt Law, aſſumed to themſelves a Power and Juriſdiction to examine, correct, and amend the Judgments and Decrees of the Courts of Juſtice in that Kingdom; therefore, for the better ſecuring of the Dependency of Ireland upon the Crown of Great Britain, it is declared, That the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland hath been, is, and of Right ought to be, ſubordinate unto, and dependant upon, the Imperial Crown of Great Britain, as being inſeparably united and annexed thereto; and that the King's Majeſty, by and with the Advice and Conſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons of Great Britain in Parliament aſſembled, had, hath, and of Right ought to have, full Power and Authority to make Laws and Statutes of ſufficient Force and Validity to bind the Kingdom and People of Ireland.

The Power of the Iriſh Houſe of Lords, in Caſes of Appeal, abrogated.

And it was further declared and enacted, That the Houſe of Lords of Ireland have not, nor of Right ought to have, any Juriſdiction to judge, affirm, or reverſe, any Judgment, Sentence, or Decree, given or made in any Court within the ſaid Kingdom; and that all Proceedings before the ſaid Houſe of Lords, upon any ſuch Judgment, Sentence, or Decree, are, and are hereby declared to be, null and void, to all Intents and Purpoſes whatſoever.

Reaſon and Tranter their Trial.

The Trial of HUGH REASON and ROBERT TRANTER, for Murder, at the King's-Bench Bar, on the 3d of February, 1721. Hil. 8 Geo. I.

1721. 8 Geo. I.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged, That Hugh Reaſon and Robert Tranter, on the 17th of October then laſt paſt, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, feloniouſly, and of their Malice afore-thought, made an Aſſault upon Edward Lutterell Eſq; and that the ſaid Hugh Reaſon, with a Piſtol charged with Powder and Ball, did ſhoot the ſaid Edward Lutterell, giving him one mortal Wound under the Right Pap, of the Breadth of one Inch, and the Depth of nine Inches; of which Wound he languiſhed till Ten o' Clock in the Evening, and then died; and that the ſaid Robert Tranter was preſent, aiding and abetting the ſaid Hugh Reaſon to commit the ſaid Murder; againſt the King's Peace, &c.

The Caſe was thus: As Captain Lutterell was going from his Lodgings in Surry-Street, to take Water, he was arreſted for 10 l. by the Priſoners Reaſon and Tranter; and he telling them that, if they would go home with him, he would pay the Money, they did ſo; and Reaſon went up with the Captain into his Dining-Room, while Tranter was ſent for the Attorney's

Bill

1721. 8 Geo. I.

Bill of Charges. In the mean Time Mr. Lutterell going up another Pair of Stairs, to fetch the Money, (as 'tis preſumed) and leaving Reaſon in the Dining-Room, came down Stairs again with a Brace of loaded Piſtols in his Breaſt; but, upon his Maid's Perſuaſion, laid them down on the Table, and ſaid, he deſigned no Hurt: However, Tranter returning again, there were high Words between the Deceaſed and the Bailiffs; and the Deceaſed threatened them, and ſtruck one of them with his Cane; whereupon Tranter ran the Deceaſed againſt the Wainſcot, and Reaſon ſtabbed him. They alſo got Poſſeſſion of his Piſtols, and ſhot him; and throwing him down upon the Floor, gave him nine or ten Wounds afterwards, with his own and Reaſon's Sword: Whereupon a Cry of Murder was made, and People came in and apprehended the Bailiffs; one of whom was wounded in the Arm with a Brace of Balls, and they had ſome other ſlight Wounds about them.

Mr. Lutterell living ſome Hours after this Rencounter, declared before Mr. Peters, who adminiſtered the Sacrament to him, and others, as he lay a dying, that the Bailiffs took the Piſtols from his Table, and fired both of them: That the fat Man drew his Sword, and ran him through the Body, and then drew his (Lutterell's) Sword, which he (Lutterell) broke in the Bailiff's Hand, and begged for Life: That he (Lutterell) neither fired a Piſtol, or made one Puſh: That they both ran him through, though he offered to pay them the Money: But, he ſaid, they had given him abuſive Language, which induced him to ſtrike one of them; and upon that, they immediately ſeized him, tumbled him down, and ſtabbed him: That he begged them to ſpare his Life; but one of them ſaid, Damn him, draw his Sword, and ſtab him.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, obſerved, That the Priſoners had been ſo civil on the Arreſt, as to carry Mr. Lutterell to his own Lodging; a Circumſtance, he confeſſed, that made ſome Impreſſion on him: It was what Bailiffs were not bound to do; they were uſually rough, and not eaſy to be entreated, unleſs well paid for it: They were too favourable in truſting him in his own Lodging; and it was ſtill a greater Piece of Civility, the ſending Tranter for the Attorney's Bill, and ſtaying alone with him; Mr. Lutterell might have ſent his own Servant. This was extreme civil Uſage, and was not often done by Men of their Character: Nay, Reaſon ſuffers him to go up Stairs into another Room, when his Partner was gone: This ſhews exceſſive Favour to their Priſoner, which they could not in Strictneſs juſtify: And Mr. Lutterell's bringing down a Brace of Piſtols, ſeemed to be an untoward Return for their Civility. Indeed, the Maid Servant depoſed, That he ſaid he had no Malice towards them, and would not hurt a Hair of their Heads; he only brought down the Piſtols that he might not be impoſed upon: But he did not know what he meant, when he was in Cuſtody of the Officers, and had been ſo civilly uſed, to bring down a Caſe of Piſtols, to prevent his being ill uſed. It ſeems as if he intended to affright the Officers, that they ſhould not carry him away. It was the Duty of the Bailiffs to carry him off, and he brought down the Piſtols to prevent that; and he owned that he gave one of the Bailiffs a Blow on the Head with his Stick; and the Bailiffs ſay, in their Juſtification, that the Aſſault began on his Side. It was ſtrange that Tranter, immediately after he came back, ſhould run him againſt the Wainſcot, and Reaſon aſſault him with a Sword, without a Provocation: This Behaviour was not of a Piece with the other. He thought it appeared by the Evidence, beyond Contradiction, that the Piſtols were brought down with a Deſign to prevent his being carried off, and that he did give one of the Bailiffs a Blow with a Stick. Upon the whole, he thought it was plain that the Priſoners at the Bar did kill Mr. Lutterell; that when Tranter had him againſt the Wall, Reaſon ſtabbed him; and when he was lying upon the Floor, Reaſon ſtabbed him: And it appeared by another Evidence, that Reaſon, the fat Man, ſhot off a Piſtol; ſo that he made no doubt but the Priſoners at the Bar did give Mr. Lutterell thoſe Wounds of which he died: The Surgeons had depoſed, that there were eight or nine Wounds with a Sword, one of them mortal; and a Wound with a Bullet that was mortal.

Then the Queſtion was, Whether, upon this Evidence, the Defendants were guilty of Felony? and if guilty, then in what Degree, whether Murder or Manſlaughter?

Bailiffs were Miniſters of Juſtice, armed with the Authority of the Law; and thoſe who reſiſted a Bailiff in the Execution of his Office, reſiſted the Law; and in executing their Warrants, and doing what was neceſſary for that Purpoſe, for the obtaining their Priſoner, or for the Security of their own Perſons, if Death enſued, the Bailiffs having the Authority of the Law on their Side, it was not ſo much as Felony: And it was neceſſary it ſhould be ſo; for without it, all their Properties would be precarious.

Here is Mr. Lutterell under an Arreſt, fetches down his Piſtols to prevent his being carried off, and threatens the Bailiffs: He doubted his Threatening muſt have Reference, that he threatened to diſcharge his Piſtols, or draw his Sword upon them; and he did not only threaten them, but gave one of them a Blow with his Cane; whereupon Tranter runs him up againſt the Wall, and Reaſon ſtabs him. Now, when Piſtols are brought down, Threatenings uſed, and a Blow given, the Officers are not to ſtand ſtill till they are murdered: They could not tell what Mr. Lutterell's Intention was; as he had made an Appearance of Reſiſtance, and had made an Aſſault, the Jury were to conſider, whether this was not a neceſſary Defence of the Officers to ſecure their Priſoner. The Maid ſaid, indeed, when the Piſtols were brought down, at her Perſuaſion, her Maſter laid them on the Table, which was an Indication that no ill Uſe was to be made of them; and it did not appear whether one or both of them were in Mr. Lutterell's Reach: But then it appeared (I don't ſee where) that notwithſtanding the running him againſt the Wall, he had, in ſome meaſure, reſcued himſelf from that Force; and there was ſtruggling and throwing down, which ſhewed that he was not ſo in the Power of the Bailiffs, that they could be ſecure of preſerving their Priſoner, ſoner, or their own Lives: That it muſt be left to the Jury, whether they believed Mr. Lutterell had a Deſign to reſcue himſelf; and if they thought the Bailiffs had a juſt Provocation, and were apprehenſive of loſing their Priſoner, the Law allowed them to do what was neceſſary for their own Security, and the Security of their Priſoner; but if they thought this was done out of Heat and Paſſion by the Bailiffs, when there was no juſt Cauſe to apprehend the Priſoner's being reſcued; then they were guilty of Felony. He confeſſed it looked barbarous, that when a Man was in his Blood upon the Ground, they ſhould follow their Blows, giving him more Wounds: This was carrying the Thing a great Way, and looked like Barbarity. But if Mr. Lutterell gave the firſt Provocation, whatever happened afterwards, if done for the Security of their own Lives, and of their Priſoner, would not make them guilty of Felony.

1721. 8 Geo. I.

It appeared, that Mr. Lutterell had given a Blow: Men of Honour were not to juſtify themſelves, by ſaying, ſaucy Language was given them; and thereby they would be their own Avengers: That to make it Murder in the Bailiffs, it muſt appear to be done maliciouſly, and without Provocation: That Blows had always been allowed to be Provocations; and, in this Caſe, it was accompanied with fetching down Piſtols, and threatening the Bailiffs what he would do: And, if ſo, the Bailiffs would not be guilty of Murder, but Manſlaughter: That they were to aſſert the Authority of the Bailiffs; but then they muſt not incourage the Bailiffs, on a few angry Words, immediately to fall into a Paſſion, and take away the Life of a Man. It appeared that a Blow had been given under untoward Circumſtances, after the Bailiffs had been threatned with a Deſign to prevent his being carried off by them; and, if ſo, the moſt they could make it, would be Manſlaughter.

1721. 8 Geo. I.

Then the Jury withdrew, and returning into Court an Hour afterwards, gave their Verdict that the Priſoners were guilty of Manſlaughter: Whereupon they prayed the Benefit of their Clergy, and were immediately burnt in the Hand, and diſcharged.

Convicted of Manſlaughter, and burnt in the Hand.

Woodburne and Coke their Trial.

The Trial of JOHN WOODBURNE Labourer, and ARUNDEL COKE Eſq; upon the Statute of Maiming, (made the 22d of Car. II.) at the Aſſizes held at St. Edmundsbury for the County of Suffolk, on the 13th of March, 1721. 8 Geo. I.

1721. 8 Geo. I.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged, that the Priſoners Woodburne and Coke, on the firſt of January, in the eighth Year of the King, at St. Edmundsbury aforeſaid, on Purpoſe, and of Malice afore-thought, and by lying in wait, did felonioufly make an Aſſault on Edward Criſpe, of the ſame Town, Gent. and that the ſaid John Woodburne, with a Bill he then held in his Right Hand, did felonioufly ſlit the Noſe of the ſaid Edward Criſpe, with an Intent to diſfigure him; and that the ſaid Arundel Coke was preſent at the ſame Time, aiding and abetting the ſaid John Woodburne to commit the ſaid Felony; againſt the King's Peace, &c.

The Caſe.

The Caſe was this: Criſpe was poſſeſſed of an Eſtate of 300 l. per Annum, and having three Siſters, Coke the Priſoner married one of them; and, as Mr. Criſpe had no Children, Coke, in Right of his Wife, would have been entitled to a third Part of Mr. Criſpe's real Eſtate on his Death: But being too impatient to wait for Criſpe's Death in the natural Way, he tampered with ſeveral poor People to murder Criſpe, for certain Rewards he offered them; and at length prevailed on the Priſoner Woodburne, after much Importunity, and a Promiſe of twenty Pounds Reward, to undertake it. This Woodburne was a labouring Man, who had ten Children, and was very poor; and working ſometimes for Coke, had been relieved in his Neceſſity by him, and ſcarce knew how to deny any thing he put him upon.

Woodburne no ſooner conſented to commit the Murder, but Coke invited Criſpe to Supper with him, on New-Year's-Day, 1721-2; and his Houſe being near the Church-Yard in Bury, he ordered Woodburne to wait for him, in the Porch of a Houſe that ſtood in the Church-Yard, at eight in the Evening, and to ſtay there till he came to him. Criſpe, on his Brother Coke's Invitation, came to ſup with him, on New-Year's-Day in the Evening; as did alſo Mr. Brown, who had married Coke's Siſter: Coke before Supper, propoſed to Mr. Criſpe the going to ſee one Mrs. Fanny Monke, who lived in the Church-Yard; but he did not ſeem inclined to go then: Whereupon Coke went out by himſelf; and meeting Woodburne in the Church-Yard, who had prepared his Wood-Bill, in order to commit the Fact, Coke told him, that Criſpe was very merry, and he believed it would be late before he came out; but the later the better, and bid Woodburne continue there till they came out——After Supper, about Ten o'Clock, Coke called Criſpe out of his Parlour; and they went together into the Church-Yard, it being very dark; and having taken two or three Turns before the Houſe of Mrs. Monke, already mentioned, Coke ſtood ſtill, and hallowed, and immediately Woodburne came up to them, and ſtruck Criſpe on the Face with his Bill; and giving him four or five Strokes more, he fell down in a Swoon, and Coke and Woodburne left him there for dead. Coke returned out of Breath to his own Houſe; and and being asked by Mr. Brown, what was become of Criſpe, he ſaid, he believed he was gone Home: But they had not ſat above a quarter of an Hour, before Criſpe, who had recovered out of his Swoon, came in with almoſt all his Fleſh cut off his Face, and his Cheeks hanging down upon his Breaſt, to the great Surprize of the Family.

The Fact confeſſed.

The Priſoners confeſſing the whole Charge, there is no Occaſion to repeat the Evidence.

Their Defence.

Their principal Defence was, That they did not intend to ſlit Criſpe's Noſe, but to kill him; and if they had no Intention to ſlit his Noſe, it was not Felony by the aboveſaid Statute.

To which Mr. Serjeant Selby, who was Counſel for the King at this Trial, anſwered, That they could not intend to kill Mr. Criſpe with ſuch an Inſtrument as a Wood-bill, without intending to maim him firſt: And where there were two Intentions, and but one executed, there was no Pretence to ſay, that what was executed, was not intended.

The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, obſerved, That the Queſtion on this Indictment, was, Whether John Woodburne, did, on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully ſlit the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, with an Intention to maim or diſfigure him therein? And whether Arundel Coke was felonioufly preſent at the Fact, aiding and abetting Woodburne in the Commiſſion and Perpetration of it?

That Woodburne, in his Defence, did not deny the aſſaulting and wounding of Mr. Criſpe; but inſiſted, That what he had done, was by the Solicitation and Procurement of Mr. Coke; which was no Juſtification or Excuſe: For no Man was to obey the unlawful Commands, or hearken to the illegal Advices, of any other Perſon whatſoever. That the Defence Coke had made, which would ſerve alſo for Woodburne, was, That they intended to murder, and not to maim; and, if they did maim, it was with an Intention to kill, and not to diſfigure.

And the Intent of the Party was to be diſcovered by the Facts themſelves; by the precedent, concomitant, and ſubſequent Circumſtances of the Facts; by the Manner of doing, and the like.

There were ſome Caſes, where an unlawful or felonious Intent to do one Act, might be carried over to another Act, done in Proſecution thereof; and ſuch other Act would be Felony, becauſe done in Proſecution of an unlawful or felonious Intent: As, where a Man ſhoots at a wild Fowl, wherein no Man had a Property, and by ſhooting happens unawares to kill a Man; this Homicide was not Felony, but only Miſadventure, or Chance-Medley; becauſe it was an Accident that happened in the doing of a lawful Act: But if this Man had ſhot at a tame Fowl, wherein another Man had Property, but not with Intention to ſteal it, and, by ſuch ſhooting, had accidentally killed a Man, he would then have been guilty of Manſlaughter, becauſe done in Proſecution of an unlawful Action, viz. committing a Treſpaſs on another Man's Property: But if he had an Intention to ſteal this tame Fowl, then ſuch accidental killing of a Man would have been Murder, becauſe done in Proſecution of a felonious Intent, viz. an Intent to ſteal: So a Man of Malice intends to burn one Houſe, and, in Execution thereof, happens to burn another Houſe; this is a malicious and felonious burning of this other Houſe, becauſe ſprung out of a malicious and felonious Intent: The like might be inſtanced, where Poiſon was intended to be given to one Perſon, and another takes it, and eats it, and thereby dies. And there were other Caſes of the like Nature, where Acts done in Proſecution of felonious Intents, participate of the Nature of their Original, from whence they ſpring.

1721. 8 Geo. I.

That the Indictment on this Statute, was for a certain particular Intent; for purpoſely, maliciouſly, and by lying in wait, ſlitting Mr. Criſpe's Noſe, with an Intention, in ſo doing, to maim or diſfigure. As to the Fact of ſlitting the Noſe, that was directly or poſitively ſworn; there could be no Doubt but it was an unlawful Slitting: But the Defence the Priſoners made, was, That if they did ſlit the Noſe, it was with an Intention to kill, and not with an Intention to maim or diſfigure. Now, if the Intention was to murder, they were to conſider, whether the Means made uſe of to accompliſh that Murder, and the Conſequences of thoſe Means, were not in the Intention and Deſign of the Party? And whether every Blow and Cut, and the Conſequences thereof, were not intended, as well as the End for which it was alledged thoſe Blows and Cuts were given?

And if they were ſatisfied on the Whole, that Woodburne did, on Purpoſe, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully ſlit the Noſe of Edward Criſpe, with an Intention, in ſo doing, to maim or diſfigure; and that Arundel Coke was felonioufly preſent at the Commiſſion of this Fact, and aiding and abetting therein, they would find them guilty: But if this was not found to their Satisfaction, they were to acquit them.

Here Coke objected, That the Noſe could not be ſaid to be ſlit, within the Meaning of the Statute, becauſe the Edge of it was not cut through.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, It was true, the Edge of the Noſe was not ſlit; but the Cut was croſs the Noſe, which ſeparated the Fleſh of the Noſe, and cut it quite through into the Noſtril; which he took to be a Slitting the Noſe within the Meaning of the Act.

The Priſoners convicted.

The Jury being withdrawn about half an Hour, brought the Priſoners in GUILTY. And the Priſoners were called to receive Sentence on the 14th of March: When Coke inſiſted, in Arreſt of Judgment, That it was a very penal Statute they were indicted upon, and ought not to be carried beyond the expreſs Letter of it: That all the Circumſtances deſcribed in the Statute, muſt concur, to conſtitute the Crime: And here the Intention to maim and diſfigure, was not proved: Nor was it any Objection, to ſay, That the Crime which was proved, was much worſe than that which was deſcribed by the Statute; for if it was worſe, it could not be the ſame.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He did agree, that if any of the Circumſtances preſcribed by the Statute were wanting, then his Caſe was out of the Statute: But whether all the Circumſtances required by the Statute, did not concur in this Caſe, was a Matter of Fact, which the Jury, who were proper Judges of it, had tried, and found them all to concur.

1721. 8 Geo. I.

Then he claimed the Benefit of the Pardon, offered in the Gazette, to any one that ſhould diſcover the Aſſaſſins: But was told, Such a Promiſe could not be pleaded in Arreſt of Judgment, if he was entitled to the Benefit of it; and thereupon Sentence of Death was pronounced; and they were both executed at St. Edmondsbury, on Saturday the 31ſt of March, 1722. and executed.

Layer's Trial.

The Trial of CHRISTOPHER LAYER Eſq; for High-Treaſon, at the King's-Bench Bar, in Michaelmas-Term, 1722. 9 Geo. I.

1722. 9 Geo. I.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment was found by an Eſſex Grand Jury, and charged the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer with High Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King: And the Overt-Acts laid to prove the ſaid Treaſon, were, 1. That the ſaid Chriſtopher Layer, with divers other falſe Traitors, did, on the 25th of Auguſt, in the ninth Year of the King; and at divers other Times before and after, at Layton-Stone, in the ſaid County of Eſſex, conſult and agree to raiſe a Rebellion, and levy War againſt the King. 2. That he did publiſh, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, a certain treaſonable Libel; purporting, among other Things, a Promiſe of Rewards to his Majeſty's Subjects, to incite them to riſe in Arms againſt the King. 3. That he conſulted and agreed to depoſe his Majeſty, and place the Pretender on the Throne. 4. That he liſted Soldiers for the Pretender. 5. And, laſtly, That he conſulted and agreed with the ſaid other falſe Traitors, to ſeize and impriſon the King.

Lynch's Evidence.

The principal Witneſs againſt Mr. Layer was Mr. Stephen Lynch, who had ſerved in the Army abroad: He teſtified, That he came over from Flanders in April laſt; and was introduced to Mr. Layer in June, as a Perſon fit to be entruſted in a daring and hazardous Enterprize: And Mr. Layer expreſſing an entire Satisfaction in him, propoſed to him the engaging in an Inſurrection in Favour of the Pretender; and told him, that ſeveral of the Army and the Guards, and ſome Noblemen and Gentlemen, would back and ſupport them in it: That he alſo propoſed to the Witneſs the commanding a Party, to ſeize the Lord Cadogan the General: And depoſed, that they actually went together, to view the Avenues to the Lord Cadogan's Houſe: And that the Priſoner aſſured the Witneſs, there was a great Man who did not want Courage, Wit, or Reſolution, that would have the Direction of the Enterprize, and give him his Orders at a proper Time: And that he would preſent him (the Witneſs) to that great Man: That he had ſeveral Meetings with the Priſoner at his Lodgings in Chancery-Lane, and at the Taverns thereabouts; and their Converſation conſtantly ran upon the Feaſibleneſs of bringing about another Revolution; and on the general Diſaffection of the People: That the Witneſs expreſſing his Uneaſineſs, that the Affair was delayed ſo long; and intimating, that he ſhould be obliged to go beyond Sea again for Want of Money, the Priſoner, gave him at ſeveral Times, eight or ten Guineas; and informed him, they intended to begin the Inſurrrection at the breaking up of the Camp in Hyde-Park: And that the Tower would be ſeized, and put into their Hands by an Officer of the Guards, who had contrived to mount that Guard at the Time of the Inſurrection, on Purpoſe to facilitate the Attempt: That he met the Priſoner afterwards at a Tavern, with a Perſon he took to be a Serjeant of the Guards by his Habit; and they all drank Succeſs to the Enterprize.

Lynch further teſtified, That on the Day the Biſhop of Rocheſter was apprehended, the Priſoner asked him to ride out with him to take the Air, and accordingly they rode out together, about Eleven o'Clock the next Day, through Whitechapel into Eſſex, and upon the Road the Priſoner ſaid, they would go to the Lord North and Grey's, to whom he would recommend the Witneſs as his Friend; but coming to the Green Man at Layton-Stone, he ſaid they had better dine there, becauſe Dinner would be over before they could get to my Lord North and Grey's; and while a Beef-Steak was getting ready, they diſcourſed of the Uneaſineſs of the Nation, of the Inclination of the People to another Revolution, and how to bring it about; and the Priſoner ſhewed him the latter Part of a written Paper, wherein the People were incited to riſe, and ſhake off the Oppreſſions they ſuffered under the preſent Adminiſtration; and three Guineas were offered to every Horſeman and Serjeant, two Guineas to every Corporal, and one Guinea to every private Soldier in the Army, to invite them to revolt, with Promiſes of Preferment; and the Earl of Cadogan was mentioned as in Cuſtody, to induce People to join them: That the Priſoner talked of the Declaration as of his own Compoſing, and he believed it was his Writing; but there were ſeveral Interlineations, and ſeveral Words daſhed: And the Priſoner ſaid, He wiſhed Matters might be ordered ſo, that the Witneſs might have the ſeizing of ſome Miniſters of State, mentioning the Lords Townſhend and Carteret, and Mr. Walpole; and added, When the Deſign was put in Execution the Army would declare in their Favour, and they would ſend a ſtrong Guard to ſecure the King from any Inſult.—That when the Witneſs ſhewed his Uneaſineſs at the Delay, the Priſoner ſaid, if he could propoſe any Thing more proper, he ſhould do it: That having ſtaid near an Hour at the Green Man, they rode to the Lord North and Grey's, where the Priſoner introduced him to his Lordſhip as his Friend: They lay there, and came away after Dinner the next Day; and Mr. Layer told told the Witneſs, that he had recommended him to his Lordſhip as his particular Friend.——That he went afterwards to the Lord North and Grey's, where he met Mr. Layer, and telling him, he was afraid their Hopes were defeated, he bid him not be uneaſy, but prepare to execute the Deſign at the breaking up of the Camp; and at another Time ſaid, Rather than all ſhould fail, he would riſe, and be a ſecond Maſſinello.

Plunkett's Evidence.

Matthew Plunkett, an old Serjeant of the Guards, teſtified, That Mr. Layer, the Priſoner, gave him Money to liſt Men for the Pretender, and that he told him he had twenty-five Men ready to ſerve him; and actually brought one Child to Mr. Layer, who gave the Witneſs half a Guinea to give Child to be a Pretender's Man, to whom Mr. Layer gave the Title of King.——That Mr. Layer, in Diſcourſe with him (the Witneſs) aſked him, if he knew any Serjeants of the Guards, and ſaid, he wanted ſuch old Soldiers as he was, to diſcipline the Mob; told him the Nation was enſlaved, and the Soldiers had great Injuſtice done them, having unexperienced Men put over their Heads, though they had ſerved abroad. And when the Witneſs aſked who promoted the Inſurrection, the Priſoner mentioned Lord North and Grey, Lord Strafford, General Primroſe, and General Webb; and ſaid, thoſe who did their King and Country Service on this Occaſion, would be for ever taken care of, and preferred; and added, that there were Dutch Forces brought in to take away their Rights and Liberties; they muſt keep a Dutch Army, to make War upon themſelves.

Layer's Papers produced in Evidence againſt him.

Then a Parcel of Papers was produced in Court, which one Mrs. Maſon teſtified the Priſoner left with her, to be kept carefully, and were ſeized by the Meſſengers in her Lodgings; among which one was read, which the King's Counſel denominated, The Scheme for the Inſurrection, being of the following Tenor, (viz).

1. Let the General and only one Officer of Note in the Camp agree upon a Day of Execution.

2. Let the Officer that Day put himſelf on the Tower Guard.

3. As there are eight Serjeants, (viz.) three of the firſt Regiment of Foot-Guards, three of the Second, and two of the Third, all ready to obey Orders: early that Morn, let the Officer ſee a ſingle Perſon, namely George Wilſon, who manages theſe Serjeants, and give him Directions to bring them all to ſome convenient Place, at Four in the Afternoon.

4. Then the Officer muſt give each Serjeant Money ſufficient for the Purpoſe, and direct 'em, that each Serjeant order twenty-five Men (making together two hundred, which they have ready) to go ſingly out of the Camp, and meet together at —— Church-Yard, exactly half an Hour paſt Eight in the Evening; when and where another Officer, that they know, muſt meet 'em, and take the Command; give 'em Muſkets ready loaded, and march with them in a Body to the Tower-Gate, at Nine that Night exactly.

5. Our Friend, the Officer within, muſt, preciſely at that Hour of Nine, be on the Guard at the Tower-Gate; and ſeeing this Body of Men appear, order the Garriſon to let 'em in, as a Recruit ſent to the Tower-Guard.

1722. 9 Geo. I.

6. As ſoon as ever they have entered to ſeize the Arms at the Tower-Gate, ſhut the Gate up, and ſecure every one in the Tower that the Officer on Guard gives them Orders to ſecure; but not ſhed any Blood.

7. The Tower being thus ſeized, to leave only a ſmall Guard there, under that Officer who lets 'em in; and then, with all thoſe that join you, march directly to the Exchange, where the great Doors muſt be ready opened, and the General there in Perſon.

8. At the exact Hour of Nine, that the Tower ſhall be thus ſeized, the Perſons of ſome great Men to be arreſted at their Houſes, brought directly into the City, and delivered to the General.

9. That upon our Meeting at the Exchange, the annexed Proclamation to be ſpread about; the Gates of the City to be ſhut up, and Pieces of Cannon brought down againſt 'em; but every Man that deſires to enter the Gates, before any regular Force appear, to be admitted to come in; and after the General has appointed a Guard at each Gate and Inlet of the City, with proper Officers to command there, let him march back to Tower-Hill for a Place of general Rendezvous, under the Cannon of the Tower, and order the Lord Mayor a good Guard to watch over the Bank; but firſt take Money from thence to the Tower, in order to pay the Men.

10. The Artillery in the Camp to be ſeized.

11. The King to be ſecured, and ſent to the Tower.

12. Horſe Officers, their Friends in the Camp, to march into the City.

13---18. Four Half-pay Captains to command each a Party; one in Southwark, the Second in the Privy-Garden, the Third in St. James's Park, and the Fourth in Tothill-Fields.

19. A Captain to lead the Watermen.

20. Orders to be ſent to their Adherents in the Country to riſe.

21. An Officer to go to Richmond to ſeize Prince Pretty-Man.

Then one of the Pretender's Receipts was read, which was found among the ſaid Papers, and ſaid to be uſed for taking up Money for this Enterprize, being as follows:

I Acknowledge to have received from the Sum of which Sum I promiſe to repay, with an Intereſt for it, at the Rate of per Ann.

Mr. Stanyan's Evidence.

Mr. Stanyan, one of the Clerks of the Council, teſtified, That when the Lords of the Council aſked Mr. Layer the Meaning of theſe Receipts ſigned by the Pretender, and what Uſe he made of them; he ſaid, that during the Time he was at Rome, he had ſettled a Correſpondence with Sir William Ellys, according to the Directions he gave him; and he told him, if he could ſend any Receipts, ſigned by his Majeſty, or the King, as he called him, he thought Money might be raiſed upon them for carrying on the Cauſe.

Mr. Delafaye's Evidence.

Mr. Delafaye teſtified, That Mr. Layer confeſſed before the Council, that he received ſuch Receipts from Sir William Ellys, and that he intended to have tried his Friends, and to have raiſed raiſed Money on thoſe Receipts; and that they had a Precedent for it a little before the Reſtoration, when ſuch Receipts were given by King Charles II.

1722. 9 Geo. I.

Letters, &c. read in Evidence.

Then ſeveral Letters that paſſed between Sir William Ellys and Mr. Layer, found in the ſame Parcel, were read; whereby it appeared there was a Correſpondence between Mr. Layer and the Pretender's Court at Rome; and in one of them a Deſign of engaging ſome Soldiers of the Army in their Intereſt is mentioned, if the Letters that were written in Cypher were rightly interpreted.

Then ſome Liſts were read of the Officers of the Guards, and the Number of Men and Horſes under their Command, and Liſts of the Officers in the Tower.

Further Evidence of the Priſoner's Confeſſion.

After which Mr. Stanyan teſtified further, That Mr. Layer confeſſed before the Council, that he went with Mr. Lynch to the Lord North and Grey's; and that they dined at the Green-Man at Layton-ſtone as they went: That he recommended Lynch to the Lord North and Grey, as a proper Perſon to be employed in the Inſurrection; and that, Lynch having told Layer before, that he would ſeize Lord Cadogan, Layer mentioned Lynch to his Lordſhip, as a proper Perſon for ſuch an Undertaking; and that they drank at the Lord North and Grey's the Healths of the Pretender, his Wife, and the young Prince.

Mr. Stanyan and Mr. Delafaye alſo teſtified, That Mr. Layer confeſſed before the Council, That he had been at Rome; that he had had two Conferences with the Pretender; that he had acquainted him with the Diſaffection of the Nation, on Account of the Loſſes that had been ſuſtained by the South-Sea. He ſaid, in general, the Nation was well-affected towards him; and that he knew Perſons of Eſtate, not Quality, that were in his Intereſt. Then he propoſed to have Credentials, or Tokens, of the Pretender's Regard to him; which was not granted him. Then he deſired the Pretender's Spouſe ſhould ſtand Godmother to his Child: The Pretender ſaid, he would conſider of it; and Colonel Hay brought Mr. Layer Word that ſhe conſented; and it was agreed, the Dutcheſs of Ormonde ſhould repreſent her. And Layer deſired to know who was to be the Godfather: To which it was anſwered, the King himſelf, meaning the Pretender. Layer then deſired to know who ſhould repreſent him; and it was ſaid, Layer would find one, when he came to England proper for the Purpoſe. That when he came to England, he went to Mr. Thompſon, to adviſe with him about it, who went to my Lord Orrery, to deſire him to ſtand as Proxy for the Pretender: My Lord Orrery declined it; then he went to my Lord North and Grey, who accepted it. The Child was chriſtened at Chelſea; my Lord North and Grey ſtood for the Pretender, and the Dutcheſs of Ormonde for the Pretender's Wife.

That Mr. Layer alſo confeſſed before the Council, that he recommended Mr. Lynch to the Lord North and Grey, as a proper Perſon to ſeize the Lord Cadogan.

Mr. Stanyan added, That when Mr. Layer was ſeized, they found in his Bed-chamber two Pair of Piſtols, two Carbines and two Blunderbuſſes, forty or fifty Cartridges, Moulds for making of Bullets, and three or four Swords.

1722. 9 Geo. I.

The Priſoner's Defence by his Counſel.

In the Priſoner's Defence his Counſel inſiſted, That there ought to have been two Witneſſes to prove the Overt-Act that was laid in the County of Eſſex, (viz.) The Publiſhing the Declaration at the Green Man; and that the giving Lynch a Piece of Paper to read, could not be deemed the publiſhing a Declaration, or a treaſonable Act.

Then they inſiſted on the Improbability of the Priſoner's entering into a treaſonable Converſation with Lynch and Plunkett, with whom he had little or no Acquaintance.——They obſerved alſo, That the Scheme itſelf ſeemed rather a chimerical Plan of ſome crazy Politicians, than a Project of Men of Senſe: That there was no Forces raiſed to put this Project in Execution, or any Sums advanced by Layer, or any other Perſon, proportionable to the carrying on ſuch a Deſign: That the Papers produced againſt him were none of his Hand; and the Arms found in his Houſe-writing were no more than any Gentleman might keep, for the Defence of his Family, or his Recreations; and his being at Rome with the Pretender, though that was made High-Treaſon, was no Evidence of the Treaſon laid in the Indictment.

Witneſſes againſt the Credit of the King's Witneſſes.

Then the Defendant called his Witneſſes, who teſtified that Mr. Lynch was a Perſon of very indifferent Reputation; and ſeveral of them ſaid he had a vile infamous Character.

Abundance of Witneſſes gave Plunkett the like Character.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, That Mrs. Maſon, who pretended to have the Cuſtody of the Priſoner's Papers, was a lewd Woman, a Thief, and a Cheat, and had been in Bridewell; from whence the Priſoner inferred, that none of them deſerved any Credit.

Reply of the King's Counſel.

The King's Counſel, in their Reply to the Priſoner, inſiſted, that one Witneſs of one Overt-Act in the County where the Indictment was laid, and another Witneſs of another Overt-Act, of the ſame Species of Treaſon, in another County, were ſufficient to convict him: That the Paper the Priſoner communicated to Lynch was certainly a treaſonable Paper, and his ſhewing it to him at the Green Man, was a ſufficient Publication; and that there was a treaſonable Conference alſo proved between the Priſoner and Lynch at the Green-Man; which was another Overt-Act of the Treaſon in Eſſex.

That as to the Improbability of his talking Treaſon with Lynch, or Plunkett, on ſo ſhort an Acquaintance; it was evident, he had been very familiar with them: And where a Fact was poſitively ſworn, Improbabilities were of little Weight; they were only conſidered where a Matter was doubtful.

That though the Scheme had been repreſented as ridiculous and improbable; if the ſeveral Articles were compared together, they would be found conſiſtent: Every Quarter of the Town was provided for, Diſpoſitions made of certain Numbers of Men, and Care taken to preſerve their Commmunication; and it was framed by the Conſpirators, upon the Computation of a Force, of which they thought themſelves aſſured. It was plain they had a Dependance, however ill-founded, upon the Diſcontents raiſed in the the Minds of the People, and on corrupting great Numbers in the Army, and had Hopes of receiving foreign Aſſiſtance: That the Priſoner had called ſcarce any Witneſs to contradict the Facts proved by the King's Evidence, but only to the Character and Credit of the Witneſſes; and it was not to be expected that Conſpiracies of this kind ſhould be proved by Perſons of the beſt Characters; and to ſay that ſuch Witneſſes are not to be believed, was in Effect to ſay, that no Evidence of a Plot was to be believed: But whatever their Characters were, their Evidence was abundantly confirmed by the Priſoner's Witneſſes themſelves, and by his own Papers, found in Maſon's Cuſtody; and laſtly, by the Priſoner's own Confeſſion before the Council.

After which, the King's Counſel produced Witneſſes, to ſupport the Teſtimony of thoſe who had given Evidence againſt the Priſoner, and to clear up their Characters.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, informed them, that the Points of Law were as the King's Counſel had ſtated them, and appeared entirely ſatisfied with the Evidence: Whereupon the Jury, after a Receſs of half an Hour, brought the Priſoner in GUILTY.

The Priſoner convicted.

The Priſoner afterwards moved in Arreſt of Judgment, that there was no Overt-Act of Treaſon found in Eſſex; but the whole Bench were of Opinion, that the conſulting and agreeing to levy War, which was one of the Facts proved at the Green Man, was an Overt-Act of compaſſing the King's Death.

Exceptions in Arreſt of Judgment.

Then the Priſoner's Counſel objected, That the treaſonable Words in the Declaration ought to have been recited in the Indictment; and cited the Opinion of all the Judges for it in Dr. Sacheverell's Caſe: But the Court anſwered, it was ſufficient to ſet forth the Subſtance, as had been ruled in Francia's Caſe; and Mr Juſtice Eyre ſaid, It was indeed the Opinion of the Judges, at Dr. Sacheverell's Trial, that the particular Words ſuppoſed to be criminal, ought to be expreſsly ſpecified in every Indictment; and I can't forbear ſaying, That it was a great Surprize to Weſtminſter-Hall, and particularly to thoſe who attended this Court; for we had learned from my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, that a Libel might be deſcribed either by the Senſe and Subſtance, or by the particular Words; and that an Indictment, or Information, in either of theſe Forms, would be good. In the Books of Entries you will find ſeveral Inſtances where Slanders and Perjuries are charged in Latin as falſe and ſcandalous Aſſertions, and not in the Words ſpoke. In Stayley's Caſe, who was indicted for treaſonable Words, it was charged in the Indictment, that ſpeaking of the King, he had traitorouſly declared, Quod ipſe predictus Stayley ipſum Dominum Regem interficeret: And the Fact was, that Stayley in Converſation had ſpoke Words to this Effect in French, and this was thought ſufficient to convict him of High-Treaſon; and yet the particular Words ſuppoſed and adjudged to be Criminal, were not ſpecified in the Indictment; and I don't find that the ſpecifying the particular Words was ever held to be neceſſary, till this ſudden Opinion was given; and therefore I can't hear it urged as an Authority, without offering my Reaſons to the contrary.

Reſolved, That the obnoxious Words need not be laid in the Indictment.

The following Caſe alſo was put by Serjeant Pengelly, viz. ſuppoſe a Man ſhould proclaim the Pretender at Charing-Croſs, and read his Declaration, exciting the People to revolt; and this Declaration ſhould be carried off, ſo that it could not be recovered, and produced in Evidence, might not that Perſon be indicted for High-Treaſon, without ſetting forth the particular Words he read out of the Declaration?

To which the Priſoner's Counſel anſwered, He might: So that this grand Point of ſpecifying the very obnoxious Words in an Indictment was entirely given up at this Trial, and Sentence was paſſed on the Priſoner as a Traitor; but he was reprieved from Time to Time, till the 16th of May, 1723, and then executed at Tyburn, his Head ſet upon Temple-Bar, but his Body ſuffered to be interred by his Friends.

Sentence paſſed on the Priſoner. Reprived for half a Year, and then executed.

Biſhop of Rocheſter's Attainder.

The Attainder of FRANCIS Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, JOHN PLUNKETT, and GEORGE KELLY, for a Treaſonable Conſpiracy, in the Month of May, 1723. 9 Geo. I.

1723. 9 Geo. I.

IT being much too ſoon to make juſt Obſervations on theſe Attainders, I ſhall only take Notice, that ſome great Men having conceived an Opinion, that the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Mr. Plunket, and Mr. Kelly, were concerned with Mr. Layer in the Plot to bring in the Pretender; and finding that Layer would not become an Evidence againſt them, though he had been reprieved from Time to Time, for ſeveral Months, in Expectation of it, and they had no other legal Evidence againſt them, an Act of Parliament was paſſed on purpoſe to attaint them: Yet the Miniſtry, it ſeems, had ſo much Tenderneſs for the Biſhop, in regard of his high Station in the Church, and his inviolable Attachment to the Hanover Succeſſion, that they did not think fit to take the Forfeit of his Head, but were content to deprive him of his Preferments, and baniſh him: And Plunkett and Kelly being in the like Circumſtances, their Lives alſo were ſpared; and they were only doomed to perpetual Impriſonment.

1723. 9 Geo. I.

Preamble of the Act of Attainder.

The Preamble of the Act againſt the Biſhop of Rocheſter, is as follows:

Whereas in the Years 1721 and 1722, a deteſtable and horrid Conſpiracy was formed, and carried on by divers Traitors, for invading your Majeſty's Kingdoms with Foreign Forces; for raiſing an Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt your Majeſty; for ſeizing the Tower and City of London; and for laying violent Hands upon your Majeſty's moſt Sacred Perſon, and upon his Royal Highneſs the Prince of Wales, in order to ſubvert our preſent happy Eſtabliſhment in Church and State, by placing a Popiſh Pretender on your Throne: And whereas, for the better concealing and effecting the ſaid Conſpiracy, divers treaſonable Correſpondences were, within the Time aforeſaid, carried on by Letters written in Cyphers, cant Words, and fictitious Names; which Conſpiracy, had it not been diſappointed by the Goodneſs of Almighty God, would have deprived your Majeſty's Kingdoms of the Enjoyment of their Religion, Laws, and Liberties, involved them in Blood and Ruin, and ſubjected your People to the Bondage and Oppreſſion of Romiſh Superſtition and Arbitrary Power: For which execrable Treaſon Chriſtopher Layer hath been indicted, tried, convicted, and attainted: And whereas Francis Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, notwithſtanding the many ſolemn Aſſurances by him given of his Faith and Allegiance to your Majeſty, by taking the Oaths by Law appointed to be taken, inſtead of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; which Oaths he had likewiſe taken at ſundry Times, during the reſpective Reigns of their late Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, and of her late Majeſty Queen Anne; and notwithſtanding he had frequently abjured the Pretender, hath in direct Violation of his ſaid repeated Oaths and Obligations, and to the great Scandal of Religion and his holy Function, been deeply concerned in forming, directing, and carrying on the ſaid wicked and deteſtable Conſpiracy, and hath been a principal Actor therein, by traitorouſly conſulting and correſponding with divers Perſons to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt your Majeſty within this Kingdom, and to procure a Foreign Force to invade the ſame, in order to depoſe your Majeſty, and place the Pretender on your Throne; and by traitorouſly correſponding with the ſaid Pretender, and Perſons employed by him, knowing them to be ſo employed: Therefore, to manifeſt our juſt Abhorrence of ſo wicked and abominable a Conſpiracy, and our Zeal and tender Regard for the Preſervation of your Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and of the Proteſtant Succeſſion in your Majeſty's Royal Family, the ſolid Foundations of our preſent Happineſs and future Hopes; and to the End no Conſpirator may by any ſubtil Contrivance or Practice whatſoever eſcape Puniſhment; and that all others, may by the Juſtice of Parliament, be for ever hereafter deterred from engaging in any traitorous Conſpiracies or Attempts;

1723. 9 Geo. I.

Of what Uſe is the Act for regulating Trials in Caſes of Treaſon, which requires two Witneſſes?

It is enacted, That Francis Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, from and after the firſt Day of June, 1723, ſhall be deprived of all his Offices, Dignities, Promotions, and Benefices Eccleſiaſtical, as if he was naturally dead, and be diſabled to enjoy any Office, Dignity, Promotion, Benefice, or Employment whatſoever, and ſhall be for ever baniſhed his Majeſty's Dominions: And, if he be found in them after the 25th of June, 1723, he ſhall be adjudged guilty of Felony without Benefit of Clergy; as ſhall all Perſons who harbour or conceal him here.

All Perſons correſponding with the Biſhop without Licenſe, are alſo made guilty of Felony, without Benefit of Clergy.

And it was enacted by another Statute, That John Plunket ſhould be committed to ſome Jail, or Priſon, by one of the Secretaries of State, and there remain during his Majeſty's Pleaſure.

An Act of the like Tenor paſſed againſt George Kelly.

The Biſhop died in France 22 Feb. 1731-2; Kelly made his Eſcape out of the Tower October 25. 1736; and Plunkett ſtill remains a Priſoner there.

The

1734-4. 10 Geo. I. Arnold's Trial.

The Trial of EDWARD ARNOLD, for Felony, in Shooting at and Wounding Thomas Lord Onſlow, at the Aſſizes held at Kingſton for the County of Surry, on the 20th of March, 1723-4. 10 George I.

1723-4. 10 Geo. I.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment was founded on the Statute of 9 Geo. I. cap. 22. called The Black Act, and charges, that the Priſoner, Edward Arnold, of the Pariſh of St. Nicholas in Guilford, in the County of Surry, on the 28th of Auguſt, in the 10th Year of the King, at the Pariſh of St. Nicholas aforeſaid, made an Aſſault on Thomas Lord Onſlow, and felonioufly, and of his Malice aforethought, diſcharged a Gun at the ſaid Lord Onſlow, loaden with Shot, giving him thereby one grievous Wound in the Left Shoulder, of the Breadth of ſix Inches, and of the Depth of two Inches; againſt the King's Peace, and the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

The Caſe.

The Caſe was this: The Lord Onſlow, and ſome other Gentlemen, returning from a Fox Chaſe, through a narrow Lane, within half a Mile of Guilford, on the 28th of Auguſt, met the Priſoner with a Gun cocked in his Hand, as if he was about to ſhoot flying; and one of the Gentlemen demanding of him, why he held his Piece cocked in that Manner, he made no Anſwer, but ſullenly paſſing by his Lordſhip a few Yards, turned about on a ſudden, and ſhot him in the Shoulder; whereupon he dropped from his Horſe, and the Priſoner walked leiſurely away; but was followed, and taken by ſome of the Company.

The Fact confeſſed.

The Fact was manifeſtly proved; and indeed, neither the Priſoner, or his Friends, denied it:

The Defence.

All that his Friends inſiſted upon was, 1. That the Priſoner was a Lunatick, and out of his Senſes at certain Times. 2. That, if he was in his Senſes, it was not Felony, becauſe his Lordſhip recovered, and was not killed; and the Priſoner was not diſguiſed, as the Black Act mentions.

The Priſoner made no Defence himſelf; but gave ſuch Anſwers at his Trial as might be expected from a Madman; and his Relations produced a Multitude of Witneſſes to prove, that both his Words and Actions were at ſome Times very extravagant: But it appeared, that his Friends never thought him ſo diſordered in his Senſes as to reſtrain him of his Liberty, or to put him into the Hands of a Phyſician; or indeed, to take any of thoſe Methods of Cure as are uſually taken with Madmen, though they were People of good Subſtance, and very well able to have paid a Phyſician, if they had really believed him mad: And it was obſerved that he had never done any Miſchief before.

He ſeems to have been one of thoſe Creatures that are between a Madman and a Fool, and capable of being worked up to any Miſchief by others; and had he had any Tincture of Religion, he would have been called an Enthuſiaſt, or Religious Madman.

It was evident, from ſeveral of his Speeches, that ſome People he converſed with about the Time of the preceding Election for the County of Surry, had repreſented my Lord Onſlow as an Enemy to his Country, and the Occaſion of ſome Mal-Adminiſtration in the Government; and that he believed he ſhould do his Country good Service in deſtroying this Noble Lord; and thereupon formed a Deſign to aſſaſſinate him, endeavouring to have put it in Practice in the Manner above related.

Some Obſervations of his Counſel.

Mr. Hungerford inſiſted in the Priſoner's Defence, That admitting he committed the Fact, and was in his Senſes, he could not be guilty of Felony withing the Black Act, becauſe he was not in a Diſguiſe; for this was to be applied to every Fact mentioned in this Statute to make it Felony. If ſhooting at a Perſon without a Diſguiſe, would make a Man guilty of Felony, then, if two Men fought a Duel, and diſcharged their Piſtols at each other, they would both be guilty of Felony, though neither of them were killed.

That the Title of the Act was, For the more effectual puniſhing wicked and evil-diſpoſed Perſons going armed in DISGUISE, and doing Injuries and Violences to the Perſons and Properties of his Majeſty's Subjects: And the Preamble of the Act only mentioned the Miſchiefs done by ſuch People in DISGUISE. The Proclamation alſo, for putting the Act in Execution, ſuppoſes ſuch Perſons to be in Diſguiſe, to bring them within the Penalty of the Act.

The Opinion of the Court on the Black Act.

To this Mr. Juſtice Tracy, who tried the Cauſe, anſwered, Becauſe he knew this Cauſe would come before him, he had a Meeting with his Brethren, to have their Opinion in Relation to this Clauſe in the Act; viz. The making it Felony maliciouſly to ſhoot at any Perſon in any Dwelling-Houſe, or other Place; and every Judge was of Opinion, this was an entire Clauſe of itſelf, and it had no Relation to the former Clauſe, of being in Diſguiſe; and that he himſelf was of the ſame Opinion before, and was in no manner of Doubt concerning it, and only asked the Opinion of his Brethren for the Satisfaction of other People: Adding, that it was certain the Circumſtance of a Diſguiſe did not extend to the next Clauſe; viz. The ſending threatening Letters without a Name, and conſequently the Circumſtance of a Diſguiſe did not extend to every Offence mentioned in the Act.

Judge Tracy's Directions to the Jury.

Mr. Juſtice Tracy, in his Directions to the Jury, alſo ſaid, That the Act on which the Indictment was founded, was conformable to the antient Law, where, if a Man aſſaulted another, (with an Intent to kill him, as this Caſe was, I preſume, he means) though Death did not enſue, it was Felony, and concluded his Directions in this Manner:

Whether

1723-4. 10 Geo. I.

Whether the Priſoner's ſhooting at the Lord Onſlow was malicious, depends upon the Sanity of the Man: That he ſhot, and that willfully, is admitted; but whether maliciouſly is the Queſtion; Whether he had the right Uſe of his Reaſon and Senſe? If he was under the Viſitation of God, and could not diſtinguiſh between Good and Evil, and did not know what he did, though he committed the greateſt Offence, yet he could not be guilty of any Offence againſt any Law whatſoever; for Guilt ariſes from the Mind, and the wicked Will and Intention of the Man. If a Man be deprived of his Reaſon, and conſequently of his Intention, he cannot be guilty; and if that be the Caſe, though he had actually killed my Lord Onſlow, he is exempted from Puniſhment. Puniſhment is intended for Example, and to deter other Perſons from wicked Deſigns; but the Puniſhment of a Madman, a Perſon that hath no Deſign, can have no Example. This is on one Side: On the other Side we muſt be very cautious: It is not every frantick and idle Humour of a Man, that will exempt him from Juſtice, and the Puniſhment of the Law. When a Man is guilty of a great Offence, it muſt be very plain and clear, before a Man is allowed ſuch an Exemption: Therefore it is not every Kind of frantick Humour, or ſomething unaccountable in a Man's Actions, that points him out to be ſuch a Madman as is to be exempted from Puniſhment: It muſt be a Man that is totally deprived of his Underſtanding and Memory, and doth not know what he is doing, no more than an Infant, than a Brute, or a wild Beaſt; ſuch a one is never the Object of Puniſhment: Therefore I muſt leave it to your Conſideration, Whether the Condition this Man was in, as it is repreſented to you on one Side, or the other, doth ſhew a Man, who knew what he was doing, and was able to diſtinguiſh, whether he was doing Good or Evil, and underſtood what he did? And, it is to be obſerved, they admit he was a Lunatick, and not an Idiot: A Man that is an Idiot, that is born ſo, never recovers: But a Lunatick may, and hath his Intervals; and they admit he was a Lunatick. You are to conſider what he was at this Day, when he committed this Fact: There you have a great many Circumſtances about the buying the Powder and the Shot; his going backward and forward: And if you believe he was ſenſible, and had the Uſe of his Reaſon, and underſtood what he did, then he is not within the Exemptions of the Law, but is as ſubject to Puniſhment as any other Perſon.

1723-4. 10 Geo. I.

Then the Jury withdrew; and after a very ſhort Receſs, brought the Priſoner in GUILTY; and he received Sentence of Death: But at the Interceſſion of the Lord Onſlow, he was reprieved from Time to Time; and I do not find he was ever executed.

Articles againſt him.

THE Articles preferred againſt this Nobleman, charged him with Corruption and Extortion, in taking of ſeveral of the Maſters in Chancery very great and exorbitant Sums of Money, for their Admiſſion into their reſpective Offices; particularly of Richard Godfrey Eſq; (who purchaſed the Place of a Maſter of Sir Thomas Gery for 5000 l.) 840 l. of James Lightboun Eſq; (who was admitted Maſter on the Death of Samuel Browning, Eſq;) 6000 l. of John Borret, Eſq; (who purchaſed his Place of John Meller, Eſq; for 9000 l.) 1575 l. of Edward Conway, Eſq; (who purchaſed his Place of John Orlebar, Eſq; for 6000 l.) 1500 l. of William Kynaſton, Eſq; (who purchaſed of William Rogers, Eſq; for 6000 l.) 1575 l. of Thomas Bennet, Eſq; (who purchaſed his Place of John Hiccocks, Eſq; for 7500 l.) 1575 l. of Francis Elde, Eſq; (who was admitted a Maſter on the Death of William Fellows, Eſq;) 5250 l. of Mark Thurſton, Eſq; who was admitted a Maſter on the Death of John Borret, Eſq; 5250 l.

They charge him alſo with admitting inſufficient Perſons to theſe Offices, Men of ſmall Subſtance and Abilities, and no ways fit to be entruſted with the great Sums and Effects lodged in their Hands: And that they were allowed to pay for their Places out of the Suitors Money, and to game and traffick with it: That Fleetwood Dormer, Eſq; embezzled great Part of the Effects of the Suitors in his Hands, and died 25,000 l. indebted to them; which was moſt of it loſt by the Connivance or Contrivance of the Earl, who uſed every Stratagem and Artifice he could deviſe, to prevent an Enquiry into the Deficiencies of the ſeveral Offices, leſt the Value of them ſhould be leſſened and run down: That he unjuſtly and arbitrarily compelled ſeveral of the Maſters to contribute to make good thoſe Deficiencies: That the Earl never required any Security of the Maſters for the Sums in their Hands; but indulged them in a boundleſs Liberty of abuſing their Truſt, as their Avarice or Ambition prompted them.

That his Majeſty having directed an Enquiry into the Accounts of the Maſters in Chancery, the Earl, by his Advice and Authority, perſuaded the Maſters to make falſe Repreſentations of their Accounts and Circumſtances to the Privy Council, and to aſſiſt each other with Caſh, to make a falſe Shew and Appearance of their Ability, that a parliamentary Enquiry might be prevented; and obliged them to declare in Writing, at the Foot of their Accounts, That they were willing and able to pay the Ballance, although the Earl knew they were not.

The

1725. 10 Geo. I.

The Commons alſo charge, That when upon Dormer's Misfortunes (which were occaſioned by his trafficking with the Suitors Money, and lending it to Goldſmiths at ten per Cent.) it was propoſed to the Earl, to prevent the like Miſchief for the future, that the Maſters might give Security for the Money in their Hands; he would not hearken to it; for then he would have found none that would have given him 6000 l. for a vacant Place, or 1500 Guineas for an Admiſſion.

It was further charged, That he had declared from the Bench, that the Maſters were Men of as good Subſtance as ever filled thoſe Places; when it was commonly known, that one third of them had given as much, or more, for their Places and Admiſſions, than they were worth at the Time of the Purchaſe.

He is charged alſo with taking 100 Guineas of Mr. Bennet, for Leave to reſign the Office of Clerk of the Cuſtodies, in Order to obtain his Majeſty's Grant of that Office to Hugh Hammerſley Eſq; who had purchaſed it of Mr. Bennet.

The King's Bounty to the Earl.

And, as an Aggravation of his Crimes, it is charged, That he was guilty of theſe Extortions, after his Majeſty had been ſo bountiful as to beſtow on him 14,000 l. granted his Son George Parker, a Teller's Place in the Exchequer, for Life, worth 1500 l. per Annum: To the Earl himſelf a Penſion of 1200 l. per Annum; and alſo an Annuity of 4000 l. per Annum, beſides the Profits of the Chancellor's Office, which were very great: That, not ſatisfied with this large and ample Revenue, or regarding the Obligation of his Oath, or the Duty of his high and important Office; but entertaining wicked and corrupt Views, to procure an exceſſive and exorbitant Gain, by the aboveſaid unjuſt and oppreſſive Practices; he had illegally, corruptly, and extorſively, taken and received the ſaid Sums to his own private Uſe.

The Earl's Anſwer.

The Earl, in his Anſwer, acknowledged his Majeſty's Bounty to him, as ſet forth in the Articles, and the ſaid Sums for the Maſters Places, and for the Office of Clerk of the Cuſtodies: But ſaid, He received them as Preſents and Perquiſites of his Office: That the receiving them was not prohibited, either by the Common or Statute Law; and that his Predeceſſors had received the like Preſents on the like Occaſions: He denies he admitted inſufficient Perſons to the Offices of Maſters in Chancery; or that he allowed or knew of their paying for their Places, or trafficking with the Suitors Money: He denies alſo, that he knew of Dormer's Deficiency, till it was publickly known; nor did he contribute to the Concealment of that Deficiency, or the Deficiencies of any other Maſters; but did all that lay in his Power to repair their Deficiencies: Nor had he uſed any arbitrary Methods, to compel the other Maſters to make good thoſe Deficiencies: That he did not, indeed, require Security of the Maſters, becauſe this had never been required by any former Chancellors: That he neither commanded, or perſuaded the Maſters, to make falſe Repreſentations of their Accounts, or Circumſtances; or to aſſiſt each other with Caſh, to make a falſe Shew of their Ability, to prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry: Nor did he declare, That the preſent Maſters were of as good Subſtance as ever filled thoſe Places. 1725. 10 Geo. I.

And the Earl does further ſay, That he is not guilty of all, or any of the Matters contained in the ſaid Articles, in Manner and Form as they are therein charged againſt him: And does alſo inſiſt on the Benefit of his Majeſty's Pardon, granted by Act of Parliament, in the ſeventh Year of his Reign, in Bar of the ſaid Impeachment; ſo far as the ſame extends to any Offence, or ſuppoſed Offence, committed by him, before the 24th of July, 1721: And inſiſts, that no Evidence ought to be given againſt him of any thing done before that Time: And doth aver, that he is not within any of the Exceptions in the ſaid Act contained.

Reply of the Commons.

The Commons replied to the Earl's Anſwer, and averred their Charge to be true; and that he was guilty, in ſuch Manner and Form as he ſtood impeached.

They prove their Charge.

The Managers, having opened the Charge and the Evidence, produced their Witneſſes; and abundantly proved, that the Sums paid by the Maſters to the Earl, were not Preſents, but extorted from them; and that they were moſt of them three Times as much as any former Chancellor had taken on the like Occaſion; and the leaſt Sum was twice as much as ever had been paid on an Admiſſion to the Poſt of Maſter: That he never called the Maſters to Account, as the former Chancellors, the Lords Cowper and Harcourt, had done: That he connived at the Maſters lending and trafficking with the Suitors Money: And that he practiſed with the Maſters to conceal the Deficiency of Dormer, and ſome other Maſters; and there appeared to be a Deficiency of about 100,000 l. of the Suitors Money in the whole.

They proved alſo, That he had broken his Oath of Office; and that the ſelling Offices relating to the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, was a Breach both of the Common and Statute Law: And what is a Demonſtration, that the Earl himſelf was conſcious that he had taken too much, is, that he returned two of the Maſters half their Money, when he found there was like to be an Enquiry made into it.

The Obſervations of the Managers on the Evidence.

The Managers of the Commons, in their Obſervations on the Evidence, ſaid, They had now produced a very full and convincing Evidence, in Maintenance of the Impeachment: And that A wicked and corrupt View, to raiſe and procure to himſelf exceſſive and exorbitant Gain and Profit, was the fatal Principle from which all this Miſchief ſprung: The gratifying this Avarice engaged his Lordſhip to neglect every other Conſideration; to overlook that Care he owed to the Suitors of the Court; and to admit Perſons of ſmall Abilities, and every Way unqualified for the Diſcharge of ſo great a Truſt: This obliged him to connive at, and permit, the fraudulent Practice of paying the exceſſive Price of their Places, out of the Money belonging to the Suitors of the Court; and that again forced him to ſuffer, or rather to encourage, the purchaſing Maſters, to traffick and game with the Eſtates of the Suitors: There was no other Way by which thoſe liberal Purchaſers could reimburſe themſelves: And when the fatal Effects of this unbounded Liberty, which he permitted the Maſters to enjoy, began to appear; then was he compelled to become a Confederate with the deficient Maſters, to prevent its being known to the World.

That they began their Evidence with the 9th Article; which related to his taking 100 Guineas of Mr. Bennet, for permitting him to reſign the Office of Clerk of the Cuſtodies to Mr. Hammerſley; becauſe this Fact diſcovered the Man, and fully explained what Manner of Mind he muſt be endowed with, who could ſtoop to an Action ſo low and ſordid.——It is difficult, (ſays the Manager) not to feel ſome Indignation riſe, at the bare relating this Meanneſs! Mean it would have been in any Man; but for a Peer of Great Britain, an Earl, Lord Chancellor of the Kingdom, and a Chancellor (ſo obliged, and ſo dearly bought) to proſtitute ſo many illuſtrious Characters, in ſo low a Manner as to become a Broker for the Hire of 100 Guineas, is aſtoniſhing! But, my Lords, when I conſider, that the Earl was, at the ſame Time, one of the Lords Juſtices of the Kingdom, in a Commiſſion to execute ſome of the Functions of Majeſty itſelf --- I want Words to expreſs ſuch a Tranſaction in its proper Colours.

In ſpeaking of the illegal Sale of ſeveral of the Offices of Maſters in Chancery, this Manager obſerved, That the Money, inſtead of being voluntarily given, was unjuſtly extorted; and that, inſtead of being a Preſent, or uſual Perquiſite, it was an illegal and corrupt Bargain, and Sale of Offices relating to the Adminiſtration and Execution of Juſtice.

The next Point he mentioned, was, the admitting Perſons to the Office of Maſters who were of mean Subſtance; and obſerved, that their being deficient at this Time was a violent Preſumption that they were of ſmall Subſtance at the Time of their Admiſſion: How elſe is it to be conceived (ſays he) that Maſters, who have been ſo ſhort a Time in their Offices, ſhould be ſo much in Arrear? Kynaſton was admitted but in Auguſt, 1721, and in 1724, there appears a Deficiency of 26,908 l. Bennet was admitted but in June, 1723, and in little more than a Year there is a Deficiency of 16,075 l. And it was remarkable that both theſe Maſters had ſworn, that all they were worth in the World was not ſufficient to pay the vaſt Prices they gave for their Offices: And yet theſe Men were choſen to be truſted, one with near 50,000 l. and the other with near 100,000 l. of the Money belonging to the Helpleſs and Miſerable; which made it evident that the Sum the Chancellor himſelf was to receive, was the only Conſideration of admitting them, and therefore his only Care. Mr. Bennet had expreſly declared, that the Earl never once asked him, either before or after his Admiſſion, any one Queſtion, in order to be informed of his private Circumſtances: And yet theſe were the Men the Earl thought fit, in open Court, while he was ſitting in the Sacred Seat of Truth and Juſtice, to declare Men of as great Fortune, Abilities, and Skill, as ever ſat in that Court.

But the whole Scheme ſeems obviouſly calculated for no other End or Purpoſe, than to induce Perſons of ſmall Abilities to become Purchaſers, by facilitating and making eaſy the Method of Payment. And, indeed, it was ſo eaſy (ſays the Manager), that I wonder his Lordſhip did not meet with Perſons who would agree to give one half of the Money for an Opportunity of running away with the other: Such a Price might with as much Reaſon be called a Perquiſite, as his condeſcending to take but five or ſix thouſand Guineas, when no one would give more. It is true my Lord Macclesfield does, in his Anſwer, ſay, that he was ignorant of this Practice; but I apprehend his Lordſhip to be as much miſtaken in this, as he has been in other Particulars: For, my Lords, it appears by Mr. Bennet's Evidence, that he not only knew of this Practice, but endeavoured to conceal it.

1725. 10 Geo. I.

They who gave ſuch vaſt Prices for the Cuſtody of the Money, did not neglect the Opportunity of employing it for their own Uſe: The Proof is but too viſible; they who are rich confeſs it, and they who are poor dare not deny it: It was the neceſſary Conſequence of his Lordſhip's Extortion, and that put it out of his Power to take thoſe Meaſures that were neceſſary to prevent that Practice. The Misfortunes of the South-Sea Year were ſo univerſal, that ſurely any Man, even of common Senſe, would have been upon his Guard. My Lord Macclesfield knew that theſe Maſters gamed with the Suitors Money themſelves, or, for an extravagant Intereſt, lent it to thoſe who did: He knew that this was the Occaſion of Dormer's Deficiency; he knew that the other Maſters had it ſtill in their Power to do the ſame; therefore he permitted it: He took no Meaſure to prevent it; therefore he encouraged it.

But what could engage this Earl, (whoſe underſtanding is in no wiſe queſtioned) after ſo fatal a Year, thus to riſque his own Character, and what perhaps he values more, his own Fortunes, not only upon the Underſtanding, the Integrity, but even the good Fortune, of a Parcel of Men whom he had thus picked up, without either Enquiry or Care? My Lords, As the Borrower is to the Lender, ſo a corrupt Chancellor is the Servant of his Confederate Officers; he durſt not put a Stop to their Practices, (though his own Eſtate was embarked with theirs) leſt Reſentment and Revenge ſhould make them diſcover the infamous Secrets with which they were entruſted.

The Earl's Defence, by his Counſel.

The Earl's Counſel, in opening his Defence, ſaid, However unanſwerable the Eloquence of the Managers may be, we hope to defend the Earl againſt the Facts they have alledged; and ſhew, that they were either not done, or done with Innocence and Honour: Againſt meer Imaginations nothing can ſecure him, but your Lordſhips' Candour and Juſtice.

The Words Orphans, and Widows, and Lunaticks, have been employed to raiſe Tenderneſs and Compaſſion, and arm your Lordſhips againſt every Argument which we can offer: Well was it commanded by the Jewiſh Law, Not to reſpect the Perſon of the Poor in his Cauſe, knowing the Diſpoſition of Human Nature, and the Neceſſity of guarding againſt this generous Weakneſs. This Caution ought particularly to be remembered by Engliſhmen, who are allowed to be more ſubject to an Exceſs of it than thoſe of any other Nation.

The learned Managers have very rightly obſerved, how much your Lordſhips' Honour is concerned in this Proſecution. My Lords, It was with the greateſt Satisfaction I heard them ſay it; for I am by it induced to think, that notwithſtanding ſtanding the Zeal which has been expreſſed, they will be much pleaſed to find every Member of your Lordſhip's Body innocent.

It appears from the Anſwer, and needs no Proof, that the Noble Earl was once Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench; and his Conduct in that great Station, will, I hope, be ſome Defence.

I may appeal to thoſe Gentlemen who are now Managers againſt him, Whether they have not applauded him with Warmth? Whether they have not commended his Zeal and Intrepidity in the Cauſe of Liberty and our Country? his ſteady Adherence to the Proteſtant Succeſſion? his uninfluenced Behaviour? My Lords, I would ask, Whether then they did not praiſe and love him? Whether they did not eſteem his being placed in that high Station (which he executed with Honour) their Comfort, their Security?

My Lords, I beg Pardon for replacing thoſe Times before your Thoughts, or for deſiring any to conſider, how an Accuſation againſt him, ſupported by meer Refinements, would at that Time have been regarded: My Lords, his experienced Merit would then have ſilenced every Objection.

If there wanted any Evidence of the high Character he bore while in that Station, we might appeal to the great Rewards his Majeſty had beſtowed upon him: Thoſe very Graces which have been exaggerated againſt him, are the nobleſt Teſtimony in his Favour. His Majeſty thought him worthy of the Great Seal, becauſe he had found him faithful in his other Truſts: His Majeſty approved him, becauſe his Subjects had: It was for their Sakes (the conſtant Motive of his Choice) that he appointed him Lord Chancellor.

This once was the Earl's Character, this once his Merit: Theſe were, nay are ſtill, our Obligations to him. My Lords, experienced Worth has a Right to greater Confidence and Credit: This is a Rule of Evidence, and of common Juſtice; and unleſs the moſt convincing Proofs are offered, your Lordſhips never can believe, that one, who has done ſo greatly well, can do ſo baſely as is ſuggeſted by the Charge.

But ſuppoſing, upon ſo very ſtrict an Enquiry into the Conduct of any great Man, ſomething amiſs was found, (for the greateſt are but Men, and muſt have Failings); yet is former Merit not quite to be forgot. Publick Services are thought juſt Reaſons for Remiſſion of the higheſt paſt Offences, though done perhaps meerly with a View of obtaining it: And ſhall thoſe done upon a more generous Principle, ariſing from an honeſt diſintereſted Heart, deſerve a leſs Regard?

His own Defence.

The Earl, as well as his Counſel, ſeems to depend more on the Merit of his paſſed Services to the Crown, than on the Strength of his Defence. I ſhall endeavour (ſays he) to ſhew your Lordſhips, that the ſeveral Things charged upon me are either not true, or not criminal; or if your Lordſhips ſhall judge otherwiſe of them, yet that they were the Effects not of Wickedneſs but of Miſtake; and, If I have ever done any thing for the Service of my Country, of the Conſtitution, of his Majeſty, and of the Royal Family, and the preſent Eſtabliſhment, and the Adminiſtration of publick Juſtice; it might not be unſuitable to the unparalleled Goodneſs of this Reign, for your Lordſhips to have Compaſſion upon the Errors, Miſtakes, and Weakneſſes of the faithful ſteady Servant of a Prince, whoſe Mercy has been ſo often extended, in ſo great a Degree, to the higheſt Crimes of his bitter Enemies.

1725. 10 Geo. I.

Then he proceeds to the moſt material Part of his Defence, and ſays:

The Earl endeavours to juſtify the Practice of ſelling Offices.

An Office may be conſidered in two Reſpects: Firſt, with Reſpect to the Duty, that is the Concern of the Publick, that the Perſon be duly qualified to diſcharge the Office well: Secondly, with reſpect to the Profit and Advantage; and that is meerly private, and concerns the Officer only; and whilſt he diſcharges his Duty well, without Extortion, or other Misbehaviour, the Publick is little concerned in it, whether the Profit be more or leſs: As in thoſe Offices, which are very numerous, and of great Conſequence, that may be executed by Deputy; provided the Deputy behave himſelf well, the Publick has never concerned itſelf what his Salary or Allowance from his Principal is, whether it be greater or leſs.

And as the Perſon who is put into a very beneficial Office, ſuch as one of theſe, for his Life, has not any antecedent Right to the Office, and therefore, not to the Profits ariſing thereby, and he that prefers him is not bound to give it him; therefore when he puts him into it, he in Effect grants him all the Profits of the Office for his Life: And if the Officer make him a Preſent for it, either unexpected, by way of Thanks, after he is put in; or expected, which he had told him of before; or give it at the Time, or before that he is admitted; I ſee not any Immorality either in the Giver or Taker: It is Money given for Profits to be received during Life.

The Publick is concerned only in the Goodneſs of the Officer, not how advantageous to him the Grant of the Office is, nor in the Inducement which he that appointed him had to put him in; whether Friendſhip, Acquaintance, Relation, Importunity, great Recommendation, or a Preſent.

I agree, that a Perſon taking a Preſent, and putting in an unfit Perſon, when he knew him to be ſo, or had juſt Ground to believe him ſo, is criminal: Not becauſe he had taken a Preſent, but becauſe he had prejudiced the Publick knowingly: It may be an Aggravation, that he had taken Money; but the Crime is, the Wrong done to the Publick in the Perſon advanced: It had been the ſame Crime, had he done it for the Sake of Kindred, or Friendſhip, or for Recommendation, or any other Reaſon.

But if a Perſon very well qualified be placed in an Office, and the Publick has all the Advantage from him that it can have from an Officer in that Poſt, and ſo I who have placed him have well diſcharged my Duty to the Publick; is it material how well I loved him, how nearly he is related, who it was that perſwaded me to prefer him, or what he gave me on that Account, whether before or after he was put in? Will any of theſe Circumſtances make me criminal in an Action by which I ſerved the Publick well? If the Publick have all the Benefit it can have, where is the Immorality? Where is the Crime, if I have an Advantage too? eſpecially if Uſage has in ſome Sort annexed that Advantage to my Office, which is taken from his?

Obj.

1725. 10 Geo. I.

Obj. I know it may be objected, with great Appearance of Reaſon, that this Practice is dangerous; it leads to Inconveniences; it is a Temptation to him that diſpoſes of Places to make ill Officers, and a Temptation to the Officers to extort Money, and abuſe the Subjects, in order to get up their Money again.

Anſ. But is it therefore a Crime, where the Temptation is reſiſted, and a very good Officer is put in, and he behaves himſelf perfectly well?

The Point of the Charge now under Conſideration reſts ſingly on this, That I took Money for admitting Mr. Francis Elde (for inſtance); and though taking Money is a dangerous Practice, and may be a Temptation to let in an ill Man, is it therefore a Crime to put in Francis Elde, who is not alledged to be an ill Man, or any Way unfit; and is really an excellent Maſter?

This Argument concludes, only that the allowing it to be generally practiſed is inconvenient, and may, in the Deliberations of the Legiſlature, be properly uſed to prove it fit to be reſtrained by a Law: But is not of Force, in a Court of Juſtice, to prove it to be a Crime in every Inſtance, becauſe it may occaſion a Crime in ſome. But farther, as to the Matter of Temptation to put in one unfit:

The Liberty of preferring Relations to Offices, is a Temptation to put in Perſons unfit; and without doubt has often prevailed. Suppoſing therefore, it might be proper Matter of Deliberation in the Legiſlature, how far a Reſtraint ſhould be put upon it; yet, in the mean Time, is advancing a Relation to an Office which he is fit for, a Crime, becauſe in other Inſtances it has occaſioned a Crime, or may do ſo, or is a Temptation to it? And would it be a ſufficient Charge of a high Crime againſt me, to ſay, that I illegally and corruptly put into ſuch an Office A. B. my Son, or my Brother? I apprehend not.

Till a Reſtraint is laid, the Thing may be innocently done.

If a Reſtraint be laid, the Law will operate upon it, ſo far as that Reſtraint extends; but farther than that, and the Conſequences declared to enſue thereupon, it will remain as before.

Conſidering this, therefore, in itſelf, and upon the Reaſon of the Thing, where is the Force of the Argument? You took 5000 l. for putting in Mr. Elde, or Mr. Thurſton, a very fit Perſon, and an excellent Maſter; and therefore you are Criminal, becauſe ſome Body elſe, at another Time, may put in a Maſter not fit, upon his giving a Preſent.

If this, then, be not Criminal in itſelf, how do they prove it to be ſo by the Common Law?

The only Caſe they have inſtanced as any Authority for that Purpoſe, is that of Stockwith and North, in Moor's Reports. I have looked upon the Caſe as it appears in that Book, and it appears to be thus:

North was fined in the Star-Chamber, for that he, being Sheriff of Nottingham in the 43*d Year of Queen* Elizabeth, took Money for the Goalerſhip and Bailiwick for that Year: He gave them firſt to his Servants, who ſold them; but he himſelf received the Money. And this was adjudged to be letting to Farm of his Country, contrary to the Statute 4 Hen. IV. cap. 5. Yet there note, that the Statute itſelf gives a Penalty certain and pecuniary, and is Malum prohibitum, non in ſe. But the Court took it, that in as much as Corruption follows upon the Covetouſneſs of Officers, and they are forced thereto by the Prices which they give for Things which ought not to be ſold; that this putting to Farm, and ſelling of Offices, is malum in ſe, and fineable.

1725. 10 Geo. I.

It appears here, that this was a Proſecution upon the Statute 4 Hen. IV. for the Point adjudged was, that this was contrary to that Statute; and therefore, whether what was done, was againſt the Common Law, or malum in ſe, or not, was not at all in Judgment before the Court.

So that this looſe Expreſſion mentioned by Moor, (coupled too with a groſs Miſtake) not at all to the Point of Judgment, is of very little Force, to prove the Caſe to which it is applyed to be againſt the Common Law; and of leſs, to prove the preſent Caſe to be ſo.

What then is there farther offered? Do they ſhew, that by the Common Cuſtom of England, which is properly the Common Law of England, the taking Money for Offices has been from Time to Time puniſhed or condemned as Criminal?

No, it is admitted on the one Hand, that there is not one Inſtance of its having been puniſhed, or condemned as Criminal, at the Common Law.

And, on the other Hand, it is notorious, that in Fact the greateſt Offices have anciently been ſold, even by the Kings: And that not in a clandeſtine Manner, but ſo, that the Price and what it was paid for, have been entered upon Record.

My Lords, I have gone through all the ſeveral Articles that have been endeavoured to be ſupported againſt me; and I think I may ſay, as I did in the Beginning, that except thoſe relating to the Diſpoſal of Places, which are of another Kind and another Conſideration, all the reſt muſt, to be made Criminal, turn upon that Aggravation in the Articles, from my inordinate, wicked, and corrupt Deſigns of procuring to myſelf exceſſive and exorbitant Gains and Profits, by divers unjuſt and oppreſſive Practices after-mentioned. It is ſuch a corrupt Heart only can change Actions that in themſelves are innocent, and ſome of them, perhaps, commendable, into ſo many Crimes.

And, yet, it is very extraordinary, and ſcarce poſſible to be conceived, but that, if there had been ſuch a corrupt Heart, it muſt have broke out upon ſome other Occaſion of my Life. Not one Inſtance of my whole Life has been yet produced to ſhew it.

Several of thoſe under me have been examined; ſeveral Officers immediately attendant on me, that received conſiderable Profits and Salaries, to the Amount of three or four thouſand Pounds per Annum, and more: If I had ſet my Heart upon Gain, a certain Profit might have there been yearly made, amongſt thoſe whom I had wholly at Mercy, and in private. But there has no Appearance been found of any Thing of that Kind: And is it not more likely that I ſhould have laid hold of a certain Profit, than be

1725. 10 Geo. I.

be laying Schemes for Advantages upon the uncertain Contingency of the Sales of Masters Offices?

The Value of such an Expectation is a mere Trifle; and, with respect to the Probability of its happening, it was exceeding uncertain, whether I should have an Opportunity of putting in one single Master.

Three Masters have happened to dye in my Time; and two of them in less than the Space of a Year: But I think not one in nine Years before.

My Lord Cowper admitted but one in the last Time of his being Chancellor, which was four Years; and that was upon a Surrender.

There are twenty-four Cursitors; only one has died in my Time: Thirty Commissioners of Bankrupts; only one died in above six Years.

Surrenders of the Offices of Masters are rarely till after sixteen or seventeen Years, sometimes thirty or forty Years Enjoyment.

My Life was very uncertain: The Office of Chancellor much more so.

Little, therefore, was to be hoped from the Profit to be made by Masters Places.

My Lords, in the next Place, I apprehend that it appears, I did not take the Advantage I might have taken.

When the Time came for me to reap the Fruit of all my Contrivances, all those Schemes and Stratagems, the Work of above three Years, (a great Space in the Time of a Chancellor) see, whether there be the least Mark or Symptom of this impotent Desire of Gain!

What I did, proves, beyond all Contradiction, that I never had any such Views, as these they lay to my Charge.

I took not the Advantage I might have done; I took a less Sum, when a greater was offered; and * Part of the Money was returned again to Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurston. And when Mr. Thurston's Money was returned, only for being more than it was expected to be, every Thing was in the same State as when it was paid.

* Which shews Self-Conviction.

And possibly your Lordships will think, from some other Evidence given †, that amassing a great Estate was never my View; and that rapacious and base Ways of getting Money are not consistent with my Way of laying it out.

† Of his Charities.

As this is a full Answer to the Charge of my Desire of Gain; and the whole Malignity of all I am charged with, arises from that supposed Principle of my Actions; without this, though there should have been Imprudence, Indolence, too great Confidence, perhaps Credulity, Irresolution, or any other Defect or Weakness, there has been nothing wicked.

And if your Lordships are satisfied of this one Thing, I apprehend the Sting of this Impeachmenr is taken out.

To this Defence the Managers replied,

The Reply of the Managers to the Earl's Defence.

The Earl relies upon it, that the whole Charge turns upon his wicked and corrupt Intent and Views alledged in the Introduction, which, as he says, has not been made appear.

But these will be apparent from the Proofs of the several Facts charged; which, if they are unlawful and unwarrantable, and do tend to the raising Money by corrupt and extorsive Measures, will manifest that Intent, and prove it as strongly as if he had declared his Designs in open Court; for such Acts cannot be done with a good and honest Intention.

1725. 10 Geo. I.

The main Objection against the Articles is, That there is no Matter of a Criminal Nature contained in the Money Articles; or, if there is a Crime, yet, that there is no Punishment annexed or incident to it, which your Lordships can now inflict upon the Earl, after he is removed from his Office.

In answer to which I shall insist, That the Earl's selling these Offices, or disposing of them for Money, taken by him before the Admission of the succeeding Officers, in the manner alledged and proved, is an Offence at the Common Law, and punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, upon Indictment, or Information; as well, where the Money was taken for an Admission upon a Resignation, as upon a Death.

The ancient Law of England was, that none having any Office concerning the Administration of Justice, should take any Fee or Reward of any Subject for the doing of his Office, to the End he might be free, and at Liberty to do Justice.

And several Charters of former Kings, and Statutes declaratory of the Common Law, in that Respect, have been made, to enforce the due Observation thereof.

As to such Offices, which are in the immediate Gift and Disposal of the Crown, they cannot in their own Nature be saleable, or disposed of for Money; because the King himself cannot be supposed to suffer them to be put to Sale.

And the Ministers of the Crown, who have no immediate Right in the Office, and are only to execute and confirm the King's Pleasure in the Disposal of the Office, cannot sell that which is not their own.

Nor ought, nor can they lawfully take any Fee or Reward, for accepting Resignations, or making new Grants or Admissions into Places, or for conferring inferior Offices, with which they are entrusted by Virtue of their own Office; which would be the taking Money, for the doing of their Office, contrary to the Law, and the before-mentioned Statute.

But there is another very good Act of Parliament, which has been read at your Lordships Table, and proves this Practice of selling such Offices, to be an Offence at the Common Law, viz. the 12 Rich. II. c. 2. intituled, None shall obtain Offices by Suit, or for Reward.

Item, It is accorded, that the Chancellor, (by expres Name) Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy-Seal, Steward of the King's House, the King's Chamberlain, Clerk of the Rolls, the Justices of the one Bench, and of the other, Barons of the Exchequer, and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Escheators, Customers, Comptrollers, or any other Officer, or Minister of the King, shall be firmly sworn, That they shall not ordain, name, or make any such Officers, nor other Officer or Minister, of the King, for any Gift, or Brocage, Favour or Affection.

The Act proceeds further into a different Form of Expression, and to another Matter.

Nor, that none which pursueth by him, or any other, privily or openly, to be in any Manner of Office, shall be put in the same Office, or any other;

1725. 10 Geo. I. but that they make all such Officers and Ministers of the best and most lawful Men.

This Statute takes it for granted, That the contrary Practice of naming subordinate Officers, for Gift or Brokage, was unlawful before, at the Common Law; since it does not create or enact it to be an Offence, but provides an additional Constraint or Obligation upon the superior Officer, by an Oath not to commit the Offence; and it still remains an Offence at the Common Law, and does not depend on that Statute, but is a great Offence, although the Oath be not taken.

Yet, if it should be supposed, by Way of Argument, (which has not been proved, and therefore cannot be admitted) That the Sale of these Offices has been of late tolerated, for the greater Increase of the Perquisites of the first Officer of the Crown, in the principal Court of Justice; yet the Earl's raising and receiving these exorbitant Sums, above double to any Instance before his own Time, upon a Pretence, that the Business of the Court of Chancery was very much advanced during his Residence there, will be as criminal, as if he had put the Offices to Auction, when no Sum or Fee had ever been taken or heard of.

And in his Method of Practice, there can be no Distinction between a Present and a Price: For he made the most always of his Share or Claim in the Office. When he was only to admit upon a Surrender, he took 1500 Guineas for his good Will and Approbation merely: And when he admitted upon a Death, he took 5000 Guineas at the least, although the Office was greatly in Debt; as in Borret's Case, where the Suitors will lose upwards of 12,000 l. of their Effects, by the lowest Computation.

As for the small antient Fees, which have been paid to the Great-Seal for Time immemorial, upon the sealing every Patent; these are out of the present Question: And where Usage, beyond Time of Memory, has allowed the Receipt of these little Sums, it will be presumed, (if there was Occasion for it) that some Act of Parliament had passed, to make it lawful.

And, when it is said, That a good Officer may give Money for his Place, and may resist the Temptation of Extortion; it is what the Law of England would not trust to human Frailty: And if all the Actions and Behaviour of the best of the Masters, with Respect to their Fees, their Manner of Proceeding upon References, and their disposing and trafficking with the Money of the Suitors, were to be enquired into more particulary; there can be no Doubt, from what has appeared in Evidence upon this Trial, but that the Temptation and Inclination to Profit, towards reimbursing themselves the Money advanced to the Earl, and the preceding Master, have overcome their most steady Resolutions to Virtue and Self-Denial.

My Lords, I think the impeached Lord has advanced a very dangerous Position upon this Point. He is pleased to say, The Publick has nothing to do to enquire about any thing, but whether the Officer be a good Officer; that if he be so, the Publick is not hurt, though he gives the Chancellor Money for his Place. Here I presume he was sensible that it might be objected, that the same Argument would hold, for taking Money in a Cause before him, provided it was a good Judgment: And therefore was pleased to say, That the Difference between this Case, and taking a Bribe for Judgment in a Cause, is, that in the one Case, the Party has a Right to have Judgment; but in the other Case, no Man has a Right to his Favour or Recommendation, unless upon Terms. This is very extraordinary; and the same Argument would prove, that it is lawful for him to take Money from every Judge that comes into West-minster-Hall. It is well known, that the Chancellor generally recommends in that Case; and yet it might there be said, What is the Publick the worse, provided he is a good Judge? Surely, this is such a Doctrine, as is not fit to be proclaimed to the World, and would tend to universal Corruption. 1725. 10 Geo. I.

As to this Point, there is a great Deal of Difference between one Officer selling to another, and a Judge that presides in the Court, whose Duty it is to see, that proper Persons be appointed, according to Law; instead of that, by this Method, he shews them a bad Example on their very Admission into the Office; and introduces them by Corruption, in the first Instance, even by the very Act of administring the Oath to them.

The Year 1720 has been mentioned, both by the Earl, and his Counsel; and it was so fatal a Year, that surely if a Reformation were ever to be made, it should have been upon that Occasion. I think there is but little Difference, whether they traded with the Money themselves, or put it into another's Hands, at high Interest, and permitted them to trade with it. Could any one imagine, that Dormer let 24,000 l. lie in Wilson's Hands for nothing? Mr. Cottingham, upon the Examination of my Lord's own Counsel, gave Evidence, that Wilson insisted, he allowed high Interest for it: And, it was well known, it was in the Power of all the Masters, to traffick with the Money; and this after express Warning by one of the Masters, to the Chancellor, not only by Word of Mouth, but by Letter, written (as I take it) in 1722. But every Thing of a Regulation of that Kind was liable to Objection. One Thing that was proposed, was so easy to be done, that there is no Excuse it was not complied with; which is in Relation to the Securities, by placing them in two or three Names; which would have prevented the Masters from disposing of the Securities.

My Lords, He was pleased to make a Distinction between an Answer to Articles of Impeachment, and an Answer to a Bill in Chancery; that the Plaintiff, in a Cause, had a right to a full and plain Discovery; but that the Case before your Lordships differs. My Lords, I would beg Leave to mention, that there was an Instance of an Impeachment before your Lordships, in which the Lord now impeached had a great Share in the Reply, wherein he laid very great Stress upon the Insufficiency and Evasions in the Answer *. The Person then impeached, had very hard Names given to him on that Account; and even his Silence was insisted on, as a Confession of his Crimes.

* Dr. Sacheverell.

As to the noble Lord's Charities, I beg leave to say, that as it is a great Addition to the Merit

1725. 10 Geo. I. rit of Charity, to have it kept private, it was the more extraordinary theſe Charities ſhould be now publiſhed; becauſe I do not ſee they are any ways material to the Matters before your Lordſhips. Here are plain Facts charged and proved, and if in a Caſe of this Kind theſe Charities are to wipe off the Charge, it is a kind of Commutation that has not been before heard of. My Lords, he that would be the moſt meritoriouſly charitable, ſhould firſt be juſt: The Lord ſhould firſt have conſidered thoſe Suitors he had injured; he ſhould firſt have made Satisfaction to them, and then have offered his Gifts.

Thus we have endeavoured to lay before your Lordſhips the whole Circumſtances of this Caſe; there needs no Eloquence to aggravate the Crimes; I pretend to none; but the Cries of Widows and Orphans will have the moſt perſuaſive Eloquence, and when they have Juſtice on their Side, they will have Weight with your Lordſhips.

My Lords, the Caſe before your Lordſhips is founded on Corruption, and a Series of Fraud to ſupport that Corruption: The People had long murmured at it, but the Grievance increaſed at laſt to ſuch an intolerable Degree, that it became a National Concern, and there was an unavoidable Neceſſity of a Parliamentary Proſecution.

My Lords, the Commons hope they have done their Duty in bringing it here; and we hope your Lordſhips will give ſuch Judgment as will be conſiſtent with your Lorſhips' Honour and Juſtice.

The Arguments being concluded on both Sides, the following Queſtion was put to every Lord, of whom Ninety-three were preſent, (viz).

Is Thomas Earl of Macclesfield guilty of the High Crimes and Miſdemeanors charged upon him by the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, or not guilty?

To which the Lord Walpole, the youngeſt Peer, and every other Peer afterwards, anſwered, GUILTY upon my Honour. There was not one diſſenting Voice; ſo notorious was the Corruption, and the fatal Conſequences of it, that he had not one Friend or Relation in all that Illuſtrious Aſſembly, that opened his Lips in his Favour.

The Houſe ſitting again on Wedneſday the 26th of May, the Earl was brought to the Bar, when the Lord Chief Juſtice King, then Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, informed him, that the Lords had fully conſidered his Caſe, and had unanimouſly found him GUILTY. 1725. 10 Geo. I. The Earl convicted.

The Earl thereupon ſaid, he hoped their Lordſhips would conſider what he had ſuffered already, in the Expence he had been at, the Fatigue, and the cruel Diſtemper which his long Attendance had brought upon him; he had paid back ten thouſand eight hundred Pounds of the Money already; he had loſt his Office, and undergone the Cenſure of Parliament, which was of itſelf a very ſevere Puniſhment; and there was not one of the Suitors but had already received five Shillings in the Pounds. Moves in Mitigation of his Fine.

The Managers for the Commons interrupted the Earl here, and ſaid, This might have been proper to have offered in his Defence, but was not ſo in Arreſt of Judgment; their Lordſhips had found him guilty of the Fact, and he was now arguing in Defence of it.

The Earl replied, He ſubmitted it to their Lordſhips, whether this was not proper in Mitigation of Damages; however he left himſelf to their Lordſhips' Juſtice and Mercy. Then the Earl and Managers withdrew; and their Lordſhips having ordered the Earl into the Cuſtody of the Black-Rod, proceeded to conſider of the Judgment.

On Thurſday, the 27th of May, 1725, the Commons coming up to the Houſe of Lords, with their Speaker, to demand Judgment, and the Earl being brought to the Bar, the Lord Chief Juſtice King pronounced the following Sentence, (viz).

Their Lordſhips' Judgment is, and this High Court doth adjudge, that you Thomas Earl of Macclesfield be fined in the Sum of thirty thouſand Pounds to our Sovereign Lord the King; and that you be impriſoned in the Tower of London until you ſhall pay the ſaid Fine. His Sentence.

Then the Earl was taken from the Bar, and conveyed to the Tower, where he remained a Priſoner a ſhort Time, and then paid his Fine, and was diſcharged, and ſeems to have been in full Favour at Court afterwards.

1554. 1 Mar. The Arraignment of Sir THOMAS WIAT, for High-Treaſon, on the 14th of March 1554. 1 Mariæ. 1554. 1 Mar.

Wiat's Arraignment.

The Charge.

THE Priſoner was indicted for High-Treaſon, in levying War againſt the Queen, on the 14th of February then laſt paſt, at Brentford in the County of Middleſex, to which he pleaded Guilty, endeavouring however to extenuate his Crime, and deſiring the Court to interceed for him to the Queen for Mercy.

And Confeſſion.

He ſaid, ſince he had conſidered and reflected on his Offence, he had obſerved, that Rebellion againſt their natural Princes never proſpered long; that Henry the IVth. was but a Rebel, and the Crown did not continue long in his Family, but was reſtored again to the right Heirs.

He was once indeed of Opinion, that by Marriage of the Prince of Spain with the Queen, the Life of the Princeſs Elizabeth, the ſecond Perſon in the Kingdom, would be in Danger; and he, who was free born, ſhould have been reduced with his native Country to a State of Slavery by Foreigners, which induced him to practiſe the Treaſon he had committed: But, now he was better informed, and ſenſible how much this Marriage would be for the Honour, Advantage, and Security of the Kingdom, he had altered his Mind; and if Her Majeſty would extend her Grace to him, he would ſerve her faithfully as long as he lived. He then took an Opportunity of reciting what Services he and his Anceſtors had done the Crown.

The Attorney General anſwered, He had great Reaſon to repent of his Faults, for he had not only undone himſelf, but a great many other Gentlemen whom he had deluded into this Rebellion, particularly the Duke of Suffolk and his Family, and had attempted to ſeduce the Princeſs, the ſecond Perſon in the Kingdom, whoſe Honour was thereby brought in Queſtion: What did he mean, when the Rebellion firſt broke out, to write to the Princeſs Elizabeth to remove farther from the Queen, and after his Succeſs at Rocheſter Bridge over the Lord Norfolk's Men to ſend her the joyful News, for which ſhe returned him Thanks?

To which Wiat anſwered, He confeſſed it was true. The Maſter of the Horſe then demanded, if when he and Mr. Cornwallis were ſent to him from the Queen, he (Wiat) did not inſiſt to have the Queen's Perſon in his Cuſtody in the Tower, with ſuch of the Privy Council as he ſhould ſpecify, and the publick Treaſure delivered up to him, ſaying, He had rather be truſted than truſt?

The Queen's Counſel alſo demanded, if he was not privy to a Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate the Queen? though they acknowledged he diſapproved of it: They alſo produced Wiat's Letter to the Duke of Suffolk, when he lay with the Rebels in Southwark, to meet him at Kingſton-Bridge, and ſo march to London with him, which Wiat acknowledged to be his Hand; he alſo confeſſed, he refuſed to accept the Queen's Pardon when it was firſt offered him; but deſired the Queen's Counſel would not aggravate his Offences, for he had made a full Confeſſion, and thereby ſecured her Majeſty againſt any future Attempts againſt her: He confeſſed, when he had once entered upon that deviliſh and deſperate Enterpriſe, he thought there was no Way but to go through with it: And he took all the Methods he could think of to render it ſucceſsful, ſuch as writing to the Lady Elizabeth, and making the Proclamation he had cauſed to be made in Southwark; and now, there remained nothing but to throw himſelf upon the Queen's Mercy, though he confeſſed that he deſerved with Wat Tyler to be made an Example; and as that was called Wat Tyler's Rebellion, this ought to be called Wiat's Rebellion to the World's End: However, if the Queen would ſpare him, he would render her the beſt Service he was able; and if ſhe had but two true Men in the Kingom, he would be one of them, and die at her Grace's Feet, imploring the Lords Commiſſioners again to interceed for him to her 1554. 1 Mar. Grace, which the Lords promiſed they would do: But his Countenance ſtill remained dejected, and he let fall Floods of Tears, and indeed he had no manner of Reaſon to expect Mercy, who was at the Head of ſo formidable a Rebellion, wherein he was within a few Hours of ſurprizing the Capital of the Kingdom, with the Queen and Court. 1554. 1 Mar.

He was beheaded the 11th of April following.

Proceedings againſt Sir JOHN HOLLES, Sir JOHN WENTWORTH, and Mr. LUMSDEN, in the Star-Chamber, for traducing the publick Juſtice of the Nation, 10 Nov. 1615. 13 Jac. I.

1615. 13 Jac I.

Information Ore tenus.

THE Gentlemen above-mentioned having been committed by Order of Council, and brought before the Court of Star-Chamber, the Attorney General, Sir Francis Bacon, informed againſt them Ore tenus: But before he proceeded to open the Charge, he applauded his Majeſty's Juſtice, in proſecuting the Murderers of Sir Thomas Overbury, and not ſparing even the Earl of Somerſet, who was, he ſaid, as the Signet upon the King's Right Hand.

Then he declaimed upon the Crime of Poiſoning, obſerved it was eaſily committed, and as eaſily concealed: That this Fact was the more heinous, as it was practiſed upon a Priſoner who was under the Protection of the Law, and often repeated before it took Effect: That it was a Species of Murder there was no guarding againſt, frequently deſigned againſt one Perſon, and deſtroyed many more; and held, it was not of the Growth of our Country, but came from Rome.

However Mr. Attorney does not ſeem to charge any of theſe Gentlemen with having a Hand in that Murder; but endeavouring to ſkreen the Lord Somerſet from Juſtice, by queſtioning Weſton's Guilt, and reflecting on the Judges, as if they had perverted Juſtice, and extorted that Confeſſion from Weſton.

Then he charges Mr. Lumſden with getting a Paper put into the King's Hands, reflecting on the Chief Juſtice and Commiſſioners, authorized by his Majeſty to enquire into Overbury's Murder: Sir John Wentworth he charges with putting Queſtions to Weſton at the Place of Execution, tending to make the People believe he was innocent, and charges Sir John Holles with adviſing Weſton to diſcharge a good Conſcience, with the like Intent: That Sir John Holles alſo ſaid, If he had been upon Weſton's Jury, he doubted whether he ſhould have found him guilty; or to that Effect: And Mr. Attorney inſiſted, that it was criminal to arraign and calumniate either the Court or the Jury, for trying or convicting a Malefactor; eſpecially in this Caſe, where Weſton had ſent for both the Father and Mother of Sir Thomas Overbury, confeſſed his Guilt, and asked their Pardon: But ſtill theſe Gentlemen pretended to doubt if he was guilty, and endeavoured to make the World believe he was innocent.

Lumſden's Defence.

Mr. Lumſden ſaid in Anſwer to this Charge, that he was not at Weſton's Arraignment, but had ſet down in Writing what he heard from others in common Diſcourſe, who now denied what they had ſaid; and therefore he confeſſed what he had written was falſe; urged his Ignorance in the Law of England, and ſaid he had no ill Intent; but deſired as he was a Gentleman, he might be excuſed from diſcovering the Perſons that ſaid theſe Things to him in Converſation, ſubmitting himſelf to the Cenſure of the Court.

To which Mr. Attorney replied, That he who refuſed to declare his Author, muſt be looked on as the Forger of the Slander.

Went-worth's Defence.

Sir John Wentworth confeſſed, he asked Weſton the Queſtions at the Execution with which he was charged, which he endeavoured to excuſe. 1. Becauſe others had done the ſame. 2. Becauſe he had heard Weſton denied the Fact, and deſired to know the Truth of it from himſelf; and if the asking a Man Queſtions who was going to Execution were offenſive to the State, he ſubmitted to the Court.

Holles's Defence.

Sir John Holles in his Defence ſaid, he confeſſed he had ſaid he ſhould have been in Doubt what Verdict to have given, or to that Effect; and if ſuch Words deſerved Cenſure, he ſubmitted to their Lordſhips: He confeſſed alſo, that ſome bidding Weſton ſpeak the Truth, and he anſwering generally Fact or no Fact I die worthily. He (Sir John Holles) did bid him ſpeak his Conſcience, in which he thought he did the Part of a Chriſtian, and intended neither to reflect on the Law, or Juſtice that had paſſed on him.

Here he mentioned his having ſerved Prince Henry, and lamented his Death; and ſaid, if their Lordſhips had determined any Thing againſt him, he humbly ſubmitted to their Cenſures.

Sir Edw. Coke's Speech to the Defendants.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice, Sir Edward Coke, made a Speech to the Defendants before he pronounced Sentence: Wherein he ſaid, That none were brought in queſtion for poiſoning Sir Thomas Overbury, but ſuch as in his Soul and Conſcience were apparently guilty; and obſerved, there were but few Inſtances in our Records, of this Crime committed in England: But one he mentioned in the Reign of Edw. I. Where a Woman committed Adultery, and afterwards poiſoned her Husband; and that other of Solomon le Rocke, a Judge, who was poiſoned by a Monk; and obſerved 1615. 13 Jac. I. observed upon the firſt Caſe, that Poiſon and Adultery go together; and upon the laſt, that Poiſon and Popery go together. But from the Reign of Edw. III. to that of Hen. VIII. he obſerved, there was no Account of any Man's being poiſoned in England; and then a Statute was made that a Poiſoner ſhould be boiled to Death: Another Caſe he remembered afterwards, of one Squire a Prieſt, who endeavoured to poiſon Queen Elizabeth's Saddle; and obſerved again, that Poiſoning came firſt from Popery: He added, that the Reaſon Weſton denied the Fact laid in the Indictment was, becauſe he could not ſay which of the Poiſons adminiſtered to Sir Thomas killed him; but when he was informed that was not material, he made no Scruple to confeſs the Indictment: Then the Chief Juſtice told Mr. Lumſden that he was Pander to the Earl of Somerſet, and his Favourer, as appeared by his Letters; and reflected ſeverely on him for endeavouring to conceal the Crimes the Earl of Somerſet and his Lady were ſo violently ſuſpected of.

The Crime of Sir John Holles alſo he ſaid he looked upon to be very great, in queſtioning and counſelling others after a Verdict given: Nor was he pleaſed with what he ſaid at the Bar, viz. If any Thing were determined againſt him, he humbly ſubmitted himſelf, as if they were in a Conſpiracy againſt him: But perhaps he thought as ſome others did, that the whole Proſecution was but a Conſpiracy againſt the Earl of Somerſet, and adviſed Gentlemen to ſpeak reverently of theſe Matters when they diſcourſed of them in their Chambers, for the Birds of the Air would reveal the Matter: After which, the following Sentence was pronounced, viz. 1615. 13 Jac. I.

The Sentence. That Lumſden ſhould pay a Fine of 2000 Marks, be impriſoned for a Year, and until the Fine was paid, and till he ſhould ſubmit himſelf at the King's-Bench Bar, and declare his Authors.

That Sir John Holles ſhould pay a Fine of 1000 l. and be impriſoned in the Tower for a Year, And

That Sir John Wentworth ſhould pay a Fine of 1000 Marks, and be impriſoned in the Tower for a Year; and that both of them ſhould make their Submiſſion at the King's-Bench Bar.

Lords preſent. The Lords of the Star-Chamber preſent were, The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord Chamberlain, Earl of Pembroke, the Biſhops of London and Winton, Lord Zouch, Lord Knowles, Mr. Secretary Winwood, the Chancellor of the Dutchy, Sir Thomas Lake, the two Chief Juſtices, and the Lord Chief Baron.

The Mock Trial of Sir ROBERT SPOTSWOOD, Secretary of State to King Charles I. for pretended Treaſons, before an Aſſembly of the Uſurpers in Scotland, who aſſumed the Name of a Parliament there, in November, December, and January 1645, 21 Car. I.

1645. 21 Car. I. Spotſwood's Trial. 1645. 21 Car. I.

The Charge. THE Dittay, or Indictment, charges Sir Robert with abuſing His Majeſty, in purchaſing of him the Office of Secretary of the Kingdom of Scotland, and putting the Signet to ſeveral Commiſſions granted to James Graham Earl of Montroſe, whom their Kirk had excommunicated, and they had declared a Traitor; particularly to a Commiſſion dated the 5th of June 1645, conſtituting the ſaid Earl Lieutenant-Governor, and Captain-General of all the Forces of that Kingdom, againſt the Forces raiſed by the Authority of the Eſtates of Parliament in Defence of the ſolemn League and Covenant; and ſigning another Commiſſion, conſtituting the ſaid Earl Commiſſioner to the Parliament; and to a Proclamation, annulling and condemning the Proceedings of this pretended Parliament as Treaſonable. He is alſo charged with joining the ſaid Earl's Forces, and committing divers Acts of Hoſtility, till the Earl was defeated on the 13th of September then laſt paſt, when the ſaid Sir Robert Spotſwood was taken Priſoner: And they declare that his taking up Arms in this Manner was High Treaſon, by an Act made in the Year 1644; for which he ought to ſuffer the Pains of Death, &c. as a Traitor.

His Anſwer to the Charge. To this Charge Sir Robert anſwered, That the King had made him a Temporary Secretary in the Abſence of the Earl of Lanerk, and that he held it his Duty to ſign ſuch Commiſſions and Acts of State as his Majeſty commanded: That his accompanying the Earl of Montroſe, who had the King's Commiſſion, could not be interpreted a taking up Arms againſt the Kingdom: And laſtly, That he was not charged with any thing that was declared Treaſon by Act of Parliament, or any other Law.

The Uſurpers reply. The Counſel for the Uſurpers replied, That it was Criminal to accept any Office without the Conſent of the Eſtates in Parliament: And that his ſigning the ſaid Commiſſion was a Proof that he was Guilty of adviſing the King to iſſue the ſaid Commiſſions, and other Acts of State againſt them. That his joining the Earl of Montroſe was a taking up Arms againſt his Country; and by an Act of Parliament, made in the Year 1584, the impugning the Authority of the Eſtates of Parliament was declared to be High Treaſon.

Sir

1645. 21 Car. I. Sir Robert rejoins.

Sir Robert's Counſel rejoined and ſaid, That the accepting an Office without the Conſent of Parliament was not ſuch an impugning of their Authority as amounted to High Treaſon; and that he only ſupplied the Place of Secretary for a Time, in the Abſence of the real Secretary: That it could not be inferred from his ſigning the Commiſſions that he adviſed them; for many of thoſe who are appointed to ſign Papers are not of the Council; and they would be looked upon as Intruders if they offered their Advice: That he happened accidentally into the Earl of Montroſe's Army, and was not in Arms, or had any Intention to march with him on any hoſtile Expedition; though he acknowledged he was taken Priſoner in that Battel: That the late Act of Parliament of 1644, on which they charged him with Treaſon, was not made as others were, by his Majeſty and the States jointly, but during a Diviſion between His Majeſty and His Subjects, who were in Arms againſt him, as they acknowledged; and in ſuch fatal Conjunctures, Neceſſity compels all Men to take one Side or other. There was no expreſs Law directing private Men how they ſhould behave in ſuch Exigencies; and it had ever been thought excuſable for Men to follow the Light of their own Conſciences and Judgments, although they might be miſtaken. That he ought to enjoy the Privileges of the Laws of War and of Nations, among which one of the Principal was, That Men ſhould not be judged by the Laws of thoſe againſt whom they had ſided, eſpecially by ſuch Laws as were made during the Conteſt. And he further inſiſted, That he was promiſed Quarter upon his ſurrendering himſelf.

The Uſurpers further reply.

The Counſel for the Uſurpers anſwered, That Sir Robert had not only joined the Earl of Montroſe, who had been declared a Rebel and Enemy to his Country, but who was an Enemy to their Religion, and the Solemn League and Covenant. Nor was it in the Power of any Officer of the Army to give Quarter, and thereby protect a Rebel againſt the State: That the Eſtates of Parliament, in order to avert God's Wrath, were bound by the Covenant to puniſh the Enemies of their Religion; and if Quarter was to be allowed to other Priſoners, yet not to him, who was declared unpardonable, by the Parliaments both of Scotland and England.

Sir Robert's further Anſwer.

The Priſoner's Counſel replied, That whoever were taken in the Field, upon Quarter granted them, had a Right to their Lives by the Laws of War, and of all Nations; eſpecially as his Caſe was, who was taken by a Officer belonging to a Nobleman of great Honour and Eminence, both in the State and in the Army; and if Quarter ſhould be denied where it was promiſed, this would open a Door to all manner of Cruelty; and that the Covenant could not oblige them to do what was unjuſt, or contrary to the Laws of War or of Nations.

That though it had been declared in Parliament he was to expect no Pardon, this did not exclude him from the Benefit of Quarter already granted, for ſecuring his Life.

The Committee having heard the Arguments and Evidence on both Sides, made their Report to the Parliament, who thereupon declared, Sir Robert Spotſwood had incurred the Capital Puniſhment of Death, by the Act of Parliament of 1584, and that he had incurred the Pain and Puniſhment of Treaſon, and Forfeiture of Lands and Goods, by the ſaid Act, made in the Year 1644; and therefore condemned him, as a Traitor to the Kingdom, and the Eſtates thereof, to forfeit Life, Lands, and Goods, to be applied to the Uſe of the Publick; and that he ſhould be executed, by ſtriking off his Head from his Shoulders, at the Market Croſs at St. Andrews, on Thurſday the 20th of that Inſtant January.

1645. 21 Car. I. He is declared guilty, and condemned.

In Purſuance of which Sentence, Sir Robert being brought to the Place of Execution, was about to make a Speech to the People, when a zealous Miniſter of the Kirk required the Provoſt to ſilence him. Sir Robert having foreſeen this, threw a Paper among the People of the following Tenour, (viz.)

The Paper he left behind him.

YE will expect ſomewhat from me of the Cauſe for which I am brought here at this Time to ſuffer in this kind, which I am bound to do, for clearing the Integrity of my own Proceedings, vindicating his Majeſty's juſt and pious Intentions, and withal, to vindicate you that are miſled in Ignorance, and made to believe, that you are tied in Conſcience to ſet forward this unnatural Rebellion, masked under the Covert and Pretext of propagating Religion, and maintaining of the publick Liberties. You perceive that I ſtand here adjudged to die, by this pretended Parliament, as a Traitor to the Eſtates, and an Enemy to my Native Country. This is a Treaſon unheard of before in this Kingdom, againſt the Eſtates; a Thing of late Creation, which, I believe, there be ſome would have erected, in Oppoſition to the juſt and lawful Authority of the King, under which we and our Predeceſſors have been ſo many hundred of Years governed. To come to my treaſonable Demeanour (as they eſteem it) the main one is, That I did docquet and bring down a Commiſſion of Lieutenantry from his Majeſty to the Marquis of Montroſe, with a Proclamation for indicting a Parliament by the King's Authority, wherein the ſaid Lord Marquis was to be Commiſſioner. Not to excuſe my ſelf upon the Neceſſity laid upon me to obey His Majeſty's Command in a Buſineſs of that Nature, in regard of the Charge I had about him, I cannot ſo far betray my own Conſcience, as to keep up from you my Judgment of the Thing it ſelf, ſeeing it may tend to the juſtifying the King's Part, and your better Information; for lack whereof, I know many are entangled in this Rebellion unwittingly: And who knoweth, but God in his merciful Providence hath brought us hither, to be Inſtruments of freeing you from the manifold Deluſions that are made uſe of to enſnare you. I ſay then, it was juſt and neceſſary to His Majeſty to grant ſuch Commiſſions, and by Conſequence an Act of Duty in me to perform what he was pleaſed to command me. It is known what Contentment His Majeſty gave to this Kingdom at his laſt being ing here, both in the Affairs of Church and Policy; notwithſtanding whereof, the World ſeeth what Meeting he hath got from us. When the Rebellion burſt forth in England, all that he deſired of us was, to ſtand neutral, and not to meddle between him and his Subjects there, of which moderate Deſire of his little Reckoning was made; but on the contrary, at the Requeſt of theſe Rebels, by the Power of their Faction amongſt us, an Army was raiſed and ſent to England to aſſiſt them againſt our own Native King: His Majeſty being reduced to this Extremity, what Expedient could he find ſo fair and eaſy, as to make uſe of the Help of ſuch of his Loyal Subjects here, as he knew had ſuch an unparalleled Diſloyalty in Horror and Deteſtation? Amongſt whom, that matchleſs Mirrour of all true Worth and Nobility, the Lord Marquis of Montroſs having offered himſelf, it pleaſed His Majeſty to give him a ſubaltern Commiſſion at firſt, which he having executed with ſuch unheardof Succeſs, that his Memory ſhall be had in Honour for it in all Ages: His Majeſty for the better furthering of his own Service, and to countenance and encourage him the more in it, gave him an abſolute and independent one thereafter, which is That I delivered into his Hands by His Majeſty's Command. Herewithal His Majeſty pitying the Miſery of this poor Kingdom, occaſioned by the rebellious Stubbornneſs of a few factious Spirits, thought fit to give Power to the ſaid Lord Marquis to call a Parliament in His Majeſty's Name, to try if by that Means a Remedy might be found againſt the preſent Evils, and to have all his Subjects of this Kingdom reduced, by one Means or other, under his Obedience. In all this, I ſee not what can be juſtly charged upon His Majeſty, or upon me his Servant, who have done nothing againſt any authorized Law in the Kingdom; but have ſerved him faithfully, unto whom by Truſt and natural Allegiance I am ſo much bound.

Whereas I am declared an Enemy to my Native Country, God be ſo propitious to me, as my Thoughts towards it have been always Publick, and tending to the Good and Honour thereof. I do profeſs, ſince the firſt Time I had the Honour of that Noble Marquis's Acquaintance, I have been a Favourer of his Deſigns, knowing them to be both Loyal and Honourable: Beſide that, I knew his Affection towards his Country to be eminent, in this eſpecially, that he did ever ſhow himſelf Paſſionate to vindicate the Honour of this Kingdom, which ſuffereth every where by this ſtrange Combination of theirs with the Rebels of another Kingdom againſt their own Prince; wherein I concurred in Judgment with him, and thought there was no other Way to do it, but by ſetting up a Party of true and Loyal hearted Scots-men for His Majeſty; whereby it might be ſeen, that it is not a National Defection, but only ſtirred up by a Faction therein, who, for their own Ends, have diſhonoured their Native Kingdom, and diſturbed the Peace thereof. In enterprizing and proſecuting of which heroical Deſign, God hath ſo favoured that Noble Lord, that he hath righted our Country in the Opinion of all the World, and diſcovered where the Rottenneſs lieth. 1645. 21 Car. I.

Thus far I am content to be accounted a Traitor in their Opinion that have condemned me, being fully aſſured, that God, the righteous Judge of all, who knoweth the Uprightneſs and Integrity of my Intentions, will impute no Fault to me in this kind, ſince to my Knowledge I have carried my ſelf according to the Direction of his Word, and the Practice of all good Chriſtians, before theſe miſerable Times we are fallen into. My Exhortation therefore (which coming from one at the Point I am at, will, I hope, have ſome Weight) ſhall be this unto you, That you will break off your Sins by Repentance, and above all, free yourſelf of this Maſter Sin of Rebellion that reigneth in this Land; whereunto moſt Part are either forced or drawn away unawares, chiefly at the Inſtigation of thoſe who ſhould direct you in the Way of Truth. It cannot be but a great Judgment upon a Land, when God's ſingular Mercies towards it are ſo little valued: He hath not given us a King in his Wrath, but one for Piety, Bounty, and all Virtues, both Chriſtian and Moral, may be a Pattern to all Princes beſides.

How thankful we are to God for ſo great a Bleſſing, our Reſpect towards him manifeſteth: Yet I fear, there is a greater Judgment than this upon it, which occaſioneth all the Miſchiefs that afflict this poor Land, ſuch as was ſent upon Ahab: God hath put a lying Spirit in the Mouths of the moſt Part of your Prophets, who, inſtead of the Doctrine of Salvation, labour to draw your Hearts unto the Condemnation of Core. God Almighty look upon this poor miſerable Church and Kingdom, and relieve you out of the intolerable Servitude you lie under, which I do heartily wiſh for in your Behalf! So let me have the Aſſiſtance of all your Prayers, that God would be pleaſed to pardon all my Sins in Jeſus Chriſt, and gather my Soul with the Saints and Martyrs, that are gone to their Reſt before. So I bid the World and you Farewell.

Sir Robert was not diſturbed at the unmannerly Interruption he met with, when he was about to addreſs himſelf to the People; but turning from them, he wholly applied himſelf to his Devotions and Prayers to Almighty God. The ſame Miniſter then asked, if he would have him and the People to pray for the Salvation of his Soul? He made Anſwer, That he deſired the Prayers of the People, but was not ſollicitous for his Prayers, which he believed were abominable to God; for (added he) of all the Plagues with which the offended Majeſty of God had ſcourged this Nation, this was much the greateſt, (greater than the Sword, Fire, or Peſtilence) that for the Sins of the People, God had ſent a lying Spirit in the Mouth of the Prophets. With which Saying, this Preacher finding himſelf touched, fell into ſuch a Paſſion, that he could not forbear ſcandalous and contumelious Language againſt Sir Robert's Father, who had been long dead, and againſt himſelf, who was now dying; which this Gentleman took no Notice of, having his Mind fixed upon higher Matters. At laſt, with an undaunted Air, he advanced towards the Inſtrument of his Execution, and ſhewing no Alteration, either in Voice or Countenance, he laid down his Neck to the fatal Stroke, and uttered theſe his laſt Words, Merciful Jeſu, gather my Soul unto thy Saints and Martyrs, who have run before me in this Race!

All the Remarks I ſhall make on this Piece of Injuſtice and Tyranny are, That, when Uſurpers are ſucceſsful, the beſt and greateſt Men are treated as Malefactors, and the Laws that were made for the Protection of the People, are wreſted to their Deſtruction; and that no Tyrants are more inſupportable than thoſe who are animated by a blind Zeal for a falſe Religion.

The Trial of JOHN CROOK, ISAAC GREY, and JOHN BOLTON, Quakers, for not taking the Oaths, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 25th of June 1662. 14 Car. II.

1662. 14 Car. II.

A partial Narrative of the Quakers.

THIS is denominated a Trial in Conformity with the Editors of the 5th and 6th Volumes of Trials, who were pleaſed to call it ſo; but nothing diſcovers the Negligence or want of Judgment in thoſe that made that Collection, more than the binding up ſuch partial Narratives of the Parties themſelves among the State Trials: It conſiſts chiefly of inſolent Invectives againſt the Adminiſtration and Courts of Juſtice, and Complaints of their being diſturbed at one of their Conventicles, when the Laws prohibited ſuch Meetings: Of their being had before a Juſtice of Peace, then to the Seſſions of Hicks's-Hall, and afterwards before the Court of Gaol-Delivery at the Old-Baily, where the Oaths being twice tendered them, were as often refuſed, notwithſtanding the Court informed them, that by a ſecond Refuſal they incurred a Premunire.

They were then indicted on the 3 Jac. for not taking the Oaths, and being arraigned, refuſed to plead for ſome Time; but at length they pleaded Not Guilty, and Witneſſes being produced to prove their Refuſal of the Oaths, they cryed out, That Chriſt's Commands to his Followers were, Swear not at all, and were ſo noiſy and ſcurrilous, that the Court was compelled to order their Mouths to be ſtopped: At length, the Jury having brought them in Guilty, the Recorder read a Paper, importing, That the Jury having convicted them of not taking the Oaths they had incurred a Premunire, Which was a Forfeiture of all their real Eſtates for Life, and of their Perſonal Eſtates for ever, put them out of the King's Protection, and made them liable to be impriſoned during Pleaſure; and this was their Sentence: To which Crook anſwered, We are ſtill under God's Protection.

They are convicted, and ſentenced to have incurred a Premunire;

But the Brethren neglect to do the Government that Juſtice to declare, the Crown did not take the Forfeitures they had incurred, but was more merciful to them than their inſolent Behaviour deſerved.

But the Sentence not executed.

Proceedings of the Houſe of Lords and Commons in relation to their reſpective Privileges in the Caſe of CRISPE and DALMAHOY. Anno 1675. 27 Car. II.

Vote of the Commons.

THE Houſe of Commons Reſolved the ſame Seſſions, in the Caſe of Shirley and Fagg, That whoever ſhould appear at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords to proſecute a Suit againſt any Member of the Commons, during the Seſſion and Privilege of Parliament, ſhould be deemed a Breaker and Infringer of the Rights and Privileges of that Houſe: And that it was the undoubted Right of the Commons, That none of their Members be ſummoned to attend the Houſe of Lords, during the Sitting or Privilege of Parliament.

And Criſpe and others, having appealed to the Houſe of Lords againſt a Decree in Chancery, made in Favour of Mr. Dalmahoy, a Member of the Commons, and others, the Lords ordered the Cauſe to be heard on the 28th of May 1675, and Sir John Churchill, Mr. Serjeant Peck, Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, and Mr. Porter, were aſſigned Counſel for Criſpe, &c. by the Lords, and the Cauſe being accordingly heard at the Lords Bar on the 28th of May, the Petition and Decree were diſmiſſed.

Whereupon

1675. 7 Car. II

Whereupon the ſaid Counſel were ordered to attend the Houſe of Commons, and being called in and examined concerning their appearing at the Lords Bar, notwithſtanding the abovesaid Reſolutions of the Commons, the Counſel anſwered, That they had no Notice of the Order or Vote of the Houſe, but what they had heard in common Diſcourſe; and being aſſigned Counſel for the Criſpe by the Lords, and Mr. Dalmahoy putting in his Anſwer, and not inſiſting on his Privilege, they conceived, they might ſafely appear as Counſel, without Breach of the Commons Order, or invading the Rights or Privileges of the Houſe, which they never intended.

Serjeant Pemberton, and 3 Lawyers more, taken into Cuſtody by the Commons.

But the Counſel being withdrawn, the Commons ordered them to be taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms.

Reſolutions of the Lords communicated at a Conference.

A Committee of Lords afterwards, at a Conference with the Commons on the 3d of June, took Notice, that the Commons had ordered into the Cuſtody of their Serjeant, Mr. Serjeant Peck, Sir John Churchill, Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, and Mr. Serjeant Porter, Counſellors at Law, aſſigned by their Lordſhips to be of Counſel, in an Appeal heard at their Lordſhips Bar in the Caſe of Sir Nicholas Criſpe, againſt the Lady Bowyer, Mr. Dalmahoy and others; and inſiſted, that the Juriſdiction of the Lords in Parliament, where his Majeſty is higheſt in his Royal Eſtate, and where the laſt Reſort of judging upon Writs of Error, and Appeals of Equity in all Cauſes, and over all Perſons, is undoubtedly fixed, and permanently lodged.

It is an unexampled Uſurpation and Breach of Privilege againſt the Houſe of Peers, that their Orders or Judgments ſhould be diſputed, or endeavoured to be controuled, or the Execution thereof obſtructed by the lower Houſe of Parliament, who are no Court, nor have Authority to adminiſter an Oath, or give any Judgment.

It is a tranſcendent Invaſion on the Right and Liberty of the Subject, and againſt Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, and many other Laws which have provided, That no Freeman ſhall be impriſoned, or otherwiſe reſtrained of his Liberty, but by due Proceſs of Law.

This tends to the Subverſion of the Government of this Kingdom, and to the introducing of Arbitrarineſs and Diſorder:

Becauſe it is in the Nature of an Injunction from the lower Houſe, (who have no Authority or Power of Judicature over inferior Subjects, much leſs over the King and Lords) againſt the Orders and Judgments of the Supreme Court.

We are further commanded to acquaint you, That the Lords have therefore, out of that Juſtice which they are Diſpenſers of againſt Oppreſſion and Breach of Laws, by Judgment of this Court, ſet at Liberty by the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black-Rod, all the ſaid Serjeants and Counſellors, and prohibited the Lieutenant of the Tower, and all other Keepers of Priſons, and Goalers, and all Perſons whatſoever, from arreſting and impriſoning, detaining, or otherwiſe moleſting, or charging the ſaid Gentlemen, or any of them in this Caſe: And if any Perſon of what Degree ſoever ſhall preſume to the contrary, their Lordſhips ſhall exerciſe the Authority with them intruſted, for putting the Laws in Execution.

Proceedings of the Commons thereupon.

The Commons, notwithſtanding, ordered their Serjeant to go into the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall and take the ſaid Counſellors into Cuſtody again; and the Serjeant intimating he had obeyed the Order, they were committed to the Tower by the Speaker's Warrant: And it was ordered, that John Popham, Eſq; their Serjeant at Arms, ſhould be protected againſt all Perſons who ſhould moleſt him in the Execution of his Office.

And at a future Conference with the Lords, the Commons declared, they were ſurprized their Lordſhips ſhould aſſume a Power to judge the Orders of the Houſe of Commons for Impriſonment of Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, Mr. Serjeant Peck, Sir John Churchill, and Mr. Charles Porter, to be illegal and arbitrary, and the Execution thereof, a great Indignity to the King's Majeſty; with many other high Reflections upon the Houſe of Commons throughout the whole Conference, whereby your Lordſhips have condemned the whole Houſe of Commons as Criminal, which is without Precedent or Example, or any Ground or Reaſon ſo to do.

It is not againſt the King's Dignity, for the Houſe of Commons to puniſh by Impriſonment a Commoner that is guilty of violating their Privileges, that being according to the known Laws and Cuſtoms of Parliament, and the Right of their Privileges declared by the King's Royal Predeceſſors in former Parliaments, and by Himſelf in this.

But your Lordſhips claiming to be the Supreme Court, and that his Majeſty is higheſt in his Royal Eſtate in the Court of Judicature, there is a Diminution of the Dignity of the King, who is higheſt in his Royal Eſtate in full Parliament, and is derogatory to the Authority of the whole Parliament, by appropriating it to your ſelves.

The Commons did not by this Impriſonment infringe any Privileges of the Houſe of Peers, but only defend and maintain their own: On the other Side, your Lordſhips do highly intrench upon the Rights and Privileges of the Houſe of Commons, by denying them to be a Court, or to have any Authority or Power of Judicature; which, if admitted, will leave them without any Power or Authority to preſerve themſelves. As to what your Lordſhips call a tranſcendent Invaſion of the Rights and Liberty of the Subject, and againſt Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, and many other Laws; the Houſe of Commons preſume that your Lordſhips know that neither the Great Charter, Petition of Right, or any other Laws, do take away the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, or of either Houſe of Parliament; or elſe your Lordſhips have much forgotten the Great Charter, and thoſe other Laws, in the ſeveral Judgments your Lordſhips have paſſed upon the King's Subjects in Caſes of Privilege. But the Commons cannot find by Magna Charta, or by any other Law or ancient Cuſtom of Parliament, liament, that your Lordships have any Jurisdiction in Cases of Appeals from the Courts of Equity.

We are further commanded to acquaint you, That the Enlargement of those Persons in Prison by Order of the House of Commons, by the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod, and the Prohibition which threatens all Officers and other Persons whatsoever not to receive or detain them, is an apparent Breach of the Rights and Privileges of the House of Commons: And they have therefore caused them to be re-taken into the Custody of the Serjeant at Arms attending this House, and have committed them to the Tower.

The Houses proceeding to these Extreams, the King ordered them to attend him at Whitehall, on the 5th of June, when he told them, He was not to suffer these Differences to grow to Disorders in the whole Kingdom, if he could prevent it; and while they were debating about their Privileges, to suffer his own to be invaded. 1675. 27 Car. II.

The Lords then presented an Address to his Majesty, to remove the Lieutenant of the Tower for receiving the Lawyers into his Custody, that were committed by the Commons; but his Majesty answered, He did not see how he could in Justice remove him.

Afterwards the two Houses proceeded in their Debates on the Case of Shirley and Fagg, being of the same Nature, and already recited in this Work: And the King, perceiving there was no Likelihood of their accommodating their Differences, prorogued the Parliament, whereby the Lawyers obtained their Liberty.

Lord Maitland's Trial.

The Trial of CHARLES MAITLAND Lord Halton, Lord Treasurer Depute, for Perjury, at Edinburgh, before the Lords of the Articles, (a Committee of Parliament which prepares Business for the House) in July and August 1681. 33 Car. II.

1681. 33 Car. II.

The Charge.

THE Petition or Charge preferred by Mr. W. Noble to his Royal Highness the Duke of York, High Commissioner to the Parliament of Scotland, and the Lords of the Articles, against the Lord Treasurer Depute, was of the following Tenor, (viz.)

That whereas James Mitchel, deceased, being brought upon his Trial for attempting to assassinate the Archbishop of St. Andrew's, and his Confession before the Duke of Lauderdale, his Majesty's High Commissioner, being produced as Evidence against him, the said Mitchel in his Defence had affirmed, that his said Confession was made upon an Assurance given him of his Life, and called the said Charles Lord Maitland, Lord Treasurer Depute, as a Witness to prove it, who testified, That no Promise or Assurance of Life was given to the said Mitchel, notwithstanding the said Lord Maitland, by Letters under his Hand, had expressly wrote to the late Earl of Kincardine, That the said Mitchel had confessed, on Assurance of Life made to him. Whereupon it was prayed, That the said Lord Maitland, Lord Treasurer Depute, might be declared infamous, and suffer such other Pains as were appointed by Law in such Cases.

The Answer.

To this Charge the Lord Deputy answered, That to denominate it Perjury there ought to be two contradictory Oaths, whereas here is only an Oath said to be made four Years ago contradicting his Letters, which could not infer Perjury, but only an Error or Mistake in the Letters: That when he was convinced that he had been mistaken in his Letters, and was called to give Evidence of the Matter afterwards, it was his Duty to testify, according to his Knowledge and the Truth, though it contradicted his Letters, which only contained an indigested Account of News.

He answered further, That the Oath and the Letters were consistent, for Mitchel at first denied the Fact before the Council, though he afterwards confessed it privately to the Chancellor when he was withdrawn; and it was generally reported, till the Chancellor testified the contrary, that he had made that Confession upon an Assurance of Life, which was a sufficient Foundation for a Letter of News: But when he came to give Evidence, he could not testify he heard any such Confession, that being made in private before the Chancellor (if there was any made) and not before the Council, as the Letters themselves imported: From all which he observes, It was evident that the Charge was an unjust Calumny, and a scandalous Libel; and prays that he may be vindicated and assoiled from it, and the Calumniator be punished and declared infamous, according to the Demerit of his Crime.

Lord Maitland acquitted.

The Lords of the Articles having considered the Matter, declared the Lord Treasurer Depute to be innocent, desiring his Royal Highness, the High Commissioner, to lay the whole Affair before his Majesty, that the Treasurer might be vindicated, and the Author punished.

1684. 36 Car. II. The Trial between Neal and Ivy.

A Trial in Ejectment between THOMAS NEAL, Esq; Lessor of the Plaintiff, and the Lady IVY, Defendant, in the Court of King's-Bench, in Trinity-Term 1684. 36 Car. II.

1684. 36 Car II.

The Case. THE Case was this: Mr. Neale, the Lessor of the Plaintiff, claimed seven Acres of Land in Shadwell, as Lessee, of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, who had the Inheritance of those Lands; and the Defendant, the Lady Ivy claimed the same Lands as Part of Wapping Marsh, which had been dreined by one Vander-Delf, a Dutchman, who had one half of that Marsh, by Act of Parliament, conferred on him and his Heirs as a Reward for that Service. And one Stephens had purchased these Lands of the Dutchman, under whom the Lady Ivy endeavoured to make out her Title.

The sole Question was, Whether these Lands were Part of Wapping Marsh, or Part of the Dean and Chapters Estate in Shadwell? And it appearing that the Lady Ivy had forged several Deeds to support her Pretensions, Neale, the Plaintiff, obtained a Verdict: Whereupon an Information of Forgery was preferred against the Lady: But whether there were any Proceedings upon it does not appear.

This being a pure Civil Cause, and only the Trial of a Matter of Fact, which has no Relation to the State, and very little Law in it, I believe the Reader will be better satisfied with this short Abstract than if I had given him the forty folio Pages it takes up in the Collection of Trials. It is evident to me, that this was put in by the Direction of the Booksellers, purely to encrease the Bulk, and enhance the Price of the last two Volumes, there not being one civil Trial more, as I remember, in the whole Collection. By the same Rule they inserted this, they might have bound up a thousand more of the same Kind; and I don't doubt but they will in Time, if they think the Publick will take off such for the Sake of those that are really State Trials, or the Trials of Illustrious Criminals: This is a Misfortune we must submit to, when the Feet govern the Head, and Booksellers set up for Authors, or, which is the same Thing, to direct the Hands they employ, what shall be compiled, and what shall be omitted.

The Reader observes also, that this is very improperly called the Lady Ivy's Trial, as it is only a Trial of a controverted Title beween Party and Party.

An imperfect Piece. Nothing discovers the Sagacity of those Gentlemen who published the last Edition of State Trials more than their inserting so very imperfect a Piece as this.

They do not so much as furnish us with the Indictment against the Criminals, the Names of the Prosecutors or Witnesses, or so much as the Name of the Place where they were tried.

The Charge. WE are informed only that a great many People were arraigned for stealing Cows, at some Assizes in Ireland, and were acquitted for want of Evidence, the Witnesses being afraid to appear against them, least they should be murdered, or their Houses fired by Irish Papists.

But that the Person from whom the above-said Edmund Poor had stolen two Cows, appeared against him, and testified, that when he found his Cows in Poor's Custody, Poor paid him for them, who made it part of his Defence, that he paid the Prosecutor the Money upon Condition he should not trouble him.

Two Witnesses also testified against Maurice Cavenagh, that they found a Skean or Irish Dagger in his Custody, a Weapon prohibited to be worn by Irish Papists; and Cavenagh in his Defence said it was a Butcher's Knife, and when it appeared to be a Skean, Cavenagh said, that not only he but the Papists of every Parish were advised by their Priests to provide themselves with half Pikes and Skeans at this Time: But there being no Evidence of his stealing Cows, he was acquitted.

Bowland was convicted of stealing Cattle as well as Poor, and both of them praying the Benefit of their Clergy, the Chief Justice Keating directed the Ordinary, not to assist them in reading; and the Ordinary thereupon returning Non legit as to both of them, the Chief Justice pronounced Sentence of Death upon these two, telling them they must expect no Pardon; these Depredations being so common Kendal and Roe committed for an Eſcape.

Move to be admitted to Bail;

THE Priſoners Thomas Kendal and Richard Roe, were committed to Newgate by Mr. Secretary Trumbull, for being privy to, and aſſiſting the Eſcape of Sir James Montgomery, (charged with High-Treaſon) out of the Cuſtody of William Sutton, one of his Majeſty's Meſſengers: Whereupon they ſued out Writs of Habeas Corpus, and were brought before the Court of King's-Bench, on the 31ſt of October 1695, when their Council took Exception to the Return made by the Keeper of Newgate; for that a Secretary of State, or a Member of the Privy Council, could not commit any Perſon — They inſiſted further, that in Caſe a Secretary might commit, yet the Priſoners ought to be bailed by the Habeas Corpus Act, which provided, that Priſoners ſhould be bailed forthwith, unleſs they were committed for Treaſon or Felony, eſpecially expreſſed in the Warrant: And here the Nature of the Treaſon Sir James Montgomery was committed for, was not expreſſed, That where a Commitment was for Felony generally, the Priſoner ought to be bailed by that Act: Nor was the Eſcape of the Priſoner Felony, unleſs he was under a lawful Cuſtody, by a lawful Warrant, expreſſing the Offence; therefore, if the Party commanded receive, or the Perſon to whoſe Cuſtody he was committed was no lawful Officer, the Reſcuer was not guilty of any Capital Offence. It did not appear in this Caſe, what the Warrant was by which Sir James Montgomery was committed; nor was the Meſſenger, in whoſe Cuſtody he was, a lawful Gaoler: The Practice of making their Houſes Gaols was but of late Years, our Law-Books took no Notice of him as a legal Officer: Any Man indeed might be commanded to carry another to Priſon, but he did not become a Gaoler thereby, to keep him Nine or Ten Months in Cuſtody, and charge him with ſix Shillings and eight Pence a Day for his Lodging and Diet, as ſome Meſſengers had done: And if a Meſſenger could not legally detain ſuch a Priſoner, the Conſequence was, the Eſcape or Reſcue of ſuch Priſoner could not be either Treaſon or Felony.

becauſe the Eſcape was from a Meſſenger, and the Treaſon not ſpecially expreſſed.

Nor could the Reſcuer be tried till the Priſoner himſelf was firſt attainted: And in this Caſe Sir James was dead, having never been attainted or indicted, which rendered it impoſſible for the Priſoners to be tried for Treaſon; they as Reſcuers could only be fined and impriſoned, as this Caſe was; which was a further Reaſon for their being bailed.

The Reſcuer can't be tried, till the Priſoner is attainted.

To this the King's Counſel anſwered, That the reſcuing one in Cuſtody upon Suſpicion of Treaſon was Treaſon; and as to the Commitment by a Secretary of State, this was no Novelty; the Practice was very ancient, as appeared by 11 Leon. They had found in the Tower a Commitment alſo by Mr. Secretary Morriſon, in 1660, and there had been many more ſince.

Treaſon to reſcue one committed for Treaſon.

A Commitment to a Meſſenger held good;

The Chief Juſtice declared it to be his Opinion, that a Priſoner might be committed to any Man on his Apprehenſion for a convenient Time till he could be examined; but then he held, it ought to have been ſpecified in the Warrant for what Treaſon Sir James was committed; for the Eſcape would be of the ſame Species of Treaſon with that for which the Party reſcued was committed; and therefore they ought to be bailed.

but the Species of Treaſon ought to be expreſſed.

The Priſoners bailed.

The other Judges being of the ſame Opinion, the Priſoners were bailed.

Two Indictments.

THE Priſoner was tried on two Indictments; the firſt being for Perjury, in ſwearing before a Juſtice of Peace, of the County of Clare, That he was robbed of three hundred forty-five Piſtoles, and other Things of great Value, by four Perſons unknown, whereas he knew them very well, having concerted the Matter with them; neither did they take any thing from him but what was reſtored him.

The ſecond Indictment charged him with conſpiring deceitfully with one Daniel Hicky, and others, to oppreſs the Popiſh Inhabitants of the County of Clare, and cheat them of a great Sum of Money.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Dean Neptune, one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of Peace, depoſed, That the Priſoner made Affidavit before him, That on Sunday the 3d of March 1699, about Eleven o'Clock at Night, ſeveral Perſons unknown, with their Faces masked, broke into his Father's Houſe at Moughna, in the ſaid County of Clare, and forcing themſelves into the Priſoner's Chambers, ſhot at him, and tied him and his Friend Mr. Ronane, to the Bedſtead: That he took them to be Iriſh Papiſts by the Tone of their Voices, but he did not know their Perſons: That they broke open ſeveral Trunks, and out of one of them took a Bag of three hundred ſeventy-four Guineas, three hundred forty-five Piſtoles, a Gold Croſs ſet with Diamonds, and ſeveral other Things, the Whole amounting to about thirteen hundred Pounds.

Calaghan Carty, and ſeveral other Witneſſes teſtified, That the Priſoner propoſed their being concerned with him in this ſham Robbery, and that he (this Witneſs) was actually a Party in it: That the Guineas, the Priſoner pretended to loſe, were but Counters; and though they let off ſeveral Piſtols, they were Arms that belonged to the Houſe, and only loaded with Powder.

Others teſtified, That the Priſoner was in Debt, and propoſed by this Stratagem to raiſe a great Sum of Money on the Popiſh Inhabitants of the County of Clare, the late Rapparee-Act obliging the Papiſts to make good ſuch Loſſes where the Robbery was committed by Iriſh Papiſts.

His Defence.

The Priſoner's Counſel ſaid in his Defence, That he was known to be a Monied Man: That he brought a great deal of Money out of France, and had ſeveral large Sums returned lately from thence: That ſome Gentlemen had a Spite againſt him, and had influenced the Grand Jury not to find the Bill for the Robbery: And that the Witneſſes had been bribed and threatened to make them ſwear it a Sham Robbery, and then calling his Witneſſes,

The Priſoner's Witneſſes.

John Hurly, his Brother, depoſed, That he had received great Sums for his Brother from beyond Sea, and that Rewards had been promiſed to ſome of the Witneſſes on Condition they would ſwear it to be a Sham Robbery.

Dorothy Kemp, the Priſoner's Concubine, alſo teſtified, That ſhe was in the Houſe when the Robbery was committed: That ſeveral Piſtols were fired, and the Priſoner and others were bound by the Robbers, who carried off great Sums of current Money and other things; and that ſhe had been tampered with to lay counterfeit Money in the Houſe, to prove the Priſoner a Cheat.

Others depoſed, They had been promiſed Rewards, and threatened to ſwear it a Sham Robbery.

The Priſoner convicted.

The Jury giving no Credit to the Priſoner's Witneſſes, who had but indifferent Characters, after half an Hour's Receſs, brought him in Guilty upon both Indictments; and he was ſentenced to pay a Fine of One Hundred Pounds on the firſt Indictment. The King's Counſel afterwards moved for Judgment on the laſt Indictment, inſiſting, That the Pillory was the Puniſhment for a Cheat; but were anſwered by the Court, That it was ſo, in Caſe he was not able to pay his Fine: But what Judgment was given on the laſt Indictment does not appear in the Collection of Trials.

His Sentence.

1711. 10 Annæ.

Indictment THE Indictment charged, that on the firſt or ſome other Day of September then laſt paſſed, there having happened a Tumult in the Town of Dalkeith, betwixt ſome Dragoons quartered there, and the Town's People; and a Party of Dragoons having been ſent from the Guard, the Commander of the ſaid Party met the Deceaſed Henry Mac Millan Fleſher, in Dalkeith; and while he was diſcourſing with him, the ſaid William Haunt one of the Party, came behind the ſaid Henry Mac Millan and knocked him down with his clubbed Musket, he, the ſaid Henry having not given him the leaſt Provocation; of which Stroke the ſaid Henry Mac Millan died the Day after, whereby the ſaid William Haunt was guilty of Murder, and ought to be puniſhed with Death and Confiſcation of Moveables.

Evidence. The Witneſſes teſtified, that there was a Tumult at Dalkeith on a certain Evening in the Month of September then laſt paſſed; and that part of Sir Richard Temple's Regiment of Dragroons being quartered there, Serjeant Plunket went from the main Guard with a Party of Dragoons, among whom was William Haunt the Priſoner, to ſuppreſs the Tumult; and while the Serjeant with his Sword drawn in his Hand, was parlying with the Deceaſed Henry Mac Millan, (one of the Ringleaders of the Mob) a Dragoon came behind the ſaid Henry Mac Millan, and knocked him down with his clubbed Musket, and his Skull being fractured by the Blow, he died two or three Days after.

Verdict. The Jury being afterwards withdrawn, brought in a Verdict of the following Tenour, viz. That, having conſidered the Indictment at the Inſtance of Elſpeth Johnſon, Relict of the ſaid Henry Mac Millan Fleſher in Dalkeith, &c. againſt William Haunt, Dragoon in Sir Richard Temple's Regiment of Dragoons, the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, &c. They unanimouſly find it proved, that the Deceaſed Mac Millan was knocked down in the Streets of Dalkeith, by one of the Dragroons then preſent, with the Butt End of a Musket; and that the Wound he received was mortal; but they do not find that the Priſoner William Haunt gave the Blow: Whereupon the Court acquitted the Priſoner.

Proſecutors. THE Defendants were indicted at the Inſtance of Donald Mac Pherſon, Son of Malcolm Mac Pherſon, Merchant Drover, and Sir James Stewart, Her Majeſty's Advocate, for beating and bruiſing Her Majeſty's Subjects: The Indictment reciting, that the Crimes of violently beating and bruiſing the Leidges to the Effuſion of their Blood, and the wrongouſly ſtopping and hindering the Leidges in the uſe-making of the Ways or ordinary Routs for driving of their Cattle to Mercats, and not only hindering ſuch Cattle with Dogs, and Men on Horſeback, ſo violently, that the Cattle being ruſhed into Præcipies, became there-through utterly diſabled and deſtroyed; but likewiſe that the ſo Invaders, Moleſters, and Hounders, do at their own Hand, ſeize and away take, what of ſuch Cattle they think fit for their own Uſe; and all this in a moſt Maſterful Way of Oppreſſion and Robbery, are Crimes of a high Nature, and ſeverely puniſhable, eſpecially when tending to the Diſcouragement of that Branch of the Trade of this part of North Britain, that conſiſts in the driving of Black Cattle to the Southern Parts; and which kind of Trade muſt neceſſarily be given up, unleſs duly protected and ſecured againſt ſuch Maſterful Inſults and Abuſes. Nevertheleſs, true it was, and of Verity, that the ſaid William Laidly alias Scot, and the ſaid Walter Laidly his Brother, and the other Perſons above complained of are guilty, as Actors art and part of the foreſaid Crimes; in ſo far as upon the laſt Day

The Indictment.

1712. 11 Annæ. Day of Auguſt, 1ſt, 2d and 3d of September, or one or other of the Days of the ſaid Months of Auguſt or September laſt, the ſaid Complainer Donald Macpherſon, being in a peaceable manner with his Servants driving his Drove of Cattle towards England, was, upon that Place of the Road or Highway that is on the North Side of the Water of Tweed, near the Houſe of Moſsphennan, violently attacked and aſſaulted, about four or five of the Clock in the Afternoon, by the ſaid William Laidly of Moſsphennan, Walter Laidly his Brother, and other Perſons his Servants and Accomplices, their hounding Dogs at his Cattle, and violently beating and knocking down to the Ground with a Staff, the Perſon of Hugh Macqueen, one of the Complainers Servants, and did almoſt cut off the ſaid Servant his Finger with a ſhearing Hook; and not ſatisfied therewith, they the ſaid William Laidly of Moſsphennan, and Walter Laidly his Brother, or one or other of them, and their ſaid Accomplices, did violently aſſault the Complainer, by laſhing him with their Horſewhips, and then violently dragging the Complainer backward by the Hair from off his Horſe to the Ground, to the great Effuſion of his Blood, and Hazard of his Life, till reſcued out of their Hands by People that came from the other Side of Tweed, upon the Sight of ſuch barbarous Uſage; and which violent hounding of the Cattle, the ſaid William Laidly his Brother, and other of the ſaid Accomplices, not only continued and perſiſted in, ſeveral Miles, to the great wracking and Diſtreſs of the Cattle, by Reaſon of the Precipice and Steepneſs of ſome part of the Way, that eight of them were utterly diſabled and left to him the ſaid William Laidly to be accountable; therefore beſide that the ſaid William did at his own Hand violently ſeize upon, and away take ſix more of the prime and beſt of the Complainers ſaid Oxen or Cattle by way of plain Robbery, wherethrough, and the Loſs of the ſaid other Cattle ſo diſabled, the Complainer is damnified in no leſs than 42 l. Sterling, at 3 l. per Piece, being the Rate paid at the Engliſh Marcats, for the Remainder of the Complainer's Drove of that ſort: And this attour the loſs of 12 Head of Cattle more, that died of the ſaid Day's Streſs and Violence, before the Complainers Arrival at Carliſle: So that the Damages in all is no leſs than 78 l. Sterling, attour the perſonal Injury, as aforeſaid, done to the Complainer himſelf and his Servant. Of which Crimes of violent beating, bruiſing, wounding, and blooding the Complainer and his Servant, and wrongouſly moleſting him in his free Uſe of the Highway, and of wrongouſly hounding his Drove with Dogs as aboveſaid, and the diſabling and wracking of ſo many of his Cattle as aforeſaid, and robbing and plundering them as ſaid is, the forenamed Perſons, or one or other of them and their Accomplices, being found guilty as Actors, or art and part, by the Verdict of an Aſſize, they ought to be decerned, conjunctly and ſeverally, and in ſolidum, not only in the Sums aforeſaid, as the Value and Price of the Cattle, ſo robbed and diſabled by them, but likewiſe in the Sum of 100 l. Sterling more, in Name of Damages and Expence ſuſtained by the Complainer, and otherwiſe puniſhed in their Perſons, to the Terror of others to commit the like in Time coming. 1712. 11 Annæ.

Defence. William Laidly, alias Scot, and the reſt of the Defendants in Anſwer to this Charge, ſaid, That the Lands of Moſsphennan lye on the Side of the Water of Tweed, through which there lies a common Highway, from the North to Annandale and Carliſle; and that the Graſs or Paſture Grounds of Moſsphennan lies near the the ſaid Highway, through which the Proſecutor Donald Macpherſon driving Twenty Score of Black Cattle towards England, with about fifteen Servants, they treſpaſſed upon the mowing Graſs, and committed other great Diſorders, and that his Servants only ſet on or hounded a Dog to drive them off the ſaid Graſs; whereupon Macpherſon the Proſecutor drew a Piſtol, and threatned his People to ſhoot them, and they were forced to diſarm him in their own Defence; and acknowledges that he did alſo take ſome of the Proſecutors Cattle, to make him Satisfaction for the Damages they had done him, as he legally might; but that his Brother, the Defendant Walter Laidly, was grievouſly wounded in the Fray: and the Proſecutors were really the Aggreſſors, and the Occaſion of the Miſchief that was done.

The Evidence. The Witneſſes teſtified, that the Proſecutors were driving their Cattle peaceably along the ſaid Highway, and did not feed or commit any Treſpaſs on the Lands of the Defendant Moſsphennan (William Laidly), who notwithſtanding hunted the Cattle with the Dogs, drove ſome of them over Precipices whereby they were ſpoiled, and ſeized ſeveral more on pretence of Damages, which occaſioned the Fray between the Proſecutors and the Defendants, in which the Proſecutor Donald Macpherſon, was pulled off his Horſe, his Piſtol ſeized, and one of his Men ſeverely beaten.

Verdict. The Jury, having conſidered the Evidence, with one Voice find it proved, that Walter Laidly, one of the Defendants, and ſome others with Dogs, did begin to hound, or hunt the Proſecutors Cattle in the Highway; and that eight or nine of them were driven over a Precipice, whereby five or ſix were diſabled: They alſo find that the hounding or hunting was continued by the Defendant Moſsphennan (William Laidly), and ſome others, for four or five Miles; and that he did drive away and detain ſix of the Proſecutor's Cattle: They find alſo that the Defendant Walter Laidly did beat Macqueen, one of the Proſecutor's Servants; and that William Laidly did laſh the Proſecutor with a Horſe-Whip, pull him by the Hair, and dragg him backwards off his Horſe to the Ground, to the Effuſion of Blood, and that after he was upon the Ground, Breeden, one of the Defendants did beat him and ſeize his Piſtol.

Judgment. The Court of Juſticiary, having heard the Verdict, did adjudge, that the Defendants William and Walter Laidly, ſhould pay a Fine of 35 l. Sterling, viz. 30 l. to the Proſecutor Donal Macpherſon, for Damage, and 5 l. to 1712. 11 Annæ. the Uſe of Her Majeſty; and adjudged that the Defendant Moſsphenman (William Laidly) ſhould detain for his own Uſe the ſix Cattle he had ſeized for Damages, and the other Cattle left behind by the Proſecutor, allowing for the Expence of keeping: But that the ſaid Moſsphenman, (William Laidly) ſhould give 300 Marks Security, not to moleſt the Proſecutor, his Tenants or Servants for the future. And the Court acquitted and diſcharged the reſt of the Defendants. 1712. 11 Annæ.

1721. 8 Geo. I. Captain Henry's Trial.

The Trial of Captain MITFORD HENRY, Eſq; on the Statute of Stabbing, before Mr. Juſtice Powel, at the Summer-Aſſizes for the County of Nottingham, in the Year 1721. 8 Geo. I. 1721. 8 Geo. I.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charged, That the ſaid Mitford Henry, on the 24th of June then laſt paſt, at Elkeſley in the ſaid County of Nottingham, did felonioufly make an Aſſault on one John Barugh with a drawn Sword, giving the ſaid Barugh one mortal Wound of the Breadth of half an Inch, and of the Depth of eight Inches, the Sword entering at the left Shoulder of the Deceaſed, and coming out at his Left Breaſt; of which Wound the ſaid John Barugh then and there inſtantly died; and that the Deceaſed had no Weapon drawn, nor had ſtruck the Priſoner before the ſaid Wound was given.

The Caſe. The Caſe was this: The Priſoner, Captain Henry, riding Poſt into the North, was overtaken by the Deceaſed between Tuxford and Bautree, who asking the Priſoner the Road to Doncaſter, (which was the Road they were going) the Priſoner ſuſpecting the Deceaſed to be a Highwayman, directed him another Way, who thereupon left that Road; but finding, by Enquiry, he was wrong, returned, and put into the Road between the Priſoner and the Poſt-boy; whereupon the Priſoner run the Deceaſed through the Back: After which the Priſoner rode on five or ſix Miles, till he came to Bautree, where he went before a Juſtice of Peace, and procured a Hue and Cry after the Highwayman, as he called him: But the Caſe will be better underſtood by the following Evidence.

The Evidence. Mr. Wardman, a Gentleman of the Lord Weſtmoreland's, teſtified, That the Deceaſed being Nephew to his Lordſhip's Houſe-keeper, ſhe ſent for him into the Country, deſigning to make him her Heir, and he came down accordingly. And he (the Witneſs) carried him to the Houſes of ſeveral Perſons of Quality, and ſhewed him the Paintings and other Curioſities, the young Man having a Taſte for ſuch Things. And when he went from the Lord Weſtmoreland's, he went to viſit another of his Aunts in that Country, in which Journey he was killed upon the Road. That the Deceaſed was a timerous Man, and not likely to give any Offence, for he had neither Sword or Piſtol, or ſo much as Spurs, only a Whip in his Hand. The Witneſs offered him a Sword, but he would not accept of it.

Mr. Pymont, another of the Lord Weſtmoreland's Servants, teſtified, That the Deceaſed had neither Sword nor Piſtol when he went from his Lordſhip's Houſe; and that he behaved himſelf extremely well all the Time he was there.

The Poſt-boy teſtified, That as he was riding before the Priſoner, between Tuxford and Bautree, a Stranger (the Deceaſed) rode up to them upon the Gallop, and asked the Way to Doncaſter, and then turning out of the Way, and riding fifteen or ſixteen Score Yards, he returned towards them again upon the Gallop; and the Priſoner ſaying, He believed the Stranger to be a Highwayman, he anſwered, He was but a little one, if he was one; but the Stranger putting into the Road between the Priſoner and him (the Poſt-boy) he was ſcared, and rode on ſtill faſter; and having galloped together about ſix ſcore Yards, the Priſoner run the Deceaſed through the Body, who thereupon ſaid, Lord have Mercy upon me! What ſhall I do now?

The Priſoner demanded, If both the Poſt-boy and the Stranger were not better mounted than he was? To which the Boy anſwered, They were both better mounted; and the Priſoner ſuſpecting the Father of the Deceaſed inſtructed the Boy what to ſay, he ſaid, The Gentleman on the Judge's Left Hand made Signs to this Witneſs, he thought: But Mr. Barugh, the Father of the Deceaſed, proteſted he made no Signals to the Boy.

Then the Priſoner demanded, if there were not ſeveral other Tracks in the Road beſide that which they were in? To which the Boy anſwered, There were three Tracks. Being asked if the Stranger had Piſtols, he anſwered, He had only a Whip; adding, That the Priſoner, after he had ſtabbed the Stranger, (the Deceaſed) ordered him (the Poſt-boy) to ſay the Stranger had a Piſtol; or he would ſtab him where-ever he met him.

Being asked if he had not told any body that the Stranger had a Piſtol? he anſwered, Yes; he told Captain Tarborough ſo; but the Captain ſhook him, and ſcared him, and ſaid, He ſhould be hanged. He confeſſed alſo, That he had ſaid before the Juſtice that the Stranger had a Piſtol; which he did, becauſe the Priſoner had threatned to ſtab him if he did not.

The Priſoner demanded, If he did not enquire for a Juſtice of Peace after this Accident

1721. 8 Geo. I.

dent? To which the Poſt-boy anſwered, The Priſoner did; and he told him there were two at Bautree; and thereupon they rode thither; and Mr. Liſter took this Witneſs's Examination there: After which Mr. Liſter ſent back one with the Witneſs (the Poſt-boy) to ſee after the wounded Man, and make Hue and Cry after him.

Being asked if the wounded Stranger fell immediately? he anſwered, He rode about fifteen ſcore Yards after he was ſtabbed; and that when they came back from the Juſtice's with the Hue and Cry, there were abundance of People gathered about the Deceaſed.

Being asked if the Priſoner called any where to bid the People take Care of the wounded Man, the Poſt-boy anſwered, No, he did not, though there was a Town hard by.

Bradley, the Conſtable of Elkesley (the Pariſh where this Accident happened) teſtified, That the Place where the Deceaſed was killed, was in Sight of Elkesley, and not above twelve ſcore Yards from it: That he went to ſee the Corps at Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, upon Midſummer-Day, being about half an Hour after this Accident happened; but did not ſee any Arms the Deceaſed had.

Thomas Smith, another Poſt-boy, teſtified, That he rode Poſt before the Priſoner between Mansfield and Nottingham, and becauſe he did not carry the Priſoner the Road he liked, he damned him, and ſaid, He deſerved to be ſtabbed; and he would have been glad to get clear of him.

Other Witneſſes teſtified, That the Deceaſed was an honeſt inoffenſive Man, and a Perſon of excellent Senſe, and that being ſent for into the Country by his Aunt, he bought him a Horſe in London for five Guineas. Upon which the Counſel for the Proſecutors obſerved, He was but ill equipped for a Highwayman, mounted upon a Horſe of Five Guineas Price, and without either Sword or Piſtol.

The Priſoner's Defence.

Then the Priſoner, in his Defence, ſaid, My Buſineſs calling me into the North about five Weeks ago, I ſet out on the 23d of June in the Cambridge Stage-Coach, and got thither about Nine that Evening. I had with me a Warrant for Poſt-horſes and Guides as far as Durham, whither I was going to ſolicit my private Affairs, but was unfortunately prevented by this unhappy Accident. On Saturday the 24th, between Twelve and One at Noon, I got to Taxford, and alighting at the Poſt-houſe there, ordered freſh Horſes to be got ready, and going into a little Room to cool my ſelf, I ſaw Mr. Robinſon the Poſtmaſter, who told me I ſhould loſe no Time (while the Horſes were getting ready) if I would refreſh my ſelf with a little Victuals that was then upon the Table; upon which I did ſit down with Mr. Robinſon and five or ſix other People, and in that Time went to the Door two or three Times to look after my Portmanteau, and order it to be brought in, there being Things of a conſiderable Value in it: And after I had ſtayed there half an Hour, and paid Eighteen Pence for what I had, I was told the Horſes were ready, upon which I immediately mounted, and purſued my Journey; and when the Boy and I had rode near two Miles, we were overtaken by a Perſon unknown, who came up full Speed between me and the Boſt-boy (who had my Baggage behind him) and asks the Boy, Sirrah, do you know me? and, upon the Boy's telling him No, ſaid, that's well enough: And then perſwading the Boy to ride a Race with him, endeavoured, by whipping his Mare, to force him on. When we came near to Taxford-Bridge, the Deceaſed turning to me, asks, Sir, are you going to Doncaſter? To which, from the Suſpicion I had already conceived of him, I anſwered, I was not. After this, the Deceaſed continued whipping the Boy's Mare, and bid him ride on, but coming to the parting of the Roads to Doncaſter and Workſop, the Deceaſed galloped as faſt as he could up the Road to Workſop, whilſt the Boy and I kept on our Way in the Doncaſter Road; which the Deceaſed perceiving, after he had galloped about fifteen ſcore Yards in the Road he had taken, turned ſhort and quitted it, purſued me and the Poſt-boy croſs the Common as hard as his Mare could carry him; and perceiving him coming again towards us in ſuch a Manner, I declared my Apprehenſions to the Poſt-boy, That I feared he was a Highwayman; to which the Boy anſwered, that he'd warrant him a Rogue, and adviſed me to ride on as faſt as the Horſes would carry us; but the Deceaſed being better mounted, came up with us, croſſing ſeveral Tracks; upon which I pulled my Horſe a little, and let him come in between me and the Poſt-boy, who were within two Horſe-length of each other, and began again his whipping the Boy's Mare, and forcing him on. This confirmed the Suſpicion I had entertained of him, that he was a Highwayman, and that his Deſign was to force the Boy away with my Portmanteau, in which, my Lord, was in a manner my All; and I called out to the Boy to ſtop, to ſee if the Deceaſed would leave us; but the Boy anſwered he could not. After ſome time the Boy recovered the Command of his Mare, which gave me (who was the worſt mounted) an Opportunity of coming up, when I diſcovered the Deceaſed to pull ſomething out of his Pocket on the Right Side, which he held to the Boy, and bid him ride on; at which the Boy looked back, called out to me, Oh, Sir! Come on, come on! whereupon the Deceaſed turned towards me, and I perceiving a Piſtol in his Hand, rode at him, and the Deceaſed's Mare being fretted, turned again, which gave me an Opportunity of wounding him. The Deceaſed then rode backwards towards Elkesley, and after a little turned again: And I hope upon ſuch ſuſpicious Behaviour of the Deceaſed, what I did cannot be thought to proceed from any previous Malice towards him.

After this, I told the Boy I had wounded him, who anſwered, He's a Rogue, to be ſure: And I bid the Boy ride on to the neareſt Juſtice of Peace. Immediately after the Accident, I ſaw a Man under an Hedge, who I thought might be a Confederate of the Deceaſed, and having my Sword in my Hand, I told him I had wounded a Highwayman, and bid him go and ſee what became of him: We told it alſo to ſeveral other People we met, particu-particularly at Ruſſia-Inn, where I ſtopt to enquire for a Juſtice of the Peace, and was informed there was none nearer than Bautree, (the Stage I was going) whither I made all the haſt that I could, and alighting at Mr. Liſter's Houſe, I acquainted him with what I had done, and ſurrendred my ſelf.

But Mr. Liſter being in Court, I deſire he may be heard.

The Priſoner's Witneſſes.

Mr. Liſter teſtified, That the Priſoner came to him on the 24th of June, informed him, he had wounded a Highwayman, and deſired him to take the Poſt-boy's Examination, which he did; and the Boy gave his Evidence plainly and freely, and was not prompted by the Priſoner, or any Body; which Examination was read in Court, being of the following Tenour.

The Poſt-boys Examination read.

The Information of William Glaſeby of Tuxford Poſt-boy, before Thomas Liſter, Eſq; this 24*th of* June 1721.

William Glaſeby, aged about thirteen Years, Servant to Mr. Robert Robinſon Poſt-maſter of Tuxford, depoſeth, That as he was riding with a Gentleman, this preſent Saturday the 24th of June 1721, from his Maſter's Houſe at Tuxford towards Bautree, a certain Perſon unknown to the Deponent, did ride up to him in the Lane near Houghton-Park, and bid him put on ſeveral Times, and whipped his Mare, and perſuaded him to ride a Race with him; which he refuſing, he continued riding ſtill along with him, and asked the Gentleman (with whom this Deponent was going to Bautree) if he was going to Doncaſter; and upon his ſaying he was not, the ſaid unknown Perſon turned-up another Road, leading towards Workſop; but perceiving that this Deponent, and the ſaid Gentleman, kept on the direct Road towards Bautree, he left the Road he had taken, and purſued this Deponent and the Gentleman with him, as hard as his Horſe would carry him; and getting between this Deponent and the Gentleman, this Deponent perceived a Piſtol in the Hand of the ſaid unknown Perſon, upon which he called out to the Gentleman, O, Sir! Come on, come on! And the ſaid Gentleman coming up to the ſaid unknown Perſon, did, as this Deponent believeth, give him a Wound with his Sword: But the ſaid unknown Perſon did, after that, purſue the Deponent, and the ſaid Gentleman, a little Way, and then turned, and this Deponent knows not what became of him after, but rid on with the ſaid Gentleman to Bautree, who went immediately before Thomas Liſter, Eſq; one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace, to give him an Account of the Matter; and this Deponent did verily believe the ſaid unknown Perſon was a Highwayman, and had a Deſign to rob the ſaid Gentleman, who gave no Manner of Diſturbance to the ſaid unknown Perſon, before he drew his Piſtol, but rode peaceably on the Road.

Then the Priſoner deſired the Court would obſerve the Difference between the Information the Poſt-boy gave before the Juſtice, and the Evidence he gave in Court.

Captain Tarborough alſo teſtified, That the Poſt-boy related the Fact to him as it was in the Information. 1721. 8 Geo. I.

Mrs. Murphin, who kept the Poſthouſe at Bawtry, teſtified, That the Poſtboy told her the ſame Story.

Mr. Reresby, who went back with the Poſtboy, to find the wounded Man, and make Hue and Cry after him, by Mr. Liſter's Order, teſtified, That the Boy gave him the ſame Account as in the Information; that the Boy heard the Information read over, and ſaid it was true: Being asked, if he was ſure the Boy ſaid, That the deceaſed had a Piſtol? he anſwered, Yes.

The Fact having been committed in Nottinghamſhire, and Mr. Liſter thinking it proper the Poſt-boy ſhould give another Information before the Juſtices of Peace of that County, the following Information was taken before Brigadier Sutton, John Digby, and Leonard Pinkney, Eſqrs; Juſtices of Peace of the County of Nottingham, on the 25th of June 1721, viz.

Another Examination of the Poſt-boy.

This Deponent ſaith, That on Saturday the 24th of this Inſtant June, he came out from his Maſter's, Mr. Robinſon's, the Poſtmaſter of Tuxford, with a Gentleman, to ride Poſt with him to Bautree, that the ſaid Gentleman and this Deponent rid along the Road till they came to Houghton Bridge, near Elkeſley, at which Place the Deceaſed Perſon asked the Gentleman if he was going to Doncaſter? to which the Gentleman anſwered, No: Whereupon the Deceaſed put before the ſaid Gentleman, and asked this Deponent, if he knew him, then went paſt this Deponent, and rode up the Road leading to Workſop; but ſeeing the ſaid Gentleman and this Deponent continue in the Road to Bautree, he came riding down a Ley, and as hard as he could, to meet the ſaid Gentleman and this Deponent, in the ſaid Road to Bautree; whereupon the ſaid Gentleman ſaid to this Deponent, that he feared the ſaid Deceaſed was a Highwayman: That the ſaid Deceaſed came up with the ſaid Gentleman and this Deponent, whereupon this Deponent's Mare that he rode on, run away with him, which he believes ſhe did from the Deceaſed's whiping his Mare, for that till that Time ſhe had not run away with him upon the Road before: And this Deponent ſaith, that as his Mare was running away, he looked behind him, and ſaw in the Deceaſed's Hand ſomething beſides a Whip, which he thought was a Piſtol; upon which this Deponent was affrighted, and called to the Gentleman to come on, and thereupon the Gentleman came up to the Deceaſed, and he ſaw the Gentleman's Sword in his Hand, but cannot ſay he either ſaw him run it into the Deceaſed's Body or pull it out; and this Deponent ſaith, that afterwards the Deceaſed turned towards Elkeſley, but immediately turned back again towards the Gentleman and this Deponent, and galloped after them about fifteen Score Yards, and the Gentleman bid this Deponent put on as faſt as he could; and what became of the Deceaſed afterwards, this Deponent knows not: And this Deponent ſays, that he did not appre-

1721. 8 Geo. I.

apprehend there was any Quarrel betwixt the Gentleman and the Deceaſed.

Mr. Pinkney, one of the ſaid Juſtices of Peace teſtified, That the the Coroner ſaid It was plain wilful Murder, before he heard the Evidence or had ſeen the Body.

Glaſeby, the Father of the Poſt-boy teſtified, That his Son told him he thought the Deceaſed was an Highwayman.

Then the Earl of Litchfield, the Lord Baltimore, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality teſtified, That the Priſoner was a ſober, modeſt, peaceable Man, not given to Quarrel.

Mr. Croe, teſtified, that he ſaw the Priſoner's Portmantua packed up, and there were in it twelve Shirts, and other Linnen, a ſuit of black Cloaths, a Diamond Ring, a Gold Watch, ſome Gold, Bills for 200 l. and the Writings of his Eſtate.

Obſervations of the King's Counſel.

Then the Counſel for the Proſecutor obſerved, That it was very ſtrange the Deceaſed ſhould be taken for a Highwayman, having no Arms and uſing no threatning Language: At this Rate, any Man might be run through the Back upon the Road. It was plain the Boy was terrified by the Captain and his Friends, to ſay what he did before the Juſtices of Peace, by that Expreſſion, That he did not know what became of the Deceaſed; for he had owned he knew what became of him, That he cryed out, Lord have Mercy upon me, when he fell, and afterwards he ſaw him lye dead in a Barn at Elkeſley; and if his Evidence was different, greater Regard was to be had to what he teſtified in Court, than what he ſaid under the Terror and Surprize he was in, before the Juſtice of Peace; and admitting the Latter was to be believed, even thoſe Informations did not ſhew there were any Threats or Violence uſed by the Deceaſed, that could juſtifie the running him through the Back in ſo barbarous a Manner, and then leaving him to periſh without taking any Manner of Care of the wounded Man, though he fell in the Priſoner's Sight. The Priſoner might have gone to Elkeſley, a Town juſt by, and have enquired for a Juſtice of Peace, and needed not have travelled five or ſix Miles farther to meet with one; but this he did, that he might have an Opportunity of terrifying the Poſt-boy, and inſtructing him what to ſay. It was evident the Deceaſed had no Arms, for none were found upon him after he was dead.

The Coroner's Evidence.

The Coroner depoſed, That the Boy teſtified before him, that the Priſoner threatned him, and he might ſay when he came to Elkeſley, that if the Fact appeared to be as it was repreſented to him, it was wilful Murder; but a Jury was ſworn, and the Witneſs fairly examined before any Verdict was given: Here the Boy's Examination before the Coroner was read, and was as follows, viz.

William Glaſeby, a Boy of thirteen Years of Age, &c. Guide to a Gentleman that was riding Poſt, ſweareth, That, as they were riding towards Bautree, at a Place called Twiford Bridge, a Gentleman unknown came galloping after them, and, at the Place aforeſaid, came up and asked the Gentleman that was riding Poſt, if he was for Doncaſter? and the Gentleman anſwered No: Then the Perſon unknown rode forward without ſaying any more, and took up the Road that led to Elkeſley; but when he ſaw the Poſter and the Boy in another Road, he turned down a Ley Land, into the Road that the Poſter was in, and galloped after the Poſter; and when the Poſter ſaw the deceaſed coming towards them again, he ſaid to the Boy, It is well if this Fellow be not a Highwayman: And further the Boy ſaith, the Poſter ſtopped, and came behind the Man deceaſed, and took an Opportunity to draw his Sword, and ſtabbed the Deceaſed a little below his left Shoulder, and out at his left Breaſt (as appeared by the Wound when viewed by the Jury). The Boy ſays the Sword was bloody from the Point, within a Hand's Breadth of the Hilt, and that this was done in Elkeſley Field, where the Deceaſed was found; and further the Boy ſays, that when this was done, the Poſter came up to him with his Sword in his Hand all bloody, and bid him ride on faſter, and did not put up his Sword untill he came to a little Houſe called Ruſſia-Inn; and further the Boy ſays, that as they rode along, the Poſter came up to him, and ſaid, Sirrah, did not you ſee a Piſtol in yonder Fellow's Hand? and the Boy anſwered he did not; but Sirrah, ſaid he, if you do not ſay that you ſaw a Piſtol in his Hand, I will ſtabb you whereſoever I meet you; and further the Boy ſays, that the Poſter as they rode along, kept telling him what he ſhould ſay when he came before a Juſtice of Peace; and when they came at Bautree, he had the Boy before Thomas Liſter, Eſq; one of his Majeſty's Juſtices, to be examined; but the Boy upon Oath ſays, that he was ſo frightned, knowing that the Poſter had ſtabbed the other Gentleman, that he durſt not ſpeak the Truth, becauſe he had ſo threatned him of his Life, if he did not ſay as he had told him, and when they came before Mr. Liſter, the Boy owns he did ſay, that he ſaw a Piſtol in the Deceaſed's Hand; but what he ſaid there, he owned was out of Fear of the Poſter, becauſe he was there preſent; but now he actually declares that what he ſwore there, was not true upon the Piſtols account, for he ſays, that he did not ſee any Piſtol in the Deceaſed's Hand, and he fully believes, that he had nothing in his Hand but his Hand-Whip: And further the Boy ſays, that the deceaſed Gentleman gave no manner of Abuſe to the Poſter, nor ſaid any Thing to him, either more or leſs, when he came up to him the ſecond Time, but, he thought, had a Mind to ride along with them to Bautree, he being a Stranger to the Road.

The Coroner being asked Whether this was drawn up when he took the Inquiſition, or afterwards from his Minutes? the Coroner anſwered, from his Minutes afterwards; and being asked for his Minutes, ſaid they were at Home.

Then the Judge reproved the Coroner for not drawing up the Inquiſition when he took it, but truſting to his Minutes, which ought never to be practiſed in ſuch Caſes.

The Priſoner's Counſel obſerved afterwards, That, if the Evidence the Poſt-boy gave before the Juſtices of Peace was true, the Caſe did not come within the Statute of Stabbing;

1721. 8 Geo. I.

for by this Evidence it appeared the Deceaſed had a Piſtol in his Hand, which was equivalent to the having a Weapon drawn.

Judge Powel's Directions to the Jury.

Judge Powel proceeding to ſum up the Evidence ſaid, That the Deceaſed by his imprudent Conduct in galloping up to the Priſoner, and then coming up a ſecond Time and putting between him and the Poſt-Boy, had given Ground of Suſpicion, and he ſhould in the like Circumſtances have thought his Pocket in Danger, and might have been tempted to ſtrike ſuch a one; but the Stabbing him was a raſh Action: However he directed the Jury to bring it in common Manſlaughter, and not Manſlaughter upon the Statute, which was Felony without Benefit of Clergy.

The Jury being withdrawn, after a ſhort Receſs, brought in the Priſoner guilty of Murder; but the Judge telling them, That could not be upon this Indictment, the Priſoner being indicted on the Statute of Stabbing, the Jury ſaid, they found him Guilty of the Charge in the Indictment: But the Judge prevailed on them at length to find the Matter ſpecially for the Opinion of the Judges; and as Mr. Juſtice Powel himſelf was of Opinion, the Fact was but common Manſlaughter, I preſume his Brethren were of the ſame Opinion, which brought off the Captain; for though the Widow of the Deceaſed lodged her Appeal, this could not affect the Priſoner, after he was adjudged to have been guilty of Manſlaughter; though the Appeal would have lain, if the Priſoner had been acquitted.

Charge.

THE Information charged the Priſoners with the Murder of Hugh Frazer the younger, of Belnain, Merchant of Inverneſs, in Manner following, viz.

That on the 4th of June laſt, the ſaid Hugh Frazer being then with ſome others, all them unarmed, in an open Boat upon the High-Seas off the Shore of Nairn, in Proſecution of their lawful Buſineſs, and offering Violence or Diſturbance to no Man, were made up to by the Cuſtom-Houſe Boat, having on Board ſeveral Perſons, and amongſt theſe the Pannels (the Priſoners) who upon their firſt Appearance were diſcovered to be armed with Guns ſcrewed Bayonets, and which Guns afterwards appeared to have been charged, and were then cocked and levelled againſt that Part of the other Boat where the Defunct ſtood: That upon the two Boats coming cloſe together, and ſo ſoon as the ſaid Thomas Mac Adams and James Long came within reach, without giving the leaſt Intimation of their Deſign, other than what was to be dreaded from their outward Appearance, and without demanding or endeavouring to force Admittance into the other Boat, the firſt Salutation given, was a Thruſt by each of the ſaid Pannels with their ſcrewed Bayonets againſt the Defunct, who then unluckily happened to ſtand on the Side of the other Boat oppoſite to them; though at the ſame Time it is ſaid in the Libel, and will be proved, that how ſoon the two Boats came ſo near as to be in ſpeaking Terms, the Defunct called out to the Pannels to uſe no Violence, and not to fire, for that he and the others in Company with him were in their Will: Notwithſtanding of which, the Pannels in Execution of their premeditate Malice, and contrary to the Advice of their own Companions, did without the leaſt Provocation, Reſiſtance, or ſo much as attempting to board the other Boat, begin the Attack in manner libelled, and by theſe two Thruſts would then have undoubtedly bereaved the Defunct of his Life, had he not found means to evade the Thruſts, at the ſame time catching hold of the two Guns, and holding them up, ſo as to prevent Miſchief in caſe they had diſcharged them; and in the Struggle, which enſued upon this, the two Pannels endeavouring to pull away and recover the Guns, and the Defunct having his Gripe, the Cuſtom-Houſe Boat being then on float, the Defunct was either pulled or forced to ſtep into the Cuſtom-Houſe Boat, not daring to let go his Hold of the Guns, and ſtand in Chance of other two Thruſts; in which Struggle, or by the Motion of the Boats, all the three fell to the Ground: Whereupon the ſaid Thomas Mac Adams did deliberately unſcrew the Bayonet from off his Gun, and therewith gave the Defunct a mortal Wound in the Breaſt, of which he immediately fell down, and probably would have died: But the Pannels, not ſatisfied with the Barbarity already committed, and in further Proſecution of their premeditated Deſign to Murder, did in a moſt cruel and barbarous manner, toſs the Defunct, then in a helpleſs Condition, over board into the Sea; and upon his catching hold of his own Boat, and endeavouring ſo to ſave himſelf from drowning, the Pannel James Long ſtruck him down with his Gun with ſuch Violence, that the Iron Ram-rod was broke by the Force of the Stroke; of the which Wound and Stroke the Defunct died in a few Minutes, being taken up up into his own Boat. From all which the Libel concludes moſt relevantly, That the Pannels and each of them are Guilty, Actors art and part of the Crime of Murder with which they are charged, and ought therefore to underly the Pains of Law.

Defence. The Pannels (the Priſoners) in their Defence ſaid, That they bore no Malice to the Deceaſed, nor had any Intention to kill him, or any Perſon whatever: And ſhould it be proved, as they believed it would not, that any Stroke or Blow was given by either of them to the Deceaſed, of which he might afterwards die; it was done in their juſt and lawful Defence, and conſequently was not Murder.

The Libel found Relevant. The Judge of the Admiralty having conſidered the ſaid Libel (or Charge) and the Pleadings thereupon, find the Libel, That the Pannels (the Priſoners) or either of them, did kill Hugh Frazer, Relevant to infer the Pains of Death, and Confiſcation of Moveables: And ſuſtain the Defence of Self-Defence proponed by the Pannels, That the killing the ſaid Hugh Frazer by the Pannels, or either of them, was in the neceſſary Defence of their Lives, and repells the whole other Defences proponed by the Pannels.

Evidence for the Proſecutors. The Witneſſes for the Proſecutors teſtified, That the King's or Cuſtom-Houſe Boat came up with the Boat wherein the Deceaſed Hugh Frazer was, on the 4th of June laſt: That in Frazer's Boat there were thirteen Men, and in the King's Boat ſeven Men and three Soldiers, whereof the Priſoners Thomas Mac Adams and James Long were two: That when the two Boats met, the Priſoners had their Bayonets ſcrewed upon their Muskets, and levelled them towards that Part of the Boat where Hugh Frazer ſtood; whereupon he called out to the Soldiers not to fire, for that he and the reſt in the Boat with him were at their Wills; but the Soldiers never the leſs threatned to fire: Whereupon Hugh Frazer ſtanding on the Side of his Boat, took hold of the Muzzles of the Muskets in the Hands of the ſaid Long and Adams, and they endeavouring to diſengage their Pieces, pulled Frazer into the King's Boat, when a Wave of the Sea raiſing up the King's Boat, they all three fell down in the Bottom of it, and Frazer happening to fall upon Long the Corporal, and Mac Adams by the Side of Long, he ſaid to Mac Adams, Why don't you ſtick or ſtab the Man above me? and thereupon Mac Adams unſcrewed his Bayonet from the Muzzle of his Piece, and thruſt it into Hugh Frazer's Breaſt, who getting up after he had received the Wound, Long alſo got up after him, and puſhed Frazer over the Boat-Side into the Sea, and as he was falling Long ſtruck him with that Violence with his Musket, that the Iron Ram-rod and the Stock was broke; and that Hugh Frazer being taken out of the Water died immediately after: That this Violence occaſioned ſome to ſtep out of Frazer's Boat into the King's Boat to prevent further Miſchief, and one Kinman took a Blunderbuſs out of the Hand of Mr. Townſhend a Land-Waiter, and threw it into the Sea: But before the Soldiers wounded Hugh Frazer, no Perſon went on Board the King's Boat, or offered to make any Defence, but ſubmitted to the King's Officers; nor was there any other Arms on Board Frazer's Boat but two or three Swords, and a broken Piſtol.

1735. 9 Geo. II

Other Witneſſes depoſed, That when the King's Boat came near Frazer's Boat, Hugh Frazer called to the Soldiers to uſe no Violence, for they were willing to permit thoſe in the Cuſtom-Houſe Boat to ſeize what Goods were on Board; however, when the King's Boat lay aſide the other Boat, the Soldiers, who had their Muskets cocked, and Bayonets ſcrewed upon them, puſhed at Hugh Frazer with their Bayonets, who catching hold of the Muskets that were in the Hands of the Priſoners Long and Adams, they endeavoured to diſengage and recover their Muskets, and in the Struggle pulled Hugh Frazer into the King's Boat, who was killed in the manner the former Witneſſes teſtified.

Another Witneſs depoſed, That there were on Board the Boat where Hugh Frazer was, nine Hogſheads and a broken half-Hogſhead: That the half-Hogſhead contained Wine, but what Liquor was in the other Hogſheads he knew not; but they were taken in at Tarbatneſs, and were intended to be landed on the Murray Side of the Frith, near the Place where Frazer's Boat was when the King's Boat came up with them.

Witneſſes for the Priſoners. On the other hand, a Witneſs called by the Priſoners (who was one of the Crew belonging to the Cuſtom-Houſe Boat) teſtified, That when the King's Boat approached the Boat where the Deceaſed Hugh Frazer was, ſome of Frazer's People threatned to do thoſe in the King's Boat a Miſchief, if they came any nearer; and as ſoon as the King's Boat came up cloſe to the other Boat, Hugh Frazer jump'd into the King's Boat, and laid hold of the Priſoners Muskets which they held in their Hands, with the Butt Ends in the bottom of the Boat; and before this there was no Violence or Thruſts offered by the Soldiers, for Townſhend the Land-Waiter had cautioned the Soldiers to offer no Violence: That Hugh Frazer ſeizing the Muskets in the Soldiers Hands, occaſioned a Struggle, in which all three of them fell to the bottom of the Boat; and that during this Scuffle, one Mackinnan, who belonged to Frazer's Boat, entered the King's Boat with a Piſtol, with which he ſtruck Townſhend the Land-Waiter over his Head, and inſulted him till two others in the King's Boat came to his Aſſiſtance, and wreſted the Piſtol out of Mackinnan's Hand, and blew the Prime out of the Pan, the Piſtol being whole and prepared for firing: Adding, that the Deceaſed Hugh Frazer fell over-board after he got up; but he did not ſee the Soldiers uſe any Violence to him which could occaſion it.

Townſhend the Land-Waiter himſelf depoſed, That the King's Boat coming up with Frazer's Boat on the 4th of June laſt, he (the Deponent) required Acceſs to Frazer's Boat, but was refuſed and threatned by ſome of Frazer's People, if they attempted to come on Board; and that Hugh Frazer jumped out of his own Boat into the King's

Boat

1735. 9 Geo. II.

Boat, and ſeized the Muskets in the Soldiers Hands, as the laſt Witneſs depoſed, and all three fell to the bottom of the Boat; and during this Struggle Mackinnan alſo entered the King's Boat and knocked him (the Witneſs) down with a Piſtol, and abuſed him till two in the King's Boat came to his Aſſiſtance, and wreſted the Piſtol from Mackinnan; and that two others entered the King's Boat with Mackinnan.

That Hugh Frazer received a Wound in his Breaſt, of which he died; but how he came by that Wound, or who gave it him, he knows not.

William Ogilvy, Tide-Surveyor of the Cuſtoms at Inverneſs, teſtified, That he applied to Captain Cofield of Colonel Hamilton's Regiment, to allow him a Corporal and two Soldiers to go on Board the King's Boat, having received Information that a Ship was expected upon the Coaſt, wherein were ſome run Goods; and thereupon Captain Cofield gave Orders that Corporal Long, Thomas Mac Adams, and John Broad ſhould wait the Deponent's Orders, and go on Board the King's Boat when required; and that he thereupon ordered them to go on Board the King's Boat.

John Broad the Soldier depoſed, That he was ordered on Board the King's Boat with Long and Adams, as the laſt Witneſſes teſtified; and that the King's Boat coming up with the Boat in which was the Deceaſed Hugh Frazer and ſome other Merchants, the Cuſtom-houſe Officers were refuſed Acceſs, and threatned if they attempted to board Frazer's Boat; and when the King's Boat came cloſe to them, the ſaid Hugh Frazer jump'd on Board the King's Boat: And that he (the Deponent) was attacked at the ſame Time by ſome of the People of Frazer's Boat, who endeavoured to wreſt his Arms from him; and during this Struggle, he did not obſerve what became of Hugh Frazer and the other two Soldiers.

Two more of the Crew belonging to the King's Boat confirmed the Teſtimony of the two laſt Witneſſes.

Then Brigadier John Moyle, Commander in Chief of the Forces in North-Britain, depoſed, That he had Orders to command the Troops there, that they ſhould, when required, give Aſſiſtance to the Officers of the Revenue in ſeizing of Goods offered to be run: And that when a Soldier upon his Duty is invaded, and an Attempt made to diſarm him, if ſuch Soldier ſhall willingly part with his Arms, and not uſe his beſt Endeavours to have the free Uſe of them, ſuch Soldier is liable to be puniſhed with Death, by a Court Martial.

Major Mordecai Abbot, and Major Edward Pole, confirmed the Evidence of the Brigadier.

Verdict. The Jury having duly conſidered the Evidence, unanimouſly find it proved, that the Pannels (the Priſoners) Thomas Mac Adams, and James Long, are both Guilty, art and part, of killing Hugh Frazer; and by Plurality of Voices do not find the Defences for the ſaid Pannels proved, viz. That the killing the ſaid Hugh Frazer was in the neceſſary Defence of their Lives.

1735. 9 Geo. II.

Sentence of Death.

Whereupon the Judge of the Admiralty paſſed the following Sentence, viz. That the ſaid Thomas Mac Adams and James Long, be taken from the Tolbooth at Edinburgh, to the Sands of Leith, within the Flood-Mark, on the third Wedneſday of November next, being the 19th of the ſaid Month, betwixt the Hours of Two and Four in the Afternoon, and there hanged by the Neck on a Gibbet till they be dead; and ordains all their Moveables, Goods and Gear, to be eſcheat, and in brought to his Majeſty's Uſe.

The Priſoner's petition the Court of Juſticiary to ſuſpend the Sentence.

The Priſoners James Long and Thomas Mac Adams, appealing to the Court of Juſticiary againſt this Sentence of the Court of Admiralty, ſet forth, That the ſaid James Long was Corporal, and the ſaid Thomas Mac Adams a Centinel in Colonel Archibald Hamilton's Regiment of Foot, which at the Time mentioned in the Indictment lay at Inverneſs, and were ordered by their Superiour Officers to go along with certain Officers of the Cuſtoms in the Execution of their Duty, and for the Diſcovery of Goods ſuppoſed to be run: That upon the 4th Day of June laſt in the Afternoon, the King's Boat, on Board of which the Complainers were, gave Chaſe to, and came up with a ſmall Boat wherein the Defunct Hugh Frazer was with ſeveral others: That the Officers having demanded Acceſs to ſearch the Boat, the ſame was not only refuſed, but certain Perſons in the other Boat threatned, that if the Officers did not leave them, they ſhould meet with a Miſchief: That the King's Boat with ten Men on Board, having come up along the Side of the other Boat in which there were a greater Number of Men (they being, as it now appears, Thirteen in all) the Deceaſed Hugh Frazer did without any Provocation jump into the King's Boat, and did immediately catch hold of the Muzzles of the two Pieces in the Hands of the two Complainers, thereby endeavouring to diſarm them; that in this Struggle the Complainers endeavouring to keep their Arms, and the Deceaſed to diſarm them, all the three fell to the bottom of the Boat: That the Defunct was, preſently after his jumping into the King's Boat, followed by three other Perſons from the other Boat, one of which, Evan Mac Kinnan, knocked down one of the Officers with the Butt End of a Piſtol which he brought with him, and wreſted a Blunderbuſs out of the Hands of the ſaid Officer, and threw the ſame into the Sea, and the others attacked the other Perſons in the King's Boat, and would in all Probability have been followed by all thoſe aboard the other Boat; and that poſſibly the Defunct might receive a Wound in this Scuffle. And further the Complainers repreſented, That by the Statute 14 Car. II. cap. II. Officers of his Majeſty's Cuſtoms and their Deputies, are authorized to go aboard any Ship or Veſſel to ſearch for, and ſeize prohibited and uncuſtomed Goods, as the ſaid Act particularly directs, and a Penalty is thereby inflicted upon every Perſon who ſhall reſiſt, abuſe, beat, or wound any Officers in the Execution of their Office, or ſuch as ſhall act in their Aid or Aſſiſtance, either on Board any Ship or Veſſel, or upon the

1735. 9 Geo. II.

the Land or Water. And likewiſe by the ſame Statute Sect. 3. it is enacted, That all Officers belonging to the Admiralty, Captains and Commanders of Ships, Forts, Caſtles, and Block-houſes; as alſo all Juſtices of the Peace, Mayors, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Conſtables, Headboroughs, and all the King's Magiſtrates, Officers, Miniſters, and Subjects whatſoever, whom it may concern, ſhall be aiding and aſſiſting to all and every Perſon or Perſons, which are or ſhall be appointed by his Majeſty to manage his Cuſtoms, and their reſpective Deputies in the due Execution of all and every Act and Thing, in and by this Act required and enjoined; and all ſuch who ſhall be aiding and aſſiſting unto them in the due Execution thereof, ſhall be defended and ſaved harmleſs by Virtue of this Act: All which Particulars ſtand further confirmed by the Writs of Aſſiſtance granted to the Officers of his Majeſty's Cuſtoms, and which very Writs are founded upon the above-recited Statute, and the other ſubſequent Acts of Parliament which are relative thereto; and where a Number of Men enter by Violence, any Houſe or Ship to diſarm the Perſons within or on Board, and deprive them of their Liberty, they cannot know what further Violence was intended to them; and therefore at this Attempt the Right of Self-Defence begins. From all which the Complainers concluded, That, as the King's Boat was unlawfully invaded, they who were aboard of the ſame, might reſiſt the Invaders, eſpecially ſeeing they had Reaſon to be afraid of their Lives, after being maſtered and diſarmed; and did therefore crave, That the Court would ſuſtain their Defence ariſing from the Facts above-mentioned, viz. That they being aboard the Cuſtom-houſe Boat, in order to give their Aſſiſtance to the Officers of the Cuſtoms in the Execution of their Duty, the Boat was forcibly invaded and entered into by the Defunct and his Accomplices, and all or ſome of the Perſons therein violently attacked; and that in their ſaid Scuffle the Slaughter mentioned in the Libel enſued, Relevant to Aſſoilzie the Complainers: Notwithſtanding whereof, the ſaid Judge did pronounce the above-ſaid Interloquitor, and remit them and either of them with the Libel and Defence, and the ſeveral Circumſtances and Qualifications of the Defence, and the Facts alledged on by the Purſuers for the eleiding thereof to the Knowledge of an Aſſize, and has alſo ſince pronounced Sentence of Death againſt the Complainers: From all which their Reaſons of Suſpenſion will manifeſtly appear. For Primo, It might eaſily appear by the Fact, as laid in the Libel, that this Homicide was, at the very worſt, Homicidium in Rixa commiſſum; and ſeeing by the many Circumſtances which accompanied it, it might be Relevant upon the Proof, that there was no Malice even antecedent to the Blow; and therefore this Libel ought not to have been ſuſtained to infer the ordinary Pain, unleſs it had been burdened with a Proof of the Deſign of killing. 2*do*, The Relevant Defence above-mentioned, pled for the Complainers, was repelled by the ſaid Interloquitor, ſeeing nothing was ſuſtained to them but ſingly this Defence, That the killing the ſaid Hugh Frazer by the Pannels or either of them, was in the neceſſary Defence of their Lives, and their other Defences were repelled: Whereas it ought to have been explicitly ſuſtained to them, That, the Boat in which they were being forcibly and violently invaded, and they in the utmoſt Danger of being diſarmed and deprived of their Liberty, they were at Liberty to repel Force by Force, though this ſhould terminate in the Death of the Aggreſſor; in the ſame Manner as a Man attacked on the the Highway or in his Houſe, may lawfully defend his Poſſeſſion, if the Aggreſſor obſtinately perſiſts in his Invaſion; wherefore the Interloquitor ought not to have been reſtricted to the neceſſary Defence of their Lives, ſeeing they were entitled to repel Force by Force, by reaſon of the unlawful Invaſion of the Boat and of their Arms; nor were they bound to abandon either the one or the other, though they had not been in any immediate Danger of loſing their Lives. 3*tio*, By circumſcribing the Defence to the Caſe of the neceſſary Defence of their Lives, an Inqueſt might be led to believe, That a reaſonable Fear for their Lives, ſuch as the Complainers were then under, was not within the Deſcription of the Interloquitor, and thereby the Complainers might be deprived of the Benefit of what Proof they might adduce for their being under ſuch reaſonable Fear. And 4*to*, This is ſtill the moſt unjuſt with Regard to the Complainers, that by the Military Law they were liable to the Pains of Death for Cowardice, and abandoning their Duty, if they had ſuffered themſelves to be diſarmed without being overpowered by a ſuperior Force, which would have been the more ignominious in their Caſe, they being in that particular Struggle two againſt one; ſo that That Part of their Defence, that they were upon their Duty, ought to have been ſpecially ſuſtained to them, ſeeing otherwiſe they might have ſuffered Death for neglecting their Duty, and Death for doing it: And the ſaid Lords had undoubted Juriſdiction to ſuſpend Decreits and Acts pronounced in the High Court of Admiralty, in Cauſes Criminal upon Relevant Grounds of Iniquity.

1735. 9 Geo. II.

The Court of Juſticiary having conſidered the ſame Appeal and Premiſſes, Decreed that the Judge of the Admiralty had committed Iniquity, in reſtricting the Defences proponed for the Appellants, to the neceſſary Defence of their Lives, and repelling the hail other Defences proponed for them; and therefore the ſaid Court of Juſticiary did ſuſpend the Interloquitor on the Relevancy, the Verdict returned by the Aſſize, and the Sentence pronounced by the ſaid Judge, with all that might follow thereupon; and diſcharged the Magiſtrates of Edinburgh, and all other Officers in the Law, from putting the ſaid Sentence of Death in Execution in all Time coming. The Sentence ſuſpended.

The ſaid Court alſo, upon the Petition of the Priſoners, did, with the Conſent of his Majeſty's Advocate, order them to be ſet at Liberty, The Priſoners diſcharged.

1735. 9 Geo. II. The Priſoners diſcharged.

Liberty, upon their giving 300 Marks Bail to anſwer any Indictment that ſhould be exhibited againſt them, by his Majeſty's Advocate, within the Space of ſix Months; and they found Bail accordingly, and were ſet at Liberty.

1736. 10 Geo. II. Trial of Porteous.

The Trial of JOHN PORTEOUS, Captain-Lieutenant of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, for Murdering, Slaughtering, Maiming, and Wounding divers of his Majeſty's Subjects, before the Court of Juſticiary at Edinburgh, in the Month of July, 1736. 10. Geo. II.

1736. 10 Geo. II.

Indictment. THE Indictment charges the Pannel, (the Priſoner) with murdering, ſlaughtering, maiming and wounding his Majeſty's Subjects, by firing with his own Hand, and ordering a Band of armed Men under his Command, to fire upon a Multitude of Innocent People, aſſembled to ſee an Execution in the Graſs-Market of Edinburgh, on the 14th of April then laſt paſt.

It ſets forth more particularly, That at the Time and Place aforeſaid, a Multitude of innocent Perſons, of all Ages and Sexes, being aſſembled to ſee the Execution of Andrew Wilſon, who was ſentenced to be hanged; the Priſoner having under his Command a Detachment of 70 armed Men, of the City-Guard, and having conceived a wicked and malicious Purpoſe of deſtroying, maiming, and wounding the Inhabitants of the ſaid City, and others aſſembled to ſee the Execution; without any juſt Cauſe or Neceſſity, ordered the ſaid Detachment under his Command, to fire upon the People ſo aſſembled; and ſome of his Men firing over the Heads of the People (as he thought) he with Threats and Imprecations repeated his Commands, calling out to them to level their Pieces and be damned; and at the ſame Time levelling his own Piece at one Charles Husband, fired at him, and killed him on the Spot: And that by his Command and Example, ſeveral others of the ſaid Guard, fired upon the ſaid Multitude, whereby ſeveral of the Perſons hereafter ſpecified, were killed, maimed, and wounded. And the Indictment further charges, That the Priſoner not contented with this, after he had marched off his Detachment to the Street, called the Weſtbow, ordered his Men to face about and fire upon the People, and at the ſame Time fired again with his own Hand; and ſeveral of the Guard firing by his Example, the reſt of the Perſons mentioned in the Indictment were killed and wounded: The Perſons killed at theſe ſeveral Firings being ſix in Number, viz. The aboveſaid Charles Huſband, Archibald Balantine, John Anderſon, Alexander Mackneil, Margaret Gordon, and Henry Graham; and eleven Perſons were wounded, viz. Margaret Arthar, Jane Peat, David Wallace, James Philp, David Kidd, Patrick Spalding, James Lyle, Alexander Wallace, John Miller, David Ogilvie, and James Nivan: And the Indictment concludes in the Scots Form, that the Pannel was Guilty, or Actor, Art and Part, of the Crimes aforeſaid, or one or other of them.

The Defence of Porteous.

To which Indictment the Pannel (Porteous) pleaded Not guilty; and though conſcious of his Innocence, he could, he ſaid, ſafely reſt his Trial upon the Denial of the Facts, and upon ſuch Proof as he ſhould bring that he was no ways Inſtrumental in the killing or wounding the ſaid Perſons, but did all that was in his Power to prevent and reſtrain the ſaid firing upon the Multitude; yet, as he was adviſed by his Counſel not to omit or abandon any Defence that was competent to him in Law, and by the Law of Scotland, the pleading to an Indictment upon ſuppoſed Facts was no legal Submiſſion of ſuch Facts, and he was at liberty to plead any other Exception that lay againſt the Form of the Indictment; or even to plead, that though ſuch firing had proceeded from his Order or Example, yet, even in that Caſe, ſuch firing and the Conſequences thereof was not ſufficient to ſupport the Charge.

Then his Counſel deſired Leave, before they entred upon his Defence, to ſtate his Caſe and offer a ſhort Relation of what they apprehended to be the Cauſe that the Execution of the ſaid Andrew Wilſon, was attended with ſuch an unuſual Confluence of People, and was ordered to be guarded and overſeen by ſuch a numerous and unaccuſtomed armed Force.

They ſaid, That Andrew Wilſon, along with one Robertſon and others, had been ſentenced to Death by their Lordſhips, for robbing one of the Collectors of his Majeſty's Revenue, of conſiderable Sums of the Money of the Publick; and while they lay under this Sentence they were allowed as uſual to go to the Church adjoining to the Priſon for the Benefit of Divine Service, under the Cuſtody of a ſmall Detachment of the City-Guard. And while the Convicts were thus at Church, Robertſon, one of them, found means to eſcape from his Keepers of the Guard, by ſuddenly jumping over a Pew, and getting out of the Door of the Church; his Retreat apparently being favoured by the Mob, or loweſt ſort of the People, he eaſily made his Eſcape, without having been ever ſince overtaken.

From this Eſcape of Robertſon's, ſo favoured by the Mob, and from ſtrong Surmiſes and Suggeſtions

1736. 10 Geo. II.

Suggeſtions that, at the Execution of Wilſon, a Reſcue was intended by the Mob, which indeed there was a reaſonable Ground to apprehend, becauſe the Commons had imbibed a pernicious and abſurd Conceit, as if the Robbing of the Publick Money was a Crime more pardonable than a private Robbery: Therefore it was, as the Pannel apprehended, that the Magiſtrates of the City, from a Senſe of their Duty, to prevent the Execution of the Laws being any further defeated by the Reſcue of Wilſon, took the ſtrongeſt Precautions that the Execution of him ſhould be made effectual.

In Conſequence whereof, as would ſeem, the Provoſt of the City ſent for the Pannel, in whom, he muſt take the Liberty to ſay, Confidence was generally put, upon thoſe difficult Occaſions, and told him, That there being great Apprehenſions of a Mob at Andrew Wilſon's Execution, that therefore there was a Neceſſity to be well prepared to prevent their Deſigns; and for that End, that he would have the whole City-Guard to attend at the Execution, he having given Orders to the Town-Treaſurer to furniſh the Men with Powder and Shot, and ſuch other Military Ammunition as might be neceſſary for the Uſe of the Men in maintaining the Peace of the Town, and ſupporting the Execution of the Laws. And this Conference with the Provoſt happened upon the Monday preceeding the Execution of Wilſon, which followed on the Wedneſday thereafter. But it ſeems the Magiſtrates of the City not thinking even this Precaution ſufficient, upon the Tueſday thereafter, the Provoſt ſent the Pannel with a Letter to General Moyle, reſiding near the City, and Chief Commander of the Forces in Scotland, telling the Pannel, that the Import of this Letter was to deſire from the General an Order for a Party of the Regiment, lying in the Cannon-Gate, to enter the City, (a Thing very uncommon, except in the Caſe of urgent Neceſſity) in order to over-awe the Mob, and thereby maintain the Peace, during the ſaid Execution.

It ſeems this Letter to the General induced him to ſend a verbal Meſſage in return thereto, by a Perſon of known Honour and Veracity, Major Pool, of that Regiment, now lying in the Cannon-Gate, who told the Provoſt, that the General wanted to know of him what Part the King's Troops were to act, and what Precautions had been taken for preventing any Inſult or Invaſion that might be made upon the Troops, or what Length theſe Troops might go in the Caſe of Tumult or Diſturbance. To which the Provoſt made Anſwer, That there was no Reaſon to apprehend any Inconveniency would happen to the King's Troops, becauſe he would have them only to parade for a Terror to the Mob, in a Street called the Lawn-Market, removed from the Sight of the Execution, but at a ſmall Diſtance only, where nevertheleſs they would be ready at a Call in caſe of Neceſſity: But that he had ordered the whole Band of the City-Guard to attend at the Execution itſelf, with proper Arms and Ammunition, namely, Slug-ſhot, with Orders to repel Force by Force, and even to diſcharge their Arms among the Mob in Caſe of Reſiſtance.

1736. 10 Geo. II.

On Wedneſday, the Day of the Execution, in the Forenoon, the Pannel attended the Provoſt and told him, That in Obedience to his Commands, the Men were all ordered to be in Readineſs, their Arms put in Order and loaded, whereof the Provoſt approved, and told the Pannel that he was to be ready betwixt two and three in the Afternoon, with his Guard, and not to draw out until the Party of the King's Troops from the Cannon-Gate paſt him, and that ſo ſoon as the King's Troops were drawn up in the Lawn-Market, the Pannel with the City-Guard ſhould forthwith March to the Priſon, and conduct the Priſoner to the Place of Execution, without allowing him firſt to go to the Town's Council-Houſe as uſual; ſtill with Intention, as would ſeem, to prevent an Opportunity of Reſcue or Diſturbance upon that Head. And at this Time in the Forenoon, the Pannel humbly propoſed to the Magiſtrates of the City, that they would ſend a Proclamation through the Town, as a Caution to ſuch innocent unwary People as might by Curioſity be drawn to the Sight of the Execution, warning them of their Danger in Caſe any Diſturbance ſhould happen, or Attack be made upon the Guard. And accordingly George Lindſay, one of their Clerks, made a Scroll of the ſaid Proclamation, to be ſent through the Town; but for what Reaſon it was not proclaimed, the Pannel knows not. And at the ſame Time the Pannel remembers ſome one or other of the Common-Council of the City, propoſed, in Caſe of Diſturbance, the reading of the Riot-Act; and for that purpoſe, ſent for a Dozen Copies of the Act to a Bookſeller's Shop, in order to diſtribute them amongſt the proper Officers of the Law authoriſed to read and proclaim ſuch Act: But it ſeems at no Time either of theſe Propoſals were put in Execution; nor at the Time of the ſaid Execution, did any Officer of the Law, authorized to proclaim ſuch Act, attend with the Pannel.

That the Pannel having no Cartridges in his Box when he mounted the Guard, a Corporal furniſhed him with three, with one of which he loaded his Piece, and marched away to Priſon, from whence he conducted the ſaid Wilſon to the Scaffold, and ſurrounded the Place with his Detachment.

The Criminal was no ſooner turned off the Ladder, but the City-Bayliffs withdrew, leaving no Officer of the Law to attend with the Pannel: Whereupon the Mob became troubleſome, intending, as he apprehended, to cut down the Criminal and recover him by bleeding, for they preſſed hard upon the Guard, ſtriking them with Sticks, ſeizing their Fire-Arms and Bayonets, and throwing great Stones, one of which cut a Drummer to the Skull, another broke one of his Men's Shoulder-Bones, a Third wounded one of his Men in his Legs, and ſeveral more were wounded and diſabled to do their Duty.

This Inſolence encreaſing, the Pannel ſent a Meſſenger to the Bayliffs, to know if he ſhould ſuffer the Criminal to be cut down, (for no Criminal can be cut down from a Gibbet, but by Order of a City-Bayliff); and they anſwered, he was to hang a Quarter of an Hour more.

Then

1736. 10 Geo. II.

Then the Mob grew very turbulent, and while he was endeavouring to keep them off at one End of the Scaffold, they broke in at the other, and cut the Criminal down; in which Attack it was that ſo many of the Guard were wounded, which ſo alarmed the Pannel, that he confeſſes he did take his Piece and level it at the Mob, threatning to fire amongſt them if they did not leave off attacking his Men, and throwing of Stones: However, he immediately recovered his Piece and did not fire; but one of his Men ſtepped forward immediately after, and paſſing by the Pannel diſcharged his Musket; upon which one of the Crowd dropped, ſuppoſed to be Charles Husband, who cut the Criminal down: Another of the Guard near him was going to fire, but the Pannel forbid it, and ſtruck down his Piece; but ſeveral of his Men that were at a Diſtance from him, upon hearing the firſt Shot, fired their Pieces, and he apprehending Miſchief was done, ordered his Men to march off, and was followed by ſome of them in a very diſorderly manner, and he ordered the Serjeants to bring off the reſt, but heard ſome dropping Shots ſtill fired in the Rear; but all this firing from firſt to laſt, by which ſo much Miſchief was done, laſted not above two or three Minutes: Conſidering therefore the Violence of the Mob, and the ſtraggling Situation of the Men of the Guard, they left it to the Court, Whether the Pannel could well have done more for the Safety of the Burgh, having given repeated Orders to the Guard, as would be proved, to reſtrain them from firing, and when he found thoſe Orders ineffectual, marching off his Men with Precipitation? And it was evident to thoſe who ſearched his Piece before the Council, after the Buſineſs was over, that it had never been fired that Day.

The Pannel's Counſel alſo obſerved, That he had often been ſingled out as the fitteſt Perſon to maintain the Peace of the City, by quelling Tumults, and had never diſcovered any imprudent Raſhneſs or cruel Temper hitherto, but had expoſed his Perſon to very great Danger rather than involve the City in Blood, or proceed to Extremities, even when the Law would have entirely juſtified him; nor was it a new Thing for the private Men of the City-Guard, to take upon them to fire without the Command of their Officers; of which he gave ſeveral Inſtances.

That they might be prompted to fire at this Time, partly by Reſentment, Robinſon having eſcaped from them as aforeſaid, and partly from the general Order they heard given by the Magiſtrate, to fire in Caſe of Reſiſtance; for ſeveral of them were heard to ſay before they went to Wilſon's Execution, that now they had got Arms and Ammunition, they would not fail to uſe them, in Caſe they were attacked.

They obſerved further, That, as the Pannel had been employed many Years as the Scourge of the Mob, this might be the Occaſion of drawing on him the Reſentment of the lower ſort of People.

Then the Counſel proceeded to anſwer the Particulars charged in the Indictment: And firſt as to Malice; it could not be preſumed, they inſiſted, that he had any Malice againſt a Multitude of People, of whom he had no Knowledge; it was rather to be ſuppoſed, he proceeded on a Principal of Duty in maintaining the Peace of the Place, and ſupporting the Authority of the Law, and guarding the Execution, which was committed to him by lawful Authority.

In the next Place it was objected, That the Indictment was not laid with ſufficient Certainty, the particular Places in the Street, where the Facts were charged to have been committed, not being ſpecified.

It was objected further, that the attacking the Guard by the Mob was ſo violent, many of the Men being bruiſed and wounded while they were doing their Duty, that the Reſiſtance the Guard made was juſtifiable and agreeable to former Precedents; and then they inſtanced in ſeveral Caſes where ſome had been killed on the like Provocation, and the Authors of their Deaths juſtified by this High Court, particularly in the Caſe of the Centinel who killed Hugh Frazer and ſome others, which was laid before the Lords when the Caſe of Porteous was under their Conſideration, and immediately precede this Trial.

If it was alledged, that the Execution was over before any Tumult or Diſturbance was made by the People, and therefore the firing at them was perfectly unneceſſary; the Counſel for the Pannel anſwered, That the Execution of the Pannel's Duty could not be ſaid to be at an End till the Criminal was actually dead, and ordered to be cut down by lawful Authority; unleſs it was the Pannel's Duty, the Moment the Convict was hung up, to let him be cut down and brought to Life by the Mob, who plainly ſeemed to have that Intention; and the preventing this was evidently the Occaſion of the Scuffle: Nor could it with any Juſtice be affirmed, that the Pannel was not in the Execution of his Duty while he and his Guard remained upon the Spot under Arms; for every Perſon was upon his Duty while he was either going to or coming from any lawful Expedition; the Pannel therefore, and the Men under his Command, were in the lawful Execution of their Duty, until they returned and were diſmiſſed from Duty, and then indeed they were reduced to a private Capacity.

They obſerved further, That the Protection of the Hangman, who had received ſeveral Wounds, and was in Danger of being torn in Pieces by the Mob, was a Part of the Pannel's Duty: How then could it be ſaid, that the Pannel could only plead Self-Defence in Excuſe of what was done?

A private Man indeed, when aſſaulted, muſt retire as far as he can with Safety; but if that was the Caſe of the City-Guard; if they were to betake themſelves to their Heels as ſoon as they were invaded, they were maintained for very little Purpoſe: It would be ſtrange if a Guard, kept for the Maintenance of the Peace of the Capital City, ſhould be allowed to plead no higher Privilege than that of Self-Defence in the ſtricteſt Senſe, when they were upon Duty; this muſt be great Diſcouragement ment to Perſons in the Service of the Crown or Common-wealth.

And as the Supreme Executive Power was veſted in the King, the Lord Advocate would do well to conſider, how far ſuch an Argument, if preſſed againſt the Pannel, muſt tend to weaken, and even defeat, the Execution of the Laws.

It was rather to be preſumed, that where a Perſon was entruſted with the Execution of the Laws, the ſmalleſt Inſult or Aſſault of him was Criminal; and that every Oppoſition to ſuch an Aſſault was lawful, becauſe no Man was above the Laws; and the Life of the Laws, in which the common Good was concerned, was of more Importance than the Life of any one Man or Number of Men, and ſo ought to be defended at all Hazards: Nor could there be any Inſtance given in this or any other Country, where a Perſon proceeding to Extremities againſt thoſe who aſſaulted him while he was acting in Execution of the Laws ever ſuffered the Pains libelled.

It had been inſinuated indeed, that the Pannel ought to have read the Riot-Act, whereby the innocent part of the Multitude might have had Time to take Care of their own Safety: But it was to be conſidered, that no Perſon was authorized to read that Act but a Juſtice of Peace, Sheriff, Mayor, Bailiff, or Head Officer; and no Perſon under any of theſe Characters was left with the unfortunate Pannel; but he was abandoned, and left to grapple with Occurrences in the beſt manner his own Diſcretion could ſuggeſt to him.

They ſhewed further, That the reading of the Riot-Act would not have anſwered that Exigency; for he muſt have ſtood with his Hands a-croſs an Hour after the reading that Act, before the Mob would have been expoſed to the Penalties contained in it.

They conclude, That if the Pannel was guilty of the Charge, as laid in the Indictment, they were themſelves of Opinion he deſerved to ſuffer; but if on the other hand it ſhould appear he was entirely innocent of the Blood of thoſe Men wherewith he was charged, they thought his Caſe deſerved ſingular Compaſſion; for if Bonds and Impriſonments, Loſs of Employment and Bread, Obloquy and Reproach of Blood, Guilt and Maſſacre, and conſequently Loſs of Character, be Calamities in Human Life, then had he had as great a Share of them as ever attended Innocence.

The Reply of his Majeſty's Advocate.

To this Defence of the Pannel's Counſel, the Lord Advocate replied, That the Libel was as particular as the Law required, deſcribing the Street where the Execution was had.

And though it was true, that the Magiſtrates, upon juſt Apprehenſion of Diſorders, and an Attempt to reſcue the Criminal who was ſentenced to die, had ordered Powder and Ball to be diſtributed to the Guard; had obtained the Aſſiſtance of the regular Troops, with an Aſſurance, that, in Caſe of Neceſſity, they ſhould be ordered to fire, and had directed the Pannel at all Hazards to ſupport the Execution, and prevent a violent Reſcue, and told him, that in Caſe of Neceſſity he was to repel Force by Force; thoſe Orders did not juſtify him, except there had been a Neceſſity, except there had been an Attempt to reſcue the Criminal, which could not have been otherwiſe prevented, and unleſs all proper Precautions for diſſipating the Mob otherwiſe had been previouſly uſed to authorize his firing.

1736. 10 Geo. II.

That no Order from the Civil Magiſtrate, if any ſuch had been given, could juſtify ſo horrid a Barbarity as the firing upon innocent People; nor was he bound to obey ſuch illegal Orders:

But he had no Orders to fire, unleſs Violence, or an Attempt to Reſcue made it neceſſary; and it was a cruel and unjuſtifiable Act to make Uſe of Weapons that were put into the Hands of the Guard, for the Security of the Peace and of the People, to deſtroy ſo many Innocents.

And though the Pannel would excuſe himſelf, under Pretence that Stones were thrown at the Guard; he admitted the Criminal was cut down before this trifling Provocation happened, and his Duty, as far as concerned the Execution of the Sentence, was over: Nor had he ſo much as alledged any Danger; he was not invaded with Fire-Arms or other mortal Weapons that could endanger the deſtroying Seventy diſciplined Men with loaded Pieces and Bayonets upon them: His Allegations therefore, if true, did not point out the leaſt Neceſſity, and conſequently he could not juſtify himſelf by his Orders.

There happened nothing more than uſual on theſe Occaſions; only ſome Dirt and Stones thrown at the Executioner as was cuſtomary, which might have provoked a cholerick Man to have drubbed ſome of the Actors, but could not juſtify ſlaughtering the Offenders; much leſs could the Impertinence of a few Boys, or other idle People, excuſe the firing ſharp Shot upon an innocent Multitude, whereby many of his Majeſty's Subjects were deſtroyed.

The Pannel had cited a late Reſolution of the Court for ſuſpending a Sentence of the Court of Admiralty, where Soldiers happened to kill in the Execution of their Duty; and he did acknowledge, where a Man has by Law Weapons put into his Hand to be employed, not only in Defence of his Life, when attacked, but in Support of the Execution of the Laws, and in Defence of the Property of the Crown or Liberty of any Subject, he, doubtleſs, may uſe thoſe Weapons, not only when his own Life is put ſo far in Danger that he cannot probably eſcape without making uſe of them, but alſo when there is imminent Danger that he may by Violence be diſabled to execute his Truſt without reſorting to the Uſe of thoſe Weapons: But when the Life of the Officer is expoſed to no Danger; when his Duty does not neceſſarily call upon him for the Execution of his Truſt, or for the reſervation of the Property of the Crown, or the Preſervation of the Property or Liberty of the Subject; to make uſe of mortal Weapons, which may deſtroy his Majeſty's Sub-1736. 10 Geo II. jects, especially Numbers of them who may be Innocent; it is impossible from the Resolution of the Court of Justiciary, hinted at, to expect any Countenance to, or Shelter for the inhuman Act.

And though the Pannel asserted there could be nothing of precedent Malice in the Action, he having no Knowledge of the People that happened to be killed or wounded; yet his Counsel very well knew that firing, and ordering to fire, implyed and was a Proof of Malice, in the Construction both of Law and Reason. Whoever wilfully murdered and destroyed his Majesty's Subjects must be deemed a Murderer, if his malicious Purpose preceeded the Drawing of the Tricker, or giving the Orders, one Moment, as much as if it had been premeditated a whole Year.

As to the Narrative the Pannel had given of his Behaviour, every Circumstance of it might be true; and yet it might also be true, That he with his own Hand fired and killed one or more of the Innocent People, and ordered the Men under his Command to fire.

He might at one Time call out to the Multitude to stand off, and threaten to fire, and might at one Time strike down the Pieces, and prohibit his Men to fire; and yet he might at another Point of Time, give the Word of Command to fire, and fire the Piece in his Hand: Before he lost his Temper, he might threaten only, but might afterwards execute what he had threatned.

None of his Witnesses could pretend they had kept their Eyes so steadily on the Pannel, during the whole Tumult, that they observed every Motion he made: The firing of a Shot, The flinging of a Stone, or the extraordinary Behaviour of any of the Multitude, or the Guard, might imperceptibly draw the Eyes and Attention of any Spectator from the Pannel to that new Object, and prevent his seeing or hearing what he said or did in the mean Time; and therefore no Witness, or Number of Witnesses, that should take upon them to say absolutely the Pannel did not, at any Period of Time during the Tumult, fire, or give Orders to fire, would be credible: At least they could not be credited against such Witnesses as positively attested they saw and heard him give Orders to fire.

And whereas the Prisoner pretended he bid his Men Not fire, but was misunderstood by some, who apprehended he bid them fire; the ordering his Men To level their Pieces and be damned, sufficiently explained how he would be understood as to firing.

As to that Objection, that his own Piece appeared, Not to have been fired that Day, there was little in it; for another Piece might have been produced to the Magistrates instead of his own, or he might have taken one of his Men's Pieces and fired it: Concluding however, that it was not the Interest of the Crown, or of the Publick, that an Innocent Man should suffer; but it was greatly the Interest of Both, that a fair and strict Enquiry be made where the Guilt lies, when a Massacre so cruel, and so dangerous happens; to the End, that if the Officer, who has Power put into his Hands for the Preservation of the Peace, and for the Protection of the People, should, from any unjust Motive whatever, make use of that Power in Breach of the Laws to the Destruction of the People, he may be made an Examplei to restrain others, in like Circumstances, from such dangerous Abuses for the Future. 1736. 10 Geo II.

Signed Dun. Forbes.

The Court of Justiciary having considered the aforesaid Debate, found, That the Pannel having at any of the Times and Places libelled, fired among the People, or given Orders to fire; and he or any of the Soldiers having accordingly fired, and any of the Persons mentioned in the Indictment were thereby killed or wounded; or the Pannel's being Art and Part in any of the aforesaid Crimes; All separatim relevant to infer the Pains of Law: But allowed him to produce Evidence of his Behaviour at the said Execution. The Libel found Relevant.

The Assize or Jury being afterwards sworn, the Pannel judicially confessed that the several Persons specified in the Indictment were killed and wounded by the firing of the City Guard under his Command. He confesses the Persons specified were killed, &c.

Then the Witnesses were produced by his Majesty's Advocate to prove the Facts laid in the Libel: And first, James Drummond, Merchant of Edinburgh, deposed, That he was present at the Execution of Andrew Wilson, and after he had hung upon the Gallows about a quarter of an Hour, he saw the Executioner go up the Ladder, as the Deponent apprehended to cut him down; upon which he saw some small Stones thrown by the Mob at the Executioner, some whereof he believes might fall upon the Guard: Upon which he saw the Pannel advance Westward, resting his Firelock upon his Thigh, as if he was bending it, and afterwards saw him raising it to his Breast, moving it from one Point to another, and soon after heard a Shot from the Place where the Pannel was standing: And he did apprehend that Captain Porteous fired at that Time, because he saw him in a firing Posture, and immediately heard a Shot, and saw a Man in a few Minutes afterwards, when the Mob dispersed, lying in the Street upon a Line from the Place he saw the Captain's Piece directed: And much about the Time the Captain fired, he observed one of the Soldiers go out of his Rank Westward, beyond the Place where the Captain stood, and levelled his Piece; but could not see whether he fired it, or not. Evidence of the Prosecutors.

Sir William Forbes, Advocate, deposed, That after Wilson had hung about 25 Minutes on the Gallows, the Deponent from a House opposite to the Gallows, saw the Executioner go up a Ladder (as he thought) to cut down the Deceased, and Stones were thereupon thrown at the Executioner; whereupon he retired to the Guard, and the Mob continued throwing of Stones, some of which he believed might touch the Guards; and soon after he saw the Pannel advance Westward and fire his Gun among the People, and observed the Fire and Smoak issue out of his Piece to the best of his Observation; and this was the first Shot the Deponent heard: But he imagined then, that the Pannel fired the Shot high, and that he after-afterwards heard about Twenty dropping Shots.

Mr. William Fraſer, ſon of the Lord Saltoun, who ſtood at the ſame Window, made the like Depoſition as the laſt Witneſs; only he did not ſay, that the Pannel fired the Shot high.

William Urquhart, gave the like Teſtimony as Sir William Forbes; only he did not depoſe, he ſaw the Smoak or Fire iſſue out of the Pannel's Piece.

James De War teſtified, That he ſaw the Hangman go up ſome Steps of the Ladder, after Wilſon had hung ſometime, and ſaw the Mob throw Stones, one of which hurt the Executioner in the Face; whereupon he came down the Ladder, and the Pannel then preſented his Piece, and fired, which was the firſt Shot he heard or ſaw: That he ſaw the Fire of the Powder in the Pan, and heard the Report of the Shot, and that when the Pannel fired, Wilſon was cut down by ſome that ſtood at the Foot of the Gallows, and not by the Hangman: And being asked what kind of Cloaths Porteous had on, he ſaid, he could not be poſitive, but believed red Cloaths, and was poſitive he knew the Face of Captain Porteous when he ſaw him fire.

George Drummond, Eſq; one of the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, depoſed, That fifteen or ſixteen Minutes after Wilſon was turned off, the Executioner was going up the Ladder, but ſeveral Stones being thrown at him, he was forced to return, and his Noſe was bloody: That mixing with the Soldiers, the throwing of Stones continued, and ſome fell among them; and he obſerved one of the Soldiers advance before Captain Porteous with a Gun, which he preſented, and immediately after the Deponent heard a Shot, which he imagined proceeded from the Soldier's Piece; but did not ſee either Smoak or Fire, and was poſitive this was the firſt Shot that was fired, but he did not think the Stones that were thrown, gave any juſt Cauſe for firing: That at the ſame Time, he ſaw Porteous levelling his Piece, and after the firſt Shot, within a Minute, he heard eighteen or twenty: That ſome Minutes after, there was a ſecond Firing: That the dropping Shots in the firſt Firing, were by the Soldiers, who ſtood immediately behind the Pannel, and the Pannel's Face, and all the Soldiers behind him were looking Weſtward.

William Johnſon, Druggiſt, of Edinburgh, depoſed, That he obſerved the Pannel take a Gun out of a Soldier's Hand, and advance ſome Steps Weſtward, level his Gun, and fire it amongſt the Multitude, and did obſerve the Smoak come out of the Gun: That this was the firſt Shot he heard, and was made immediately after the Criminal was cut down, by one ſtanding at the Foot of the Gibbet: That when the Pannel took the Gun out of the Soldier's Hand, he was in a Paſſion, and it was ſome ſhort Time before he was Maſter of the Gun: That to the beſt of his Remembrance the Pannel was cloathed in Red; but he being well acquainted with the Pannel's Face, was poſitive he was the Perſon that took the Gun and fired as aforeſaid; and believes there were about thirty Yards between the Windows, where he (the Witneſs) ſtood, and the Pannel to the firſt firing.

1736. 10 Geo. II.

Mark Sprot, Skinner, one of the Conſtables of Edinburgh, depoſed, That he ſaw Wilſon cut down, but did not obſerve any greater Diſturbance than uſual at Executions: But a little after the Criminal was cut down, he obſerved the Pannel advance towards the Soldiers, and fire his Piece towards the Weſt, and the Smoak Iſſue out at the Mouth of his Gun; and this was the firſt Shot that was fired. That immediately after a Tall Man in his own Hair, about the Third behind the Pannel, fired his Piece towards the Weſt, but up in the Air, over the Heads of the Multitude, and ſeveral dropping Shots followed ſoon after; and when the People fell back and opened, the Deponent obſerved a young Man lying upon the Ground as dead, directly oppoſite to the Place where the Pannel fired.

George-Campbell Wright, of Edinburgh, depoſed, That he ſtood at a Window, directly oppoſite to the Gibbet: That a very little after Wilſon was cut down, he obſerved the Pannel with four or five of his Men about him; and as he pointed his Piece to and fro towards the Multitude, he obſerved him receive a Stroke by a Stone, thrown from behind the Scaffold, off of which it rebounded and ſtruck him: Whereupon he immediately fired his Piece, but whether this was the firſt Shot or not, he could not tell, there being three or four fired about the ſame Time: But that the Pannel fired he was ſure, for he ſaw the Fire and Smoak iſſue from his Piece; and upon theſe Shots he ſaw a Man fall down on his Back in the Street: That after this, he ſaw the Pannel raiſe his Musket, and put his Hand to his Cartrage-Box, as if he intended to load again; but what followed he did not know, becauſe he immediately loſt Sight of him.

James Bald, Merchant of Edinburgh, depoſed, That he ſtood at the ſame Window the laſt Witneſs did; that a little after Wilſon was cut down, he ſaw the Pannel advance and fire his Piece to the Weſtward; but ſaw none of the Soldiers near him, nor obſerved any other Fire but his; And before there was any more firing, when the Multitude fell back, he ſaw a Man lying dead towards the Place the Pannel pointed his Piece; and he was ſure the Captain fired, becauſe he ſaw the Fire and Smoak iſſue out of his Piece.

Andrew Daw, depoſed, That immediately after Wilſon was cut down, the Pannel fired his Piece, and thereupon Charles Husband, a Baxter in the Abby, dropt juſt by the Deponent, and the Deponent's Coat was torn in the Shoulder by the ſame Shot; he was ſure it was the Pannel that fired, becauſe he ſaw no other Piece preſented at the ſame Time: And the Deponent was not the Length of an ordinary Room diſtant from the Pannel when he fired; and this was the firſt Shot he heard fired that Day.

Walter Shergold, of Edinburgh, depoſed, That he ſaw Captain Porteous fire his Gun, holding the ſame ſtrait-out at the Multitude, and he was not then three Yards from him: That, after he had fired himſelf, he heard the Captain ſay Fire! and then ſome other Shots were were made: That the Shot the Captain made, was the first he heard fired, and he was so near as to see the Fire fly out of the Gun.

John Ritchie and Thomas Crookshanks also testified, That they saw Captain Porteous fire among the Multitude.

James Neilson deposed, That he saw the Smoak issue from the Captain's Piece, and that five or six Soldiers fired after the Captain; and when the Multitude was beaten off, the Deponent saw a Boy with black Hair lying within ten Yards of the Turnpike, where the Deponent stood, and he was bloody at the Ear, and he saw four other Persons lying at different Places in the Street.

William Gordon testified, He saw the Fire and Smoak come out of the Muzzle of the Captain's Piece, which was the first Shot that was made, and he heard several other Shot afterwards.

John Nasmith deposed, That he heard the Captain say several Times to his Soldiers, Fire, and be damned! and at the same Time saw him advancing with his Piece presented in his Hand, and soon after the Captain had said the Words aforesaid, he heard several Shot go off.

David Brown testified, That he heard the Captain give his Soldiers Orders to fire, and thereupon several Shot were made.

Matthew Kidd deposed, That he saw the Captain fire, and afterwards give the Soldiers Orders to fire; and that he called to them to level their Pieces, and he saw the Soldiers fire, and the Shot fired by the Captain was either the first or the second.

James Maxwell testified, That the Mob threw Stones among the Guard, and immediately after the Captain bid the Soldiers Fire, and be damned! and that he saw the Captain fire the first Shot himself.

William Douglas testified, That there were several Stones thrown among the Guard, and he heard the Captain say to the Soldiers, Be damned to you, Bougars, Fire!

Archibald Yeates deposed, That a little after Wilson was cut down, he saw the Captain fire his Piece among the Multitude, and immediately heard him say to his Men, Level your Pieces and fire, and be damned! whereupon a great many Shot were fired by them, and he saw the Captain take a Gun from one of his Men which he fired, and he (the Witness) was within six Yards of the Captain, when he fired and spoke the abovesaid Words: And that between the Time the Captain fired his own Piece, and his taking the Gun from the Soldier might be about eight Minutes: That at the Time he fired the second Gun, there were several other Guns fired; and that the second Shot fired by the Captain was near the Place where he fired the first.

William Murray testified, He observed two Soldiers fire their Guns up into the Air, but that the Captain afterwards fired his Gun among the Multitude, whereupon he saw a Boy drop; and he heard the Captain call out to the Soldiers, Damn them for Bougars, why did they not fire even forward, and clean the Street? and that after the first firing, he saw the Captain take a Gun out of a Soldier's Hand and fire again, directing it towards a Man he pursued thirty or forty Yards, and upon fireing, he saw the Person so pursued fall down; and being asked, how long he had been dull of Hearing? he answered seven Years.

1736. 10 Geo. II.

James Nicoll deposed, He saw the Captain fire among the Multitude.

William Jameson testified, He saw the Captain fire, and heard him order his Men to fire.

John Moffat deposed, He saw the Captain fire his own Piece, and the Soldiers who stood behind him fired their Pieces up into the Air; and that he also saw the Captain take one of the Soldiers Pieces and fire.

John Stewart testified, That the Captain took a Gun out of a Soldier's Hand, with which he pushed back the Multitude, and receiving a Blow as he was in the Rear of his Men, he suddenly turned about, and waived his Piece to and again without firing; but a very little after that he turned about all at once, and stepping some Steps forward, he fired off his Piece Westward towards the Croud.

John Gibb deposed, That he thought the Captain fired, for he saw the Powder flash in the Pan, and he heard at the same Time the Report of several Guns, and one Neil dropped down at the Meuse-well.

The Witnesses produced for Captain Porteous. Witnesses for the Captain.

George Smeiton, Writer, deposed, That when the Executioner was doing his Duty, he saw Captain Porteous come off the Scaffold, because the Mob crowded upon the Guard; and one of them endeavoured to grasp the Captain, but a Gentleman in Green Cloaths kept him off, and then the Captain returned to the Scaffold: About the Time the Criminal was cut down the Captain went off the Scaffold again, and Stones were thrown by the Mob at the Hangman and the Guard; after which, he observed a Soldier make a Shot, and after this followed three or four Shot more: That the Captain presented his Piece at the same Time, and stood pretty near the Soldier that fired first.

Thomas Horton, Surgeon of the Welch Fusileers testified, That he saw several Stones thrown at the Guard, big enough to kill a Man, and this continued for some Time: That while the Criminal was hanging, he saw a Man press upon the Captain, whereupon he held up his Hand in a threatning Manner: That the Captain had no Gun in his Hand upon the Scaffold, but when he came off he took a Gun from a Soldier, and endeavoured to get his Men together, which he could not well do, they being so mixed with the Mob, who continuing to throw Stones, the Captain waived his Piece from Side to Side to frighten them: At the same Time a Soldier came up on the Right Hand of the Captain and fired, which was the first Shot the Deponent observed: That he did not see the Captain fire, though he had his Eyes upon him all the Time, and he was very well assured he did not fire at that Time; and that afterwards he endeavoured to carry off his Men.

David Ranine deposed, That after the first Fireings were over, he saw the Captain draw off his Men, and heard some Soldiers fire in the Rear.

John

1736. 10 Geo. II.

John Clerk, Serjeant of the Welch Fuſileers depoſed, That he was ſent by the Captain who commanded the Detachment of the King's Forces in the Lawn-Market, to the Place of Execution, to get Orders from the Magiſtrates or Captain Porteous; and being upon the Scaffold, he ſaw a Stone thrown at the Executioner which cut his Noſe, and another of the Bigneſs of his two Fiſts at the ſame Time hit the Deponent's Legs: Whereupon he came down from the Scaffold, and ſaw Captain Porteous moving his Fuzee to keep off the Crowd, who preſſed upon the Guard, and drove them four or five Yards from the Place where they were poſted: That Captain Porteous threatned to fire upon the Mob, but none fired at that Time: He ſaw a Soldier afterwards advance on the right Hand of Captain Porteous and fire among the Crowd, which was the firſt Shot he heard; and he ſaw two Soldiers afterwards fire into the Air, and four or five Shots more were made, but he did not ſee Captain Porteous fire, or give Orders to fire, though he had his Eyes fixed upon thoſe that fired; and that on the firſt Shot that was fired, he ſaw a Man drop.

Colin Campbell depoſed, That he ſaw Stones thrown at the Hangman and the Guard, and the Captain with his Fuſee keeping off the Mob; and one of the Soldiers being ſtruck with a Stone fired, and another fired immediately after him.

William Meaine, Serjeant of the City-Guard, depoſed, That there were Showers of Stones thrown at the Guard after the Execution, one he ſaw of 3 lb. weight; the Drummer was cut in the Head with a Stone, and one of the Soldiers had his Shoulder-Blade broke; and before this, the Deponent was drawing off the Men by the Captain's Orders: That he held the Captain's Fuſee, and returned it to him when the Sign was given to cut down Wilſon; and it was the ſame Fuſee the Pannel uſed to carry upon Duty.

Alexander Campbell depoſed, He ſaw Stones thrown at the Guard, and two Soldiers ſtep aſide from the reſt and fire, which were the two firſt Shots he heard.

Matthew Howet, a Soldier of the City-Guard depoſed, That a great many Stones were thrown at the Guard; that he ſaw the Captain wave his Piece, but he did not preſent it; but he ſaw two or three Soldiers fire their Pieces into the Air: Then he heard ſome Soldiers ſay, Fire, or we ſhall be knocked down! and more Stones being thrown, ſeveral of them did fire, though he heard the Captain ſay before, Do not fire! That he was one of the Soldiers that followed the Captain, and did not ſee him fire as he marched to the Bow.

David Martine depoſed, He was one of the City-Guard, and had his Shoulder-Blade disjointed by a Blow of a Stone, before there was any firing, and heard Captain Porteous call to the Men Not to fire.

William Eyles, Soldier of the City-Guard, teſtified, That he attended the Execution of Wilſon, and did not hear Captain Porteous give any Orders to fire; but after the firing ſeveral Shots, the Captain called to the Soldiers to fall into their Ranks and follow him, which the Deponent and the reſt did, as they were able.

1736. 10 Geo. II.

James Armour, Writer to the Signet, depoſed, That after the Criminal was cut down, the People threw Stones, upon which he heard two or three Shots; and afterwards when the Captain and his Party were retiring, which they did in great Confuſion, the Crowd purſued them, and renewed their throwing of Stones; upon which ſome of the Soldiers marched back eight or ten Paces, and he heard a good number of Shot, which to his Grief he ſaw did great Execution.

John Robinſon Stabler, depoſed, That he heard the Captain ſay, Fire, or I will fire, he did not know which; and immediately a Man ſtepped 3 or 4 Paces before the Captain, and fired his Piece, and he verily believed that the People who fell near his Cloſe, got their Wounds by that Shot.

George Vint depoſed, He ſaw a Soldier, a black Man, ſtep before the Captain and fire his Piece, whereupon the Captain puſhed him into his Rank, and he did not ſee the Captain fire all the Time.

Alexander Thomſon a Town Officer, depoſed, That the Captain ſent him from the Scaffold to the Magiſtrates to know how long the Criminal ſhould yet hang, and the Magiſtrates anſwered, he ſhould ſtill hang a quarter of an Hour; but before half that Time expired, he was cut down.

Peter Colſtoun depoſed, He ſaw the Captain march with his Men up the Weſt-Bow, and ſaw ſeveral in the Rear fire.

John Kennedy Surgeon depoſed, That after the Execution of Andrew Wilſon, he attended the following Perſons of the Town-Guard, viz. Alexander Muſhot, the Spine of whoſe Shoulder-Bone was cruſhed, and Alexander Braid, who had a Contuſion in his right Foot, and both of them informed him they received their Hurts at the Execution of Andrew Wilſon, and the laſt of them was lame to that Day.

The Verdict.

The Aſſize (or Jury) then went out, and having conſidered the Evidence, they all in one Voice found it proven, that the ſaid John Porteous, Pannel, fired a Gun among the People aſſembled at the Place of Execution and Time libelled; as alſo that he gave Orders to the Soldiers under his Command to fire, and upon his and their ſo firing, the Perſons mentioned in the Indictment were killed and wounded: And found it proven, that the Pannel and his Guard were attacked and beat, by ſeveral Stones of a conſiderable Bigneſs thrown at them by the Multitude, whereby ſeveral of the Soldiers were bruiſed and wounded.

Sentence of Death.

Whereupon the Court of Juſticiary decerned and adjudged the ſaid John Porteous to be taken from the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, upon Wedneſday the 8th Day of September next, to come to the Graſs-Mercate of Edinburgh, the common Place of Execution of the ſaid Burgh, betwixt the Hours of 2 and 4 of the Clock in the Afternoon of the ſaid Day, and there to be hanged by the Neck upon a Gibbet by the Hands of the Executioner untill he be dead, and ordained all his moveable

A Letter to reprieve the Captain.

At a Court held on the 3d of December, the Lord Juſtice Clerk produceda Letter from his Grace the Duke of Newcaſtle, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretarys of State, of the following Tenor.

Whitehall, Auguſt 26, 1736.

My Lords,

Application having been made to Her Majeſty in the Behalf of John Porteous, late Captain-Lieutenant of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, a Priſoner under Sentence of Death, in the Goal of that City: I am commanded to ſignify to your Lordſhips, Her Majeſty's Pleaſure, That the Execution of the Sentence pronounced againſt the ſaid John Porteous, be Reſpited for ſix Weeks, from the Time appointed for his Execution. I am, my Lords, your Lordſhips moſt obedient humble Servant.

Sic Sub. Holles Newcastle.

Directed on the Back thus: To the Right Honourable the Lord Juſtice General, Juſtice Clerk, and other Lords of the Juſticiary at Edinburgh.

He is reprieved.

After which the Lords gave their Warrant for ſtopping the ſaid Execution, prohibiting all Magiſtrates and Officers to put the ſaid Sentence of Death in Execution untill the 20th of October next, Upon which Day they were ordered to put the ſaid Sentence in Execution.

Taken out of Priſon, and executed by the Mob.

But on the 7th of September, about 10 at Night, a Body of Men entred the City of Edinburgh, ſeized all the Fire-Arms, Battle-Axes, and Fire-Arms belonging to the Town-Guard, and being joined by the Mob within, ſecured all the City-Gates, and with Drums beat the Alarm: Then attempted to break open the Priſon Doors, but not being able, they ſet fire to them, and entring the Priſon, made the Under-keeper open the double Locks of the Apartment where Captain Porteous was kept, who begged they would ſpare him till next Day, (the Day firſt appointed for his Execution: But they hurried him away out of the Priſon about Eleven that Night, marching with lighted Torches before them, and coming to the uſual Place of Execution, they threw a Rope over a Sign-Poſt, and having faſtned it about his Neck, drew him up in his Night-Gown and Cap as they found him; but he getting his Hands between his Neck and the Rope, they let him down again, and the Captain having two Shirts on, they wrapped one of them about his Face, and tied up his Arms in his Night-Gown, and without giving him Time to ſay his Prayers, pulled him up again, where he hung till Day-light the next Morning. 1736. 10 Geo. II.

The Arms and Drums being left on the Place of Execution, were found there alſo next Morning; but during the Tumult, Parties of Armed Men with Drums, patroled in the different Streets, to prevent any Surprize by the King's Forces, quartered in the Suburbs; and after the Execution was over, they went to the Lord Provoſt's Houſe (who does not appear to have made any Attempt towards ſuppreſſing the Tumult) and told him they were ſatisfied: After which all was quiet.

The Captain's Petition.

What is moſt remarkable in the Petition of Captain Porteous, to the Queen, for Mercy, is, That he inſiſts it was not proved that he fired himſelf or commanded his Men to fire; and if he did, That he was aſſaulted firſt by the Mob, and only repelled Force by Force.

A Bill brought into the Houſe of Lords, to puniſh the Provoſt, &c.

The whole Matter being laid before the Houſe of Lords, the laſt Seſſion, a Bill was brought into that Houſe, and paſſed, to diſable Alexander Wilſon, late Provoſt of Edinburgh, from taking, holding and enjoying any Office, or Place of Magiſtracy in the City of Edinburgh, or elſewhere, and for impriſoning the ſaid Alexander Wilſon, and for aboliſhing the Guard kept up in the ſaid City, commonly called the Town-Guard, and for taking away the Gates of the Neither Bow-Port of the ſaid City, and keeping open the ſame.

Altered by the Commons.

This Bill being ſent down to the Houſe of Commons, received great Alterations there; for the Clauſes for Impriſoning the Provoſt, aboliſhing the City-Guard, and taking away the Gates of the Neither Bow, were dropped, upon a Diviſion, when 131 Voted for theſe Alterations, and 130 againſt them; and when the Act paſſed the Commons, It went no further than the diſabling the Provoſt, Alexander Wilſon, from holding any Office, and laying a Fine of 2000 l. upon the City of Edinburgh.

The Reaſon of ſhewing this Reſentment againſt the Provoſt and the City of Edinburgh, was their not uſing their beſt Endeavours to ſuppreſs the Mob, either at the Execution of Andrew Wilſon, or when Captain Porteous was taken out of Priſon and murdered.

Another Act relating to Porteous.

Another Act alſo paſſed this Seſſion for bringing to Juſtice the Perſons concerned in the barbarous Murder of Captain John Porteous, and puniſhing ſuch as ſhould knowingly conceal any of the ſaid Offenders.
